Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Pardon me. I am confining myself to the point of order, and in order to do that I must explain the circumstances surrounding the question, and state the custom which has prevailed heretofore in the Department. And, Mr. Chairman, there is not a gentleman here who is more familiar with the fact than the gentleman from Alabama that this House runs a good deal more by custom than law.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman permit me to state an instance which will illustrate the point he makes?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. A constituent of mine, a post-office clerk, who might have had a certain vacation at a certain period of the year, fell sick about September, and because he was poor chose to take his vacation then. He died at the end of two or three weeks, and his widow never got his pay. Yet, as a matter of fact, if he had had his vacation at the end of the year, or at the period of the year fixed for that purpose, she would not have lost the money to which she was entitled.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, and here is a case that I desire to call the attention of the committee to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes the gentleman from Missouri will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. This is exactly in the line of the point of order. I am confining myself to it, and I must explain, of course, what was the condition prior to the granting of the fifteen days' leave of absence by the House. You can not get the question in any other way. Here is the case of two carriers at St. Louis; one of them, John O'Brien, was knocked down by a team, with his letter-satchel on his back; his arm broken; laid up for three months, and during that time deprived of his pay; the other, W. C. Flynn, fell on icy pavement, spraining his ankle, and laid up for two months. Prior to the adoption of the fifteen days' leave of absence they would have received their full pay for that lost time.

I do not think that any chief in any Department has the right to make a farce and absurdity of the intent of the act of Congress. Now, I believe this: It is our duty, plain and unmistakable, in cases of this kind to carry out our own intentions in regard to this law; and in all due deference to the Chair, if he should sustain the point of order, I will take an appeal and find out how many members among those who voted for the fifteen days' leave to carriers sustain the rule of the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not see that this amendment is in order, because it is evidently new legislation, whether it confers power, authority, or jurisdiction in the direction the gentleman says. The Chair, then, sustains the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on the appeal?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have stated freely my views upon the question.

The question was put, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Alone, but right.

The CHAIRMAN. The decision of the Chair is sustained, and the amendment is ruled out of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For stationery in post-offices, $57,500.

Mr. SCOTT. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I fully sympathize with the views expressed by the gentleman from Missouri in the remarks which he has just made in connection with the post-office letter-carriers. I desire now very briefly to submit the claims of another class of post-office employés to the merciful consideration of the incoming administration.

Sir, I have had made an official list of the number of Presidential post-offices in the State of Pennsylvania, and I desire to place the same on the records of Congress, so that they may not be overlooked or forgotten by the incoming administration or the gentlemen on the other side of the House who believe in civil-service reform and that a public office is a public trust. I find that there are in the State of Pennsylvania 191 Presidential post-offices, not one of which on the 4th of March, 1885, was held by a Democrat; that during the four years of the present administration the appointments made on commissions expired have been 103; on resignations, 22; suspensions, 17; removals, 6; deaths, 3; offices becoming Presidential, 37, and that offices in which no change has been made were 3.

I point to this record with pride, and in a Republican State of 80,000 majority. Sir, it speaks louder than anything I can possibly say that the pledges of our party in connection with civil-service reform and also to carry on this Government on business methods have been faithfully kept.

In my own district there are seventeen Presidential post-offices, and during the entire term of this administration, with the exception of two cases where charges were preferred of irregularities in office, or unless by death, resignation, or expiration of incumbent's term of office, not one change has been made.

Mr. PETERS. That was because it was a Republican district and you wanted to get the votes.

Mr. SCOTT. That may or may not have been.

This question of removals from office in my State, and I presume in others, has been carried to such an extent that where a postmaster had been appointed about one year prior to his confirmation on the 3d day of March, 1885, when we appealed to the Post-Office Department and to the President of the United States, claiming that the incumbent had not only held that office for ten years prior, but that he would hold it for five years in place of four if a change were not made, the conclusion of the Executive and the Department was that the incumbent was entitled to the term of four years from the date he was confirmed.

Sir, when you take the number of confirmations and the number of appointments which were made in the closing of the executive session of March 3, 1885, what do you find? In my own district not less than four of the Presidential postmasters were confirmed between the 25th of February and the 3d of March, 1885; and there are Republican postmasters in my district holding office to-day, appointed by President Arthur, whose terms of office have expired, and which a Democratic President knows it is useless to fill, for a Republican caucus of the Senate has given notice no more appointments are to be confirmed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to give these facts to the other side of the House, because I know how anxious many of them are to carry out civil-service reform. I ask the privilege to have the memorandum in my hand printed with my remarks, so that gentlemen on the other side of the House can refer to it in the future. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to print the document he mentions in the RECORD? The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

List of changes in Presidential post-offices in the State of Pennsylvania between March 4, 1885, and February 20, 1889, with names of appointees and dates of appointment, and also showing cause of change.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word, merely to say that these memorial services having been concluded, and as in all ages it has not been thought respectful to speak of the faults of the dead, I hope the gentleman will go on with his bill. [Laughter.] I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to offer a substantial amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, page 9, after the word "million," insert "one hundred thousand;" so that it will read "eight million one hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. ADAMS. In the Postmaster-General's Report, on page 44, Roman numerals, will be found the estimate submitted by Colonel Bates, superintendent of the free-delivery system, for the next fiscal year. It will be found that a large part of this $8,000,000 which is now in the bill is for increasing the pay of carriers, due to their promotion, and for substitutes under the recent statute, and there is no allowance for three hundred and fifty carriers in addition to those which we now have. I have consulted the postmaster at my own city in reference to the additional carriers that will be needed there during the next fiscal year. It will be absolutely necessary to have one hundred carriers in addition to those now employed before that city can be placed upon an equal basis with the other large cities of the country.

In the statement submitted to me I find that the carriers of Chicago carried, on an average, during the last fiscal year 704,000 pieces; that is, each carrier handled 704,000 pieces during the year. In Boston the average number was 457,000 pieces per carrier; in New York it was 663,000 pieces, and in Philadelphia 634,000. So that every carrier in Chicago carried a larger numbers of pieces than were carried in any other of the large cities. The reason of that is that in the other cities they have so districted the business portions that the business men get the benefit of a larger number of deliveries each day than we get in Chicago. The difference in that respect is enormous. In the business part of Chicago we get only five deliveries per day. In the corresponding business part of New York I understand that they get about nineteen; in Philadelphia they get, I believe, about seventeen, and in Boston in the neighborhood of twelve; while, as I have said, in Chicago we get only five.

Thirty-six carriers will be needed to extend the free-delivery system into territory which has been annexed to Chicago. The need is an absolute and urgent one, and a larger number of carriers will be necessary in order to give the business men of that city the same number of deliveries per day that business men have in the other large cities. There is a district in Chicago with a good many manufacturers in it where they do not have as many as five deliveries, and in the place where I live we get only two each day. Now, Colonel Bates finds that the total sum which will be necessary to carry on the free-delivery system service on the basis of adding three hundred and fifty carriers, is $8,095,050, but he takes $8,000,000 for no other reason, that I can see, than that it is a round sum.

I do not believe that the business communities of the Northwest ought to suffer because this committee chooses to propose a round sum instead of the sum of $8,100,000, which the estimates of the Department show to be necessary. I will also state that in the city of Philadelphia, as I understand it, they have adopted a van system, which costs some money, but which adds greatly not only to the convenience of the business men of the city, but, as I understand, adds also to the revenue of the Department. I insist—and it is an argument of economy—that if we can have an additional number of carriers, and consequently an additional number of deliveries, it will not cost the Government anything, because the net income of the free-delivery department of the post-office will then reach a much larger sum than it reached last year. The money it earned for the benefit of the whole country last year was an enormous sum, but it was not as much as it might have been made to earn.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am only sorry that my colleague [Mr. ADAMS] did not propose to increase that item $1,000,000 instead of $100,000. He has presented a statement of facts here prepared by the post-office at Chicago which shows the urgent need for additional letter-carrier service in that city and surrounding towns. The fact is that you can send a letter by mail from Chicago to a place 200 miles away and it will reach its destination before a letter posted at the same time could be carried from one portion of the city to another. We are taking in the country towns adjacent to Chicago, and the people there are anxious to have the letter-carrier system extended. The postal authorities there, who have looked into this matter very carefully, present facts for our consideration showing the need of at least one hundred additional letter-carriers for the city of Chicago. Here is a system that is self-sustaining, and certainly a great business community like Chicago should not be kept in the back-ground for the want of it, especially when the Government is fully compensated for the service by the receipts from that service. I hope, therefore, that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will not offer any opposition to this small sum of $100,000 being added to this item. If the members of the committee and of the House will read carefully the statement presented by my collegue [Mr. ADAMS], and printed in the RECORD, they will see that this money, instead of being left to be expended in the discretion of the Post-Office Department, is for general use all over the United States. It will of course afford but little relief to the city of Chicago, but small as it is, it will be very acceptable to our people.

If the people here in Washington who for years have been in the habit of presenting to the consideration of this committee their estimates would go beyond the Alleghanies they would ascertain that there is a growing West in that section of the country. I would be glad if the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads had within the last two years had time to go out there and look at the village of Chicago! He would not then expect to apply to a city of 900,000 people the same system in postal matters which was in operation when the population was 100,000 or 200,000. I say that those who prepare these estimates are not fit persons to judge of the needs of a city like Chicago. My colleague and myself know the demands of our people; we know the extent of the business of our fellow-citizens. They are paying their taxes cheerfully to carry on the Government. They ask at the hands of Representatives here that justice be done them and that their crying needs in respect to postal service be met. I hope therefore that this small increase proposed in the amendment of my colleague will be allowed, so that at least some little relief may be afforded to the people of Chicago in respect to their local mail service.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not wish to consume time. I will only say——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move pro forma to strike out the last word. I only wish to say that the committee has given in this item of the bill every dollar that the Department recommended.

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to oppose the formal amendment. I have already referred to the statement of the superintendent of the free-delivery system that if three hundred and fifty carriers are to be added there will be required $8,095,050. Eight million dollars seems to have been adopted because it was a round and handsome sum, but the money estimated as necessary for the actual needs of the service is $8,095,050. This amount my amendment only slightly exceeds. I will be willing to accept the amount of the estimate—$8,095,050.

But before we pass from this matter I want the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], a member of the committee, to state whether it is not a fact that in the business part of the city of Philadelphia the daily deliveries which the business men receive exceed five? Are they not a great deal more?

Mr. BINGHAM. In answer to the gentleman I will say that in the business centers of Philadelphia the daily deliveries amount to seven or eight in number.

Mr. ADAMS. That part of Chicago outside of the small center where there are five daily deliveries embraces important manufacturing establishments having business relations with various parts of the country, and these establishments ought to have their business letters delivered more promptly than they are.

Now, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is here, I will ask him how many daily deliveries the business men in the central part of New York City receive?

Mr. COX. Down in Wall street and Broad street, where the business is extraordinary, they have, I think, sixteen or seventeen daily deliveries; but that is a very limited portion of the city. The ordinary deliveries, I think, are about five daily.

Mr. ADAMS. So there is only a limited portion of Chicago that gets as many as five deliveries daily. Besides, the gentleman from New York knows (for he has given attention to this subject for many years) that when you increase the number of deliveries you increase the net income of the Department.

Mr. COX. That is the result of it.

Mr. ADAMS. Exactly. When the deliveries are frequent, business men use the free-delivery system instead of the district telegraph or the messenger service. To add $100,000 to this part of the bill would not add $100,000 to the expenses of the Department; it would simply enable the people of Chicago to earn a larger net income out of the free-delivery service, for the benefit of the greater part of the country, in which that service is not self-sustaining. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ADAMS, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 27, noes 55.

Mr. LAWLER. I move to increase this item by the addition of $500,000.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After the word "million," in line 17, insert "five hundred thousand."

Mr. LAWLER. There are many portions of this bill in regard to which I would have been glad to say something, but I have not done so. I only speak on this question because of my knowledge of this particular service. I am proud to say that I served for years in the capacity of a letter-carrier. I know the duties of that position. I know the wants of the people in that particular. I know it is shameful that necessary business accommodations should be denied the people when it is clearly demonstrated by members on this floor that in many other cities there are more daily deliveries than in the city of Chicago. Great business interests are suffering there for want of additional carriers. I have already stated that a letter can be sent from Chicago a distance of 200 miles by rail more quickly than it can be delivered within the limits of the city of Chicago. This arises from the need of additional letter-carrier and collection service.

Here is a service that is more than paying its own expenses. It imposes no burden of taxation upon the people. On the contrary, in every place where the letter-carrier system has been extended the increased receipts have more than paid for the expense of the service. When the representatives of a large city like Chicago stand here and point out the needs of the great business public of that city, and urge that that service ought to be extended in order to afford the necessary accommodation, I am a little surprised that men vote as they do on an item of this kind. I say again that in the city of Chicago there are large business firms receiving daily fifty or seventy-five letters, and who have only two mail deliveries daily in the localities where their establishments are located. Our object is to give to the business men of the city of Chicago at least three or four daily deliveries instead of two—to give to localities adjacent to the central business portion of Chicago at least four or five daily deliveries. This would be only treating Chicago the same as we have treated Philadelphia, Boston, and New York. Therefore I ask this House to vote an additional $50,000 for that service. Here is presented a total increase in one year in the city of Chicago——

Mr. ADAMS. In the net income of Chicago?

Mr. LAWLER. Yes, sir. The increase is $179,366.88, which is a gain of 35 per cent. in one year in the city of Chicago. That of itself shows the additional need in the city of Chicago.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of enabling the Postmaster-General to make a permanent lease of a suitable place in the city of Washington, and to furnish and equip the same with the tools, implements, and machinery and other material which may be necessary to repair mail bags and sacks, and mail locks and keys, $10,000.

Mr. LAWLER. I make the point of order that this is new legislation and not in order upon this bill. In Cincinnati and Chicago are shops for repair of mail-bags, which are sent from there as distributing points. This proposes to take those bags and bring them all here and send them back to their various destinations. It is new legislation.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see how it is new legislation. If they can repair at Chicago and at New York I do not see why they can not also repair at Washington. It is a matter of discretion in the Department.

I wish to be candid with the House in reference to this matter, as I do not want anything in the bill except what is put there by the consent of the House. The only difference here is in reference to the word "permanent." The Department now has an office here to do repairing, but it has to be done under the general appropriation. This is the only change of law in it, and the object simply is to economize by providing that all the repairing shall be done here under one head instead of under three. The Department for this year saved in this item $60,000. There is no question as to the saving of money, and the only point is as to the use of the word "permanent." I think the first point of order is well taken. I call attention to the following paragraphs, to be found on pages 121 and 122 of the report of the Postmaster-General for this year:

Shortly after the appointment of the new chief of the mail equipment division the discovery was made by him that in the post-offices in the cities of Washington and New York a very large amount of bags and sacks had been suffered to accumulate for want of repairs, and which could be used in the service to good advantage.

After an investigation it was discovered that from two hundred and fifty thousand to three hundred thousand bags—jute, canvas, and leather—had been allowed to thus accumulate in those two offices.

These repair shops had been placed, by the regulations of the Department, under the charge of the postmasters of those respective places, who submitted monthly reports of the condition of those shops, the amount of bags received, the number repaired, and the cost of such repair.

It is plain from the results of this investigation that for some years proper attention had not been given to this surplus stock of damaged mail bags.

By an order issued by you the repair shop in the city of Washington was placed under my immediate direction, and a general order was passed instructing that all the bags to be repaired should be sent to that office for such repair.

The working force of the repair shop in the city of Washington was, from time to time, increased until it now numbers ninety-one persons.

All this accumulated stock in New York and elsewhere was sent to this repair shop in the city of Washington. The result has been a saving of at least $60,000 per annum.

No requisitions for new jute bags, sacks or leather bags have been issued from this office since last February, and none for leather sacks since last December, and the service has been amply supplied out of this surplus damaged stock, which has been put in good and serviceable repair.

In view of these results I have to recommend that a permanent repair shop be established in the city of Washington under the direction of the chief of the mail equipment division of this office, and that all the bags and sacks damaged shall be sent to the city of Washington for repair.

I further recommend that in connection with this shop for repairing sacks and bags there shall also be established a shop for repairing mail locks and keys. The economy achieved, as above stated, by the repair of all damaged mail bags and sacks in the city of Washington justifies the opinion that a great saving will be effected to the Government by repairing its own locks and keys.

To this end I recommend a special appropriation of $10,000 to enable the Postmaster-General to make a permanent lease of some place in the city of Washington, to furnish and equip it with the tools, implements, and machinery and other materials which may be necessary to repair mail bags and sacks and mail locks and keys.

It is believed that a place in every way adapted for this purpose at a rent certainly not exceeding $5,000 a year can be secured.

As the saving effected already in repairing mail bags and sacks has resulted in a decreased estimate for mail equipments for the next fiscal year of $70,000, it will be seen that the expenditure of this sum is justified.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia state what is the present law?

Mr. BLOUNT. My opinion is the Government can not make a contract for longer than one year, and the object of inserting the word "permanent" is to provide for the location of the machinery here. To cut the matter short, if the gentleman will withdraw his point of order I will move to strike out the word "permanent."

Mr. LAWLER. I will withdraw my point of order to that extent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the word "permanent."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAWLER. I now offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, This shall not authorize the removal of the repair of mail-bags from the Chicago (Ill.) post-office.

Mr. LAWLER. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, where the economy can be found of taking from Chicago, this great distributing center of the whole Northwest, and bringing these mail-bags here to Washington to be repaired and then sent back to the Chicago post-office for use, instead of doing what economy would seem to require—that is, having them repaired on the spot where they are to be used. Now, at the Chicago post-office there are some nine or ten widows who are employed in the post-office there for these repairs, most deserving people, who have many calls upon them; and I can not understand—although I have made repeated inquiries at the Post-Office Department and do not get a sufficiently satisfactory answer—I can not understand the economy of this proposed change. Hence I would like to ask the chairman of this Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads a question. I hope he will tell this committee, in view of his statement a few moments ago that this bill was in the line of economy, where the economy is to be found in making an appropriation to establish a place at Washington to repair these mail bags and locks which are to be used at Chicago and paying freight from Chicago to Washington and back again after the repairs are made, instead of having them repaired there?

Mr. BLOUNT. I will have the report of the Department read if the gentleman desires it. I can not answer him in a word. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it necessary to take up the time of the committee further in this discussion. This provision contemplates the establishment at Washington of this repair shop. The amendment I have proposed provides that the work now done at Chicago shall remain there. I believe that is in the interest of economy, and certainly these people are entitled to this employment. I hope, therefore, that the item I have moved as an amendment will be inserted in the bill without further objection.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 11, noes 45.

Mr. LAWLER. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. LAWLER and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 130.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, of which a sum not exceeding $30,000 may be employed to pay freight on postal-cards, stamped envelopes, and stamped paper from the manufactories to the post-offices and depots of distribution, $19,105,557.90.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following proviso, to come in after line 4, on page 11:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1889, for transportation of mails on railroad routes, by reducing the compensation to all railroad companies for the transportation of mails 10 per cent. per annum from the rates for the transportation of mails on the basis of the average weight fixed and allowed by the first section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 17, 1878.

Mr. KEAN. That is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I make the point of order upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the point of order made?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from New Jersey to raise the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be done. I hope at least that we may have a vote on this proposition. The compensation now paid to the railroads under the act in question is generally conceded to be enormously beyond what it ought to be. Certainly there ought to be a reduction.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, this whole question was discussed in the committee. It is conceded that the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, I understand that it is, if insisted upon.

Mr. BINGHAM. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For railway post-office car service, $2,260,000.

For railway post-office clerks, $5,600,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee to inform us whether the civil-service rules are in force as to the appointment of postal clerks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I so understand.

Mr. DINGLEY. I asked the question because within the last half hour I have been informed that information was obtained from the Postmaster-General of an extension of the time to the 15th of March when these rules should go into force.

Mr. BLOUNT. Possibly that is true; I have no information.

Mr. DINGLEY. I supposed possibly the committee might be able to inform the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not say. It is not a matter that came before the committee for legislation. It is a matter of executive order.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand. I simply desired to elicit the information.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk-lines, $295,655.38: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, withdraw this fund from any railroad company when, in his judgment, the public interests require it.

For miscellaneous items, $1,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That section 7 of the act entitled "An act establishing post-roads, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1877, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives may send and receive through the mail, free, all public documents printed by order of Congress; also all communications with the several Departments and bureaus of the Government in regard to any matter of the business of said Department or bureau; and the name of each Senator, Representative, Delegate, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives shall be written thereon, with the proper designation of the office he holds. And the provisions of this section shall apply to each of the persons named therein until the 1st day of December following the expiration of their respective terms of office."

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the question of order on that amendment. It changes existing law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I hope the gentleman will withhold that point of order for a minute.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is my desire to get the bill out of the way of other business as promptly as possible.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I will not take more than a minute.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will yield a minute to the gentleman.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The provision simply does this: It allows members of Congress to communicate with the Executive Departments by means of the penalty envelope the same as the Departments communicate with us. Simply that and nothing more. We receive from the Pension Office, from the Second Auditor, and from other bureaus communications in regard to executive business in executive envelopes. This provision would enable members of Congress simply to return to these same official Departments the same executive business in the same manner, by means of the penalty envelopes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For manufacture of adhesive postage and special-delivery stamps, $155,874.

For pay of agents and assistants to distribute stamps, and expenses of agency, $9,000.

For manufacture of stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, and letter sheets, $852,351.

For pay of agent and assistants to distribute stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, and letter sheets, and expense of agency, $16,000.
For manufacture of postal-cards, $228,781.
For pay of agent and assistants to distribute postal-cards, and expense of agency, $7,800.
For registered package, tag, official, and dead-letter envelopes, $109,745.
For ship, steam-boat, and way letters, $2,500.
For engraving, printing, and binding drafts and warrants, $3,000.
For miscellaneous items, $1,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. I offer an amendment to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 24 insert: "The Postmaster-General shall furnish any person who may apply in writing copies of any of the Post-Office maps at the cost of printing and 10 per cent. thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of foreign mails, $655,000.
For balance due foreign countries, $100,000.
For expenses of United States delegates to Vienna Postal Congress, 1890, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Postmaster-General.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments favorably to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend that motion as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the same be recommitted to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads with instructions to strike out all the provisions of the bill which classify the clerks and other employés of the first and second class post-offices and increase the salaries thereof.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is that motion in order in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

The question was put; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. KERR. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on the motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and had instructed him to report the same back favorably with amendments.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the previous question on the amendments and the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the previous question on the passage of bill.

Mr. CANNON. I move to recommit the bill with instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads with instructions to strike out all provisions therein authorizing the classification and fixing the salaries of the clerks and employés attached to the first-class post-offices, and all provisions authorizing the classification and fixing the salaries of the clerks attached to the second-class post-offices, and to report the bill so amended to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the previous question upon the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was put on the motion to recommit with instructions as read; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 88.

Mr. CANNON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 172, not voting 97; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to print some tables and remarks in connection with this bill, the object being to give the Senate the fullest possible information on the subject.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 185) to provide for the division of Dakota into two States, and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States; and Joint resolution (S. R. 140) authorizing the printing of 50,000 copies of the fourth and fifth reports of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the years 1887 and 1888;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of the eulogies on the life and character of Edward W. Robertson, deceased, late a Representative in Congress from Louisiana; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 262) to print 39,000 copies of the fourth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the legislative bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the reading of those figures will not give the House any information, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be suspended, and that the statement of the conferees be read instead.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 21, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 39, 40, 45, 46, 51, 52, 53, 54, 59, 60, 64, 65, 67, 68, 69, 84, 85, 86, 87, 94, 95, 96, and 97.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 41, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 56, 57, 58, 62, 63, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 76, 77, 78, 81, 82, 88, 89, 91, and 92, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$364,486.10;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$2,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$37,840;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WM. H. FORNEY,
SAM. J. RANDALL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended in the accompanying conference report on the amendments of the Senate:

The amendments 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, relating to the official force of the Senate, provide for clerks to the Committees on Interstate Commerce and on Epidemic Diseases at $2,220 each; for an assistant clerk to the Committee on Commerce at $1,440; for a messenger to the Committee on Foreign Relations at $1,440; and for an additional session committee clerk at $6 per day; increase the following salaries: assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations from $1,800 to $2,200, assistant doorkeeper (Isaac Bassett) from $2,592 to $3,092, and assistant messenger on the floor of the Senate from $1,200 to $1,440; and strike out proposed increase in the salary of the telegraph operator from $1,200 to $1,440.

On amendments 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, relating to the contingent fund of the Senate: Appropriates $6,000 for fuel, etc., $2,000 for furniture, $2,500 for materials for furniture and repairs to same, $1,000 for service in cleaning and varnishing furniture, and $15,000 for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate.

On amendment 22: Appropriates $2,500 to continue the preparation of the catalogue of the Congressional Library.

On amendments 23 and 24: Increases the amount for assistants and laborers in the Botanic Garden from $11,073.75 to $12,093.75.

On amendments 25 and 26: Increases the salary of the private secretary to the President from $3,250 to $5,000.

On amendments 27 and 28: Strikes out proposed increase of one clerk of class 3 for the Civil Service Commission.

On amendments 29 and 30: Strikes out proposed increase of two assistant messengers for the Department of State.

On amendments 31, 32, 33, and 34: Strikes out proposed increase of $2,000 in the contingent expenses of the Department of State for the purchase of horses, wagons, carriage, and harness.

On amendments 35 and 36: Strikes out proposed increase in the salary of the assistant chief of the customs division from $2,000 to $2,250.

On amendments 37 and 38: Provides for continuing the adjustment of the accounts of the soldiers' homes under section 4818, originating subsequent to March 3, 1881, instead of 1887, as proposed.

On amendments 39 and 40: Strikes out proposed increase of one clerk of class 4 in the Light-House Board.

On amendments 41, 42, 43, and 44: Increases the salary of the principal clerk and accountant in the office of the Life-Saving Service from $1,800 to $2,000: reduces the number of clerks at $900 from five to four, and authorizes the detail of an additional officer of the revenue-marine service to duty in that office.

On amendments 45, 46, 47, 48, and 49: Strikes out proposed increase of one messenger in the office of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service and provides for one additional laborer at $480 in said service.

On amendment 50: Increases the amount for the traveling expenses, printing, clerk-hire, and office-rent of the Utah Commission from $7,000 to $8,500.

On amendments 51, 52, 53, and 54: Strikes out the provision for a clerk of class 3, or stenographer, for the commanding general of the Army.

On amendment 55: Restores the provision that not less than two hundred of the clerks in the office of the Adjutant-General shall be exclusively engaged in preparing and making reports to expedite the settlement of pension applications and soldiers' claims.

On amendments 56, 57, and 58: Provides for one additional assistant engineer at $900 in the office of the Surgeon-General of the Army.

On amendments 59 and 60: Strikes out provision of $600 for rent for the Signal Office.

On amendments 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, and 66: In lieu of the additional force proposed by the Senate for the compilation of the Naval Records of the War of the Rebellion, provides for two additional clerks of class 4, to be selected, by reason of special aptitude for the work, by the Secretary of the Navy.

On amendments 67 and 68: Strikes out proposed increase from $1,500 to $4,500 for rent of buildings for the Hydrographic Office.

On amendment 69: Strikes out proposed increase from $12,000 to $14,000 for contingent expenses for branch hydrographic offices.

On amendments 70, 71, and 72: Provides for additional computer at $1,200 in the Naval Observatory.

On amendment 73: Increases the amount for repairs to buildings and contingent expenses of the Naval Observatory from $3,900 to $4,500.

On amendments 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, and 83: In lieu of the proposed increase in the clerical force of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing of the Navy Department, provides for the following additional, namely: One clerk of class 4, one clerk of class 3, one stenographer at $1,400, two clerks of class 1, one clerk at $1,000, and one additional laborer.

On amendment 84: Strikes out proposed increase for contingent expenses of the Navy Department from $12,000 to $12,500.

On amendments 85, 86, and 87: Strikes out proposed increase of three members of the Board of Pension Appeals in the office of the Secretary of the Interior at $2,000 each.

On amendments 88 and 89: Increases the number of law clerks at $2,000 each in the office of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department from ten to thirteen.

On amendments 91 and 92: Increases the number of laborers in the office of the disbursing clerk of the Post-Office Department from twenty to twenty-two.

On amendments 94 and 95: Strikes out proposed increase in the salary of the chief clerk for the Department of Justice from $2,200 to $2,500.

On amendments 96 and 97: Strikes out proposed increase in the salary of the disbursing clerk for the Department of Labor from $1,800 to $2,000.

The bill as agreed upon appropriates $20,840,535.81, being $44,590 less than as it passed the Senate, $38,290 greater than as it passed the House, $64,904.76 less than the appropriations for the same objects for the current fiscal year, and $246,949.44 less than the estimates submitted for the fiscal year 1890.

WM. H. FORNEY,
SAM. J. RANDALL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SCOTT (after the reading of the "statement"). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCOTT. Would it be in order to move an amendment to the report of the committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. The report is not subject to amendment. The only way to amend it is to reject the report; then the whole subject will be open for action by the House.

Mr. SCOTT. It would not be in order, then, to move that the clause relating to the salary of the private secretary of the next President should apply also to the salary of the private secretary of the present Executive.

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. FORNEY. I call for the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to make a statement in that connection. That question came up four years ago, and I was then as now in favor of the increase. It was prevented only by the fact that the party in interest did not desire that the change should be made. I think, however, that if the conferees had believed they had the power they would have made provision for the secretary of the present Executive, and if the President has paid anything out of his own pocket by way of compensation to his private secretary I think that amount should be refunded to him.

Mr. HOLMAN. This increase, however, was not in the legislative bill two years ago, or four years ago either.

Mr. RANDALL. It was not. I only say this, that I favored the increase four years ago, and I think it is right now. It was kept out of the bill four years ago only because the President of the United States—I do not think I make any mistake about this—did not desire it in.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has my friend from Pennsylvania any information that the incoming President will want it?

Mr. RANDALL. I have not. There will be no objection, so far as I know, to any bill that proposes to refund that amount.

Mr. COX. Why not put it in the deficiency bill?

Mr. CANNON. This was a Senate amendment, and the committee of conference had jurisdiction over the matter.

Mr. FORNEY. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 258) providing for the printing of the eulogies on the life and character of Edward W. Robertson, deceased, late a Representative in Congress from Louisiana; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 262) to print 39,000 copies of the fourth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of the bill (S. 3653) to authorize the sale of a tract of land in the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas; in which concurrence was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

CENSUS.

Mr. COX. I would like the consent of the House that the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1659) providing for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses be referred to the Select Committee on the Eleventh Census, with leave to report it back at any time. This bill must pass at this session, and it is important it should be passed at once in order that it may be engrossed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will be agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Why not concur in the Senate amendments now?

Mr. COX. I would be glad to have that done, if consent can be had. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be now concurred in. I have no doubt that if reported back by the committee they would be concurred in.

A MEMBER. We all know what they are.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the amendments be read.

Mr. COX. That would take too much time. The amendments are those prepared by Senator HALE, of Maine. They do not add anything in the way of expenditure——

Mr. BURROWS. You do not propose to concur in the amendments without reading them?

Mr. COX. I will not do so if the gentleman desires to have them read.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman from New York tell us how much additional expenditure these amendments involve?

Mr. COX. I think they do not add a dollar to the appropriation available at this time——

Mr. HOLMAN. But they increase the ultimate expenditure $400,000.

Mr. COX. I was about to say that.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand correctly, this bill provides for an ultimate expenditure of $6,000,000, but only appropriates at this time $1,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. COX. That is right.

Mr. McMILLIN. The amendments ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the amendments has been demanded. Gentlemen will resume their seats, and the House will preserve order, so that the amendments may be understood.

Mr. BURROWS. I will not ask for the reading of the amendments if the gentleman from New York will explain very briefly their scope.

Mr. COX. There are only three amendments of any consequence, and they concern the schedules provided for in section 14. One amendment enlarges somewhat the schedule as to soldiers and their widows, so as to give the time of service; that adds very little to the expense. Another amendment provides for the enumeration of the recorded indebtedness of corporations and individuals. This will not add largely to the expense; it simply requires an additional schedule. The other amendment provides that the social-science statistics shall embrace statistics as to mulattoes, quadroons, octoroons, etc. This was regarded by gentlemen of science in the South and elsewhere as important. Those are the three principal amendments. None of these amendments affect the main proposition, which is the enumeration of the people for purposes of representation. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. RANDALL. I think it will be more satisfactory if the amendments are read.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. On, no; the statement of the gentleman from New York is perfectly satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the amendments demanded?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir; I understand that they add a considerable amount to the proposed expenditure.

Mr. GEAR. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. Does this bill provide for collecting full statistics in regard to pauperism?

Mr. COX. That is all included in the general provisions of the bill; that will be done.

The amendments of the Senate were read. [They will be found in the Senate proceedings of the 18th instant.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that these amendments of the Senate be concurred in. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] now asks, as the Chair understands, that the amendments be referred to the Select Committee on the Eleventh Census, with leave to report them back at any time.

Mr. BACON. And that they be printed?

Mr. COX. They are already printed in the proceedings of the Senate. Why does my colleague [Mr. BACON] object to taking these amendments up now and disposing of them? I think they are all well understood by the House. There is great difficulty in getting my committee together. I hope my colleague, of all the gentlemen in this House, will not be the one to obstruct the passage of this bill. These amendments, which are mostly verbal, were prepared by Senator HALE.

A MEMBER. We all understand them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. I object.

Mr. COX. I ask by unanimous consent to refer it to the Committee on the Eleventh Census with leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. That is the request to which the gentleman objects.

Mr. BACON. What is it?

The SPEAKER. To refer it to the Committee on the Eleventh Census with leave to report at any time.

Mr. BACON. Would that require it to report to-day?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. COX. I do not propose to report it to-day.

Mr. BACON. Then I have no objection.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12571) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. SAYERS. I move, by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill for information be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

International bureau for publication of customs tariffs: To meet the share of the United States in the annual expense of sustaining the international bureau at Brussels for the translation and publication of customs tariffs, $1,000.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to strike that out.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs and preservation and heating apparatus for public buildings: To reimburse Daniel Magone, collector of customs at the port of New York, and to adjust his accounts without the further payment of money from the Treasury, the sum of $8,788.64, expended by him out of the appropriation for "collecting the revenue from customs, 1887," but properly chargeable to the following appropriations.

Mr. SCOTT. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the private secretary of the President of the United States the difference between the salary received by him and $5,000 per annum, $6,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask leave to offer an amendment to that proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to this. Do not encumber this proposition with another.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well, then.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Furniture and repairs of furniture: For furnishing complete the new public buildings at Augusta, Me.; Baltimore, Md.; Keokuk, Iowa; Minneapolis, Minn.; Reading, Pa.; Santa Fé, N. Mex.; Fort Scott, Kans.; and Springfield, Ohio, and to complete the furnishing of the public buildings at Harrisonburgh, Va.; Des Moines, Iowa; and Macon, Ga., $78,000; which sum shall be expended under contract or contracts to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury with the lowest and best bidder or bidders therefor, after advertising once a week for four consecutive weeks for proposals; and in furnishing said buildings all furniture now owned by the United States in other buildings in said cities shall be used as far as practicable, whether it corresponds with the present regulation plans for furniture or not; and in addition to the sum herein appropriated, furniture may be supplied to said buildings out of stock on hand or under contract, and paid for or to be paid for out of the current appropriation for furniture and repairs of furniture.

Mr. CONGER. I move, in line 16, page 12, to strike out "seventy-eight" and in lieu thereof to insert "one hundred and twenty-eight."

Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because I am interested in the public building now being completed in the city of Des Moines, Iowa. I have offered the amendment to increase this $50,000, because I take it the same treatment has been given to other buildings that has been given to this one.

In a letter sent to the Appropriations Committee by the Treasury Department, December 8, 1888, the Secretary certifies there is a deficiency which is needed immediately for the furnishing of this building, now nearing completion. The committee have provided for $78,000 to cover the amount of $190,300. I am credibly informed in making up their estimates they have had before them a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury in which he designated the amount necessary for each one of these public buildings, among others Augusta, Me., $10,000; Springfield, Ohio, $7,000, and Des Moines, Iowa, to complete furnishing, $6,000.

I am told in making their estimates they have provided $1,000 for completing the furnishing of the building at Des Moines. The Secretary of the Treasury makes his recommendation from the report of an inspector who goes out to that building and learns what is necessary. He reports there is now needed $8,617.13 to complete the furnishing of that building. I have no doubt the committee have imagined there was a lot of old furniture which could be used in that building. But this building has been increased in size more than four times; there is now four times the room there was before. It has been unoccupied for five years, and what little furniture they have has been carted around from one room to the other in order to meet the demands——

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, the question of old furniture has nothing to do with Des Moines.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; I am glad to hear the gentlemen say that. Then certainly, in that event, there is greater necessity for increasing the appropriation as proposed by me.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONGER. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. On what basis do you propose in your amendment to increase the amount of this appropriation by the sum of $50,000?

Mr. CONGER. On the basis of reaching something near, if possible, the estimate the Secretary has given for this item.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, in regard to the estimates of which the gentleman speaks they give us in one place $18,500 as an estimate for furnishing a building that cost $100,000, and yet for Augusta, Me., they ask $10,000. What reliance I ask, then, is to be placed on that kind of an estimate? $18,500 for Sante Fé, N. Mex.——

Mr. CONGER. Oh! I know nothing about Sante Fé, N. Mex.——

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I do; I know all about it.

Mr. CONGER. But I do know what I am talking about. I am talking about Des Moines, Iowa. I know what the necessities of the building are from my own personal observation, but I do not know anything about the estimates that may have been sent in for Sante Fé or for any other point. I am not speaking of them.

Mr. SAYERS. But we had the officials of the Treasury Department before us, and we examined them in reference to all of the public buildings, and we found, for instance, taking a building that cost $50,000 and intended only for use as a post-office, that the estimates for that building would furnish a building that would cost $200,000, a building that had two courts, an internal-revenue office, and a post-office besides; so that, if the gentleman will permit me, I will state that we found the estimates so unreliable and so unsatisfactory that it became absolutely necessary for the committee to give the whole matter a thorough, painstaking investigation, and to make such recommendations as would lead to the appropriation of an amount which we believed would be necessary to meet all warranted expenditures in that direction.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman now be kind enough to tell me, after making the thorough examination of which he speaks, what amount they appropriated for the completion of the furnishing of this building at Des Moines?

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to the gentleman that we gave $78,000 for all of the buildings named.

Mr. CONGER. I understand that. But how much of this, what proportion of the $78,000 do you give to this building at Des Moines?

Mr. RANDALL. I will tell the gentleman. There has been already provided on account of that building $4,234.22.

Mr. CONGER. Three thousand five hundred and eighty-three dollars and thirty-two cents?

Mr. RANDALL. No, $4,234.22. There has been paid out $620 of this amount, and there remains of the current appropriation the sum of $3,614.22 still available. Then we have an additional thousand dollars for Des Moines of the amount fixed in the bill, making a total of nearly $6,000 for that building.

Mr. CONGER. It does not matter if it is six thousand or any other sum, if the appropriation is not enough.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. CONGER.

Mr. CONGER. I thank the gentleman from Missouri.

Here is a statement from the Secretary himself, a statement given to me this morning, in which he furnishes a detailed statement of the expenditure for furniture, and of the furniture required, as furnished by the inspector who has been out and through the offices there, and did not make his report based on the cost of the building.

Mr. RANDALL. Nor did we.

Mr. CONGER. And yet a member of the committee said that that was the case.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; we make it according to the superficial space required to be furnished.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; let me finish this now. The Secretary tells me that after sending an inspector out there he has gone carefully over the report; and I am familiar with the building and know what he says is absolutely correct, and they have sent out and put into the post-office, which is the only part of the building occupied, $3,583.32 of furniture, and here is a statement showing an additional amount required for furniture, of the "standard furniture," as he calls it—that is to say, that class of furniture, desks, etc., which is provided under a general contract and can be used in any office, $1,687 more. Then there is required special furniture, such as is necessary in the post-office and court-rooms, or which must be made for the rooms themselves, $2,519 more. Then the gas-fixtures, $4,413.12.

Mr. RANDALL. At Des Moines?

Mr. CONGER. Yes; at Des Moines, $4,413. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must not imagine we are occupying a simple little country court-house there. We have a building which is established for court purposes, for revenue purposes, for pension-office, for land office, for post-office, and I do not know what else. And I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman will be convinced if he looks over the situation carefully that there is no more asked in the estimate than is absolutely needed at that point, nor is there anything extravagant or unnecessary called for.

I make my estimate upon what I know of this building, believing that the Secretary of the Treasury has treated other buildings just as he has this, and has not made an extravagant estimate.

Mr. SOWDEN. What is the total amount?

Mr. CONGER. The total amount is $8,619.

Mr. WEBER. How much has been provided?

Mr. CONGER. Let me say this in regard to the conduct of this committee. The Secretary of the Treasury two years ago recommended for the purpose of furnishing these buildings about to be completed in the country $412,000. The committee allowed them $200,000, and at the expiration of that time they found a deficiency here of $190,000. Now, with the appropriation bill of this year we find an estimate of $417,000 for this purpose. They have cut that down to $200,000, and they are starting in this year with a deficiency. I want this Democratic Congress to make appropriation of the money that must be spent during this Administration, and not leave it to the next administration to come in here and at once find this great deficiency.

Mr. RANDALL. As allusion has been made to prior years, I will say that when the present Administration came in we found that there was appropriated $300,000. A careful examination convinced us that there was not only great waste but some misconduct in connection with the purchases made for furniture. It was reduced to about $120,000 or thereabout, and the very first year of this Administration brought down this expenditure from $300,000 for furniture and repairs of furniture to $90,000. To-day of the amount of $200,000 to be expended I have here, in a telegram from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, a statement that there has not been one-half of it expended yet.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman allow me a question there?

Mr. RANDALL. Not just now. They have a mode there of involving this Government to the extent of the appropriation. That is to say, they advertise for bids and let out contracts covering the entire amount. For instance, there is now $24,000 worth of carpet contracted for at about a dollar and two and a half cents a yard, subject to the call of the Treasury Department, that is not yet needed at all. That is the way it is done. After we discovered this was the way, we had the books up here, had them in the committee room, and went over them item by item, and we made up this amount; and, so that this money should not be diverted, so that the money should not be contracted for, and these public buildings that are to be completed left unprovided for, we named these public buildings and gave the amount that we considered necessary after careful examination of the superficial feet of space in the public buildings.

There has been no niggardly policy or attempted economy. On the contrary, while they have involved the whole $200,000 for the current year, we have felt that the committee could not come in here without complaint and see these thirteen or fourteen buildings that it is alleged will be completed between now and the 1st of July go without furniture. Therefore, we have said here we will give this deficiency of $78,000; but we mean that this furniture which is to be purchased by the $78,000 shall go into the buildings where it should go, and not have left any discretion on the part of the Treasury or anybody else to pile furniture in a public building in excess of its comfortable occupancy.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Any question at all.

Mr. CONGER. Do I understand you to say that there are $100,000 left of the amount appropriated last year?

Mr. RANDALL. I say yes.

Mr. CONGER. Now, answer me my question.

Mr. RANDALL. I am going to answer. I was saying that there has been up to a few days ago $100,000 of this unexpended; but when we come to examine the matter we find that it is all pledged among contractors to furnish furniture and carpets and the like. So that when we come to provide them for the future we have inserted the names and an amount adequate. I can say that I gave four or five days myself of close investigation to this matter. The books were brought to me and I went over them item by item. I am possessed of some knowledge of business, and I can safely say that the amount is not only enough, but a great deal too much, and a great deal more than any man having his own purchases to make out of his own pocket would for a moment think of spending.

Mr. CONGER. Do you not know that the Secretary of the Treasury reports that there are thirty-five new buildings expected to be completed by the 1st of July?

Mr. RANDALL. I know he has reported sixteen as likely to be finished.

Mr. CONGER. I hold a report in my hand in which he says there will be thirty-five.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes; that is like the amount of $18,500 that was required at Santa Fé.

Mr. CONGER. Do you not know that he is compelled to make contracts for the purchase of this furniture in time to have it ready for the completion of the buildings; and do you not know that contracts have been closed by the Department?

Mr. RANDALL. Undoubtedly I do know that. I know that contracts have already been made; but I know, further, that this amount ought not to be given, and that it has been given simply because we did not dare ourselves to take the responsibility of leaving without furniture any of these public buildings that are alleged will be completed between now and the 1st of July.

Mr. CONGER. And having made that decision, you state that a certain amount shall go to each building.

Mr. RANDALL. We have made an aggregate of $78,000.

Mr. CONGER. And in that you put down $1,000 for the city of Des Moines.

Mr. RANDALL. And we have made a provision that if the amount is not sufficient for a particular building there are $8,000 that can be drawn upon to make the further provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word, merely to say that the appropriation for this service this year in the regular appropriation bill was $200,000, just one-half of the estimate that was duly and regularly made to the last Congress; and I will say further, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has just said, that that $200,000—every cent of it—has been substantially expended, or paid out——

Mr. RANDALL. Not paid out.

Mr. CANNON. Let me finish my sentence—paid out, or pledged for the payment of contracts already made; so that practically there is not one cent of that money in the Treasury that is available for furniture or repairs from now until next July. Having said that much, I wish to say further that the Treasury Department submits its estimates in due form and in detail, and asks $190,000 in this deficiency bill, which it says it needs to keep up repairs of furniture and to furnish new buildings that are completed or to be completed this year and early in the next fiscal year. That $190,000 by way of deficiency is within $10,000 of the amount we gave them in the regular appropriation bill last year. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says that the committee made an investigation touching this matter, and that the $78,000 in the bill is sufficient. I am not here to say that it is or that it is not. I did not participate in that investigation, although I was upon the subcommittee. But this is true, that the Treasury Department, when it comes insisting on $190,000, building by building, in detail, to furnish these public buildings, of which a great number are about being completed, is either totally unreliable, to speak in the mildest possible language, or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] fails wholly to meet the wants of the public service.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the Book of Estimates, page 303, and particularly the attention of my friend from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. CONGER. I am listening.

Mr. SAYERS. You will find there estimates for furniture for new buildings amounting to $417,500; and when you examine those estimates you will find that for one building there is an estimate of over $16,000 for furniture, while for another building of the same size and with the same sort and character of service the estimate is not over $6,000. And so it is all through these estimates for furniture for public buildings.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me state just there that it does not matter where this furniture goes to—whether to Baltimore or to Santa Fé—the contractors have to pay the transportation; so that there is no additional cost to the Government involved in sending it to one city rather than to another.

Mr. CONGER. But it makes the furniture at Santa Fé cost the Government a good deal more than it would at Baltimore.

Mr. RANDALL. No; it does not. The contracts are made for the delivery of the furniture wherever it is wanted.

Mr. CONGER. Certainly; but the bid is higher on account of the distance.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, Mr. Chairman, no fair-minded man who is at all acquainted with the cost of furnishing either public or private buildings, and who will look at the superficial area of the buildings here designated and the amount of the estimates for furnishing each building, can justify the estimates. It is impossible to do it.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Do you not know that the Secretary of the Treasury, in making up these estimates for these various buildings, estimates only for the rooms that are to be furnished and occupied, and do you not know that many of the rooms in some public buildings are not occupied, and that that makes a difference between the amount required for different buildings of the same size?

Mr. RANDALL. That would only have the effect of reducing the amount required.

Mr. SAYERS. Furthermore, the estimates must be for furnishing rooms that are not to be used as well as those that are to be used, because they can not be explained on any other hypothesis.

Mr. CANNON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

A MEMBER. Let the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment, as follows:

In line 16, page 12, strike out the words "seventy-eight" and insert "one hundred and twenty-eight."

The question was taken, and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a division.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to offer another amendment. I move to strike out, in line 11, the word "complete;" also, in line 14, to strike out the words "to complete the" and insert "for."

Mr. SAYERS. I hope the Committee of the Whole will not adopt this amendment, because it will leave the door wide open for extravagance. If the words indicated by the gentleman be stricken out the Government may be involved in heavier appropriations for this building than it has heretofore made for like buildings. We found that these estimates were totally unreliable. We think the Government ought to impose a strict limitation upon expenditures in this direction.

Mr. HATCH. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] say that the amount embraced in this bill covers the estimates submitted by the Treasury Department?

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Not the full amount—of course not.

Mr. HATCH. Then I have this to say: I know nothing about the merits of the case as presented by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] so far as concerns Des Moines, but I know that the appropriations for these public buildings during the past year have been totally inadequate. To such an extent have they been inadequate that in the city of Hannibal, where I reside, and where there is a public building which has cost $140,000, the Secretary of the Treasury notified the custodian of that building, who is compelled by reason of the parsimonious appropriation to serve the Government in this respect without any salary, that he must go upon the street and pick up a common laborer at $1.25 a day to run the steam machinery of that building. [Applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. That has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. HATCH. Wait a moment until I get through. The judge of the district court, Judge Thayer, whose court-room is in that building, telegraphed to the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington that if that order was not rescinded he would adjourn the court; that he would not permit hundreds of people to come into that building on the public business if there was not a competent engineer to run the machinery.

Mr. RANDALL. That has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. HATCH. And I telegraphed the postmaster to go and placard on the door of that building, "Dangerous to enter this building." [Laughter and applause.] I had to go down here to the Treasury Department and spend a whole day to induce the authorities there to send out an order for the custodian of that building in Hannibal to employ a competent engineer to run the steam machinery; and they told me the difficulty was because the Committee on Appropriations had cut down the estimates for these public buildings more than one-half. [Applause.] I think it is time not only that the public buildings of this country should be taken care of but that the lives of our people who are called upon to enter them should be protected. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. That has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. HATCH. Well, it has this much to do with it: This is in the line of the same cutting down of the estimates.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the population of Hannibal?

Mr. HATCH. Well, it is bigger than any town in Pennsylvania. [Laughter.] It does not count as many people in numbers as some cities, but in a great many respects it is as large as any city in Pennsylvania. It has too much regard for the lives of its people to permit the Government of the United States to go into a well-organized city (where not a single private manufacturer can run an engine without a licensed engineer) and put in charge of the machinery of a great public building like that a man who never had hold of an engine in his life. It has this to do with it—that the appropriations for these public buildings are made with so much parsimony by the Committee on Appropriations that it is simply a disgrace to the country. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. We are not afraid of taking that disgrace.

Mr. HATCH. I know you are not afraid. The trouble with the Committee on Appropriations is that it has more nerve than anything else. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, not one word that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has uttered in his abuse of the Committee on Appropriations has reference to the item under consideration. He has not complained of any want of proper furniture at Hannibal, Mo.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, well, we could get along without proper furniture; we were willing to overlook that. I was talking of the meager appropriations that are made.

Mr. SAYERS. You get, I presume, just as much as you ought to have; and the very workmen in connection with that public building at Hannibal are probably receiving 50 per cent. more than the man who runs the plow in your fields.

Mr. HATCH. There is not any foundation for that remark. On the contrary, there is not a single employé in connection with that building who is not just as poorly paid as any workman in the city of Hannibal doing similar labor. This new custodian of that building—simply because he happens to be the postmaster—must give bond and take charge of the building and be responsible for the whole of it, without a single dollar of compensation as custodian.

Mr. SAYERS. Then let him resign his office.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, yes; "let him resign," of course! You have pursued that policy until nearly every Democratic official in the United States must resign after the 4th of March next. [Laughter and applause.] If you had treated Democratic officials with proper consideration and not discriminated against them we would have been in power for the next four years.

Mr. SAYERS. Then, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri is right—if, in order to induce men to vote for the nominees of the Democratic party they must be purchased by appropriations made by the Government, then I say I am glad the Republicans have won.

Mr. HATCH. Not a bit of it. The gentleman knows enough to recognize this fact, that there never was a body of men in the world which could not be demoralized when they saw their leaders making a discrimination against the rank and file of the very party which was fighting their political battles. [Applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. There has been no discrimination. These men who sought these offices have continued to hold them during this Administration. I say nine out of ten of them will continue to hold under a Republican administration if they are permitted to do so.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman may speak for the Democratic officials holding office in Texas, but the Democratic officials in Missouri expect to resign after the 4th of March next. [Laughter and applause.] They are old-fashioned Democrats. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I did suppose until to-day that the Democratic party had come into power with the promise of bringing about economy of expenditure in every branch of the public service. They have in a large degree succeeded, and when they have failed it has been because of the opportunities given in this House to increase appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations, I confess, have struck out everything which looks like an undue expenditure of the public money. [Applause.]

Now as to Hannibal. Hannibal has 20,000 superficial feet of floor space and there has been expended there $4,000 in the purchase of furniture, and the Committee on Appropriations have yet to hear of any complaint in that connection. The gentleman himself has never come to me and said there was more furniture needed at Hannibal. And, Mr. Chairman, I want to say deliberately here that as to the Committee on Appropriations it has been earnest in its endeavor from year to year to break up this contract system because we believe it is an extravagant expenditure. We find they are buying furniture fit for palaces. We brought them down from mahogany to cherry and white oak about one-half, and we brought them down from Turkish carpets to Brussels. [Laughter and applause.]

I want to know why the Committee on Appropriations should not indulge in the same care, in the same anxiety, if I may be permitted to use that expression, that any man would in regard to the purchase of furniture for his own house.

I am surprised at the heat exhibited by my friend from Missouri in this connection, because I do not think he has given any reason whatever to justify him in finding fault so far as I know with the Committee on Appropriations in reference to the furnishing of the building at Hannibal.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. Can the gentleman give any reason why a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, a Democratic Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and a Democratic chief clerk of the Treasury Department, why all of these officials looking over these estimates day after day and week after week are not as competent to judge as the Committee on Appropriations how much money it will take to furnish this building and run it?

Mr. RANDALL. We have examined into the contracts, we have examined into the character of the furniture, and we have brought down the expense to one-half without any inconvenience to the judges or anybody else. The chair you sit on cost $5, and we have discovered chairs were purchased costing $80. So it runs all the way through, and I think when the gentleman from Missouri comes quietly to reflect we will receive his commendation for the pains we have taken to investigate this subject. [Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. Then the gentleman, as I understand him, takes the position that the Committee on Appropriations, in the short time allotted at this session of Congress, or at any other session, so far as that is concerned, has been enabled to examine fully and is more competent to determine what is required than the Democratic officials in the Treasury Department having immediate charge of these subjects.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say right there that I believe the committee have the sympathy in their efforts of the high officers of the Treasury Department. They have not, I fear, the sympathy of some others that come in contact with the contractors.

Mr. HATCH. Then you ought to have a little more confidence in the recommendations of the higher officers of the Treasury Department when they have manliness enough to make proper reports to the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I wanted to investigate this very question of furniture a year ago, and I believe that if it had been investigated it would have resulted in a reform by showing its gross and wicked extravagance in the expenditure of the public money for furniture fit for a palace, rather than furniture adapted to real comfort, and suitable for a Democratic administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman answer me one more question?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. Does the gentleman consider it an extravagance to provide that a competent engineer shall be placed in charge of the steam apparatus of a public building which cost the people of this country from $120,000 to $140,000?

Mr. RANDALL. I will answer that, although it has nothing to do with the pending proposition, by saying that I would get for the security of life the most competent engineer I could employ.

Mr. HATCH. But you do not permit that.

Mr. RANDALL. But I would not do as the superintendent at the public building at Philadelphia, perhaps, or at New York and elsewhere, has done—employ fifty men, one-third of whom are deadheads and have nothing whatever to do.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, well; that is Philadelphia. You can not expect anything else. There are plenty of deadheads over there.

Mr. RANDALL. That may be, and I want to correct the abuses at my own home.

Mr. HATCH. I hope you will.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. I hope this little family quarrel over there will not militate against the success of the amendment I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to the floor on his motion.

Mr. CONGER. I wanted to state merely, Mr. Chairman, that my object in moving to strike out the word "complete" from this section of the bill is because it provides that the sum of $78,000 shall be used in "furnishing complete" these new buildings. Now, if this sum is not sufficient, as I know it will not be, and we have the authority of the highest Democratic official of the Treasury to say that it is not sufficient, then, sir, these buildings will be partially furnished and the appropriation exhausted, and yet we have the law before us saying that this amount was appropriated for the purpose of furnishing them complete, and no other sum can be employed for that purpose. If, then, we adopt this rule, these buildings must go without the additional furniture necessary; and if this amount shall be used in strict compliance with the terms of the law none of this can be used to put furniture in a building which is already occupied. That is the reason I have moved to strike out the word "complete."

Now, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said the Democratic party came into power because they promised to restore economy in the public service; and it was very properly suggested while he was speaking by some one behind me that they were invited out of power because they did not keep their promises. We have at the beginning of the Fiftieth Congress a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury who has been in power since the beginning of this Administration, sending in to Congress a certain estimate for furnishing public buildings, the amount ascertained by a careful investigation of the necessities of each building. The Committee on Appropriations cut the estimate in two in the middle; and then we have the same Democratic Secretary making the same estimate at the beginning of this session, and again that is cut in two by the committee. We came here at the beginning of this Congress with certificates over the signature of this Treasury official that there exists at this time a deficiency of $190,000 for this very purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. Utterly unreliable.

Mr. CONGER. Then why do you not turn the official out?

Mr. RANDALL. There is no occasion for it, as you have done it for us. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. Yes, we saw you would not do it, and we have taken great pleasure in doing it.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a most remarkable fact that when the Committee on Appropriations come in here with a proposition to reduce or even to keep the expenditure within the same figures of the past year and use that basis as a controlling element in making up our bills, that that side, somehow or other, uniformly go for an increase of the public expenditures.

Mr. CONGER. But this is only to pay debts that you have already contracted.

Mr. KERR. I do not think the gentleman can accuse all of this side as favoring extravagant expenditures.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is an exception to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment, and the Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

The amendment of Mr. CONGER was rejected.

Mr. CONGER. I now offer a further amendment, to strike out of line 16 the words "seventy-eight" and insert "one hundred."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 45, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, between lines 3 and 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"To pay the engineer in charge of the heating apparatus of the public building at Trenton, in the State of New Jersey, for an extra month's service during the year 1888, $50."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would call the attention of the committee——

Mr. SAYERS. I make the point of order that it is not germane to this paragraph and not authorized by existing law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know any paragraph to which it would be more pertinent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was about to say that I would have called the committee's attention to this item were it not for the fact that the bill was reported several days earlier than I understood it would be reported. The facts are these: Only for six months of the year is the engineer in charge of the public building in the city where I reside paid for his services. During the past year, although he is a poor man and has a family to support, he has been compelled to put in at least one month of extra service without one dollar of pay. I myself was in the court-room in the upper part of the building when an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States refused to proceed further with the hearing of a case until this engineer, who had not yet gone upon duty, was sent for and put the building into a comfortable degree of heat. Now, it does seem to me that this is a case deserving the favorable action of the Committee of the Whole, and my reason for not presenting it to the Committee on Appropriations is that their bill was reported earlier than I supposed it would be, and I had other matters to attend to.

Mr. SAYERS. I make the point of order that this is not authorized, and there is no law to authorize this appropriation which the gentleman from New Jersey seeks.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But, Mr. Chairman, I find that points of order are easily invoked against the poor laborer who gets about $600 a year and resides 200 miles from this Capitol, while they are not invoked against a man who has by resolution of this House been added to the Doorkeeper's force, and which is embraced in this bill on the fortieth page, by which he is paid for months of services he never rendered. Mr. Chairman, I had already debated my amendment, and I raise the counter point of order that the point of order is made too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] comes too late. If the Chair understood the gentleman from Texas his point of order was that the appropriation was not germane to this section of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. And the further point that there was no law authorizing it.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, if the gentleman makes that statement the Chair accepts it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want to know the grounds of the point of order. This man is employed by a law of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the point of order been decided?

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. BUCHANAN). Will the gentleman refer to the law under which this employé is now paid?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Of course I have not the law here.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not think the gentleman can find any such law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is in the regular legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply desires a reference to the law under which this employé is paid.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In the appropriations from year to year. He is not specified in the bill itself, but a lump sum is appropriated for carrying on the judicial part of the Government, and he is just as necessary a part in the judicial part of the Government in that respect as anybody else. He is not named in the bill. He is a part of the machinery——

The CHAIRMAN. What officer fixes the salary and by what authority?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am unable to state that. It is done in some of the Departments—undoubtedly the Treasury Department, because these buildings are under the supervision of that Department. But, of course, I am not informed as to these details. This is a poor man who has performed the service, and he ought to have this $50.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repayment to importers of excess of deposits: For payment of interest and costs to importers in claims on judgments and discontinued suits in custom cases and excess of deposits for unascertained duties, or duties or other moneys paid under protest, $250,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make the point of order against the paragraph just read. It is new legislation. I require the production of the statute authorizing it.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 12571) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL moved that the House adjourn, but withdrew the motion at the request of Mr. PERKINS.

BLACK BOB INDIANS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the sale of land allotted and patented to certain members of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

S. W. PEEL,
B. W. PERKINS,
JOHN M. ALLEN,
Managers on the part of the House.
JNO. W. DANIEL,
O. H. PLATT,
THOS. M. BOWEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conferees on the part of the House submitted the following statement:

The conferees on the part of the House submit the following statement to accompany their report upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the sale of land allotted and patented to certain members of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians:

The effect of the report as agreed to is to refer to a court of competent jurisdiction for final and equitable settlement the controversies that remain unsettled respecting the lands referred to.

The Senate amendments fully provide that all parties interested may be brought into court, and the rights of the Indians will be represented by the Attorney-General of the United States. The principles of law and equity are made applicable to the solution of the controversy, and an end of it is made practicable, and so far as known is satisfactory to all.

S. W. PEEL,
JOHN M. ALLEN,
B. W. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference reported was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I now renew the motion that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule a private bill of the following title was introduced and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. 12414) to amend section 2579 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill (H. R. 7066) providing for the establishment of a light-house at Heceta Head, or near the mouth of the Siuslaw River, in the State of Oregon, and not to exceed in cost the sum of $80,000, was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suggest that that bill lie on the table, as a similar bill has been reported from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate and is now on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL. If there is no objection, I would ask unanimous consent that it be considered at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It had better be referred. The safest way is to refer it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill lie on the table or be referred to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. MITCHELL. At the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, it can be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

The bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2816) to authorize the construction of a bridge for railway purposes across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, to be located north of and in the vicinity of the city of Alma, Wis.

The first amendment of the House of Representatives was, section 1, line 8, after the word "from," to strike out "the most feasible and accessible point between the city of Alma and the mouth of Beef Slough" and insert:

A point just north of the Beef Slough cut-off, in section 21, township No. 22 north, of range 13 west, of the fourth principal meridian, above the city of Alma.

So as to make the section read:

That the Soo and Southwestern Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, and its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain railway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, from a point just north of the Beef Slough cut-off, in section 21, township No. 22 north, of range 13 west, of the fourth principal meridian, above the city of Alma, in the county of Buffalo, Wisconsin, to and upon the west bank of said river, in the county of Wabasha, in the State of Minnesota: Provided, That Congress may at any time prescribe such rules and regulations in regard to toll and otherwise as may be deemed reasonable.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 3, after the word "within," to strike out "one year" and insert "two years;" and in the same line, before the word "years," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date thereof.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

COLLECTION DISTRICT OF TAMPA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1721) establishing a customs collection district in Florida, to be known as the collection district of Tampa, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in section 1, line 1, to strike out the words "collection of customs" and insert "customs collection;" so as to make the section read:

That a customs collection district be, and the same is hereby, established on the Gulf coast of the State of Florida, to be known as the collection district of Tampa.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 2, before the word "Key," to strike out "Anclothe" and insert "Anclote;" so as to make the section read:

That said district shall include the territory south of a line immediately north of Anclote Key light-house, running easterly across the peninsula to Indian River, and thence south to a point opposite to and north of Charlotte Harbor, and thence westerly across the peninsula to the coast north of Charlotte Harbor, and midway between Manatee Bay and Peace River and Charlotte Harbor.

Mr. PASCO. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

DIAMOND SHOAL LIGHT-HOUSE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1283) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina.

The first amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That a light-house be established on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina, at a cost not to exceed $500,000: Provided, That the contractors for doing this work shall be the lowest responsible bidders and best fitted by reason of skill and experience to do the work: And provided further, That payments shall be made therefor as the work progresses in the discretion of the Light-House Board, and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The next amendment was to amend the title so as to read:

An act for the erection of a light-house on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the original bill be read.

Mr. FRYE. I think that had better be referred to the Committee on Commerce. The item for Hatteras light is already in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I move that the amendments be referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That course is better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill, with the amendments, will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FOG-SIGNAL, OLD ORCHARD SHOAL, NEW YORK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3818) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at Old Orchard Shoal, in Princess Bay, New York; which were read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does the original bill read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the call for the reading, as I understand the Senator from Maine wishes to submit a motion.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the bill with the amendments be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS TENSAS RIVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3285) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tensas River, at or near Kirk's Ferry, Louisiana, which were, in section 1, line 7, before the word "Ferry" to strike out "Kirk's" and insert "Daniel's," and to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tensas River, at or near Daniel's Ferry, Louisiana."

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To attend the annual examination of the Naval Academy, under the act of February 14, 1879, the President pro tempore appoints Messrs. TELLER and BUTLER.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report by the Third Auditor of the allowance of three additional cases under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, since those reported to Congress January 17, 1889; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the United States surveyor-general for New Mexico on the private land claim in that Territory known as Arroyo Hondo tract, No. 159; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the United States surveyor-general for New Mexico on the private land claim in that Territory known as Christobal de la Serna, or Los Ranchos de Taos grant, No. 158; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CONDITION OF MARINI'S BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from W. B. Webb, president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 1st instant, the reports of the inspector of buildings and the inspector of plumbing of the District of Columbia, relative to the condition of Marini's building with respect to the life, health, and physical comfort of those occupying it; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12389) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Osage River, at some accessible point in the county of Benton, in the State of Missouri, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia, representing 600 members, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of C. S. Richmond and 34 others (17 voters and 18 women), citizens of Northfield, Vt., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. REAGAN. I present, by request, the petition of General Daniel Ruggles, of Fredericksburgh, Va., praying for an appropriation of $100,000 to be expended in developing his system of producing rainfall and resisting cyclones and tornadoes. I will mention that the petitioner, by a letter accompanying the petition, requests that a number of the petitions be printed. I present that request along with the petition, and ask the judgment of the President of the Senate as to the committee to which it should be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it should be appropriately referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the memorial of F. D. Shelden and 25 other citizens of Salem, Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of 633 citizens of the State of Iowa, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. DAVIS presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Winona, Minn., favoring the passage of the bill to open the Sioux Indian reservation to settlement; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of citizens of Massachusetts and a petition of members of the Congregational Church of North Abington, Mass., praying for the passage of a national Sunday-rest law; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of W. D. West and 38 other citizens of the Second Congressional district of Maryland, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DANIEL presented the petition of George W. Walford and other citizens of Virginia; the petition of N. W. Bowe and other citizens of Virginia; the petition of Mrs. D. Buchanan and other citizens of Virginia; the petition of William M. Southill and other citizens of Virginia, and the petition of T. W. Adams and other citizens of Virginia, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the officers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Virginia, representing 900 members, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DANIEL. I present the petition of A. R. Blakey and other citizens of Charlottesville, Va., praying for the passage of legislation putting express companies under the limitations of the interstate-commerce law. The petition is a brief one, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the petition which he presents may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I have habitually objected to putting these things into the RECORD, and I can not discriminate between Senators. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of 694 citizens of New York State, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5390) granting a pension to John Limeric;

A bill (H. R. 12062) granting an increase of pension to Frank Wolford;

A bill (H. R. 5398) granting a pension to Catherine Hays; and

A bill (H. R. 12540) to increase the pension of Theodore White.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3900) to authorize the Secretary of War to make a survey, plan, and estimate of the cost of constructing a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 157) correcting the military history of Robert McNutt, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of David A. Parkhurst, praying a correction of his military record, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 3990) correcting the military history of David A. Parkhurst; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3695) to amend section 555 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, direct me to report the same back adversely and recommend that it be indefinitely postponed, the Senate having passed a House bill accomplishing the same object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed indefinately.

Mr. FARWELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them adversely; and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (H. R. 11701) for the relief of the building and mutual loan associations of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 3643) for the relief of the building and mutual loan associations of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. STANFORD on the 11th instant, intended to be proposed to the Army appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12154) to regulate and license pawnbrokers in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. DANIEL. I am also instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12137) relating to the deposit of securities by insurance companies, to report it with an amendment. I ask that the amendment be read, and that the bill may be taken up and put on its passage.

Mr. ALLISON. If it will take no time I do not object.

Mr. HOAR. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects to the present consideration of the bill, and it will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10588) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the St. John's River, in the State of Florida, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11573) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Kentucky River, reported it with amendments.

Mr. VEST. I am also directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11649) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, and Platte County, in the State of Missouri, to report it without amendment.

I wish to call the attention of the Senators from Kansas to the fact that that bill identically passed the Senate some three weeks since and went to the other House. It was there put upon the table, and now the House of Representatives sends us back the same measure as a House bill. I simply call attention to the fact so that it can be taken up. It has already been passed upon by the Committee on Commerce and by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3951) to establish a railway bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within 5 miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within 5 miles of Kampsville, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois, reported it with amendments.

Mr. VEST. I am also directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12059) to authorize the construction of a bridge or bridges across the Mississippi River at La Crosse, Wis., to report it with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

This bill has passed both Houses of Congress and has been in the hands of the President for the last nine days—identically the bill which comes back now from the House of Representatives. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2201) for the relief of Laura E. Maddox, widow and executrix, and Robert Morrison, executor of Joseph H. Maddox, deceased, together with the President's message returning said bill to the Senate with his objections, to report the same back to the Senate, and recommend its passage, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding; and I submit an accompanying report. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12383) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TELEGRAPHIC FACILITIES IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 137) providing for additional telegraphic facilities in the city of Washington during the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1889, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to permit the Western Union Telegraph Company to extend overhead wires into the Pension building and to such points along the line of parade as shall be deemed by the chief marshal convenient for use in connection with the parade and other inaugural ceremonies, the said wires to be taken down within one week after the conclusion of the ceremonies on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1889.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3991) granting a pension to William H. Lyons; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

JOHN W. JOHNSTON.

Mr. DANIEL. I offer the following resolution:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary pay to John W. Johnston the sum of $2,889.87 out of the contingent fund of the Senate, in full of his pay and mileage as Senator from Virginia in the Forty-first Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred under the rules to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is just about to rise, is familiar with the principle and practice upon which the resolution is based.

Mr. HOAR. I think it had better go over.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution under the rules will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

AUDITED CLAIMS.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of all claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those already transmitted to Congress during the present session, and also a list of judgments of the Court of Claims requiring an appropriation at the present session not already transmitted, said list to extend to and include February 25, 1889.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which was before the Senate yesterday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the Senate to proceed——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia rise to morning business?

Mr. DANIEL. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts had previously risen. If there be no further morning business that order is closed and the Calendar under Rule VIII being in order the Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate alleged election outrages in certain States.

Mr. HARRIS. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not subject to debate.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts to allow the bill for the payment to the State of Florida of expenses incurred in suppressing Indian hostilities to be taken up. I do not think there will be any discussion upon it.

Mr. HOAR. I am very sorry to deny a request of the always courteous Senator from Florida, but I have already intimated to another Senator equally courteous, the Senator from Rhode Island, that I can not consent to any business until this resolution shall be passed. I hope, however, that the resolution may be adopted at once, and then other matters can be taken up.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent to be heard on the motion. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. REAGAN. I had intended submitting some remarks on the resolution already pending in regard to alleged outrages in Washington County, Texas, and if the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me I should like to make my observations upon that resolution before the other takes its place.

Mr. HOAR. What is the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. REAGAN. I suggested that I had intended to make some remarks upon the resolution in relation to alleged outrages in Washington County, Texas, and if agreeable to the Senator I should like to make them on that resolution before this one comes up.

Mr. HOAR. That resolution is the unfinished business at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That resolution will be the unfinished business at 2 o'clock.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand that the Senator from Tennessee demands the yeas and nays on the motion to take up the resolution or on the resolution itself?

Mr. HARRIS. Upon the motion to take it up was my demand for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who by business is detained from the Chamber. I withhold my vote.

Mr. BROWN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. FRYE (when Mr HALE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HALE] is detained at home by sickness, and he is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I shall consider that no further announcement of the pair will be necessary for the day.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES] is at home sick. He is usually paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BERRY. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York withdraws his vote.

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN]. I do not see him present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I have heard no pair announced for the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I was under the impression that he was paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. RANSOM. No, sir; he has a standing pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. HARRIS. That is all right. I was laboring under a mistake.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allison,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Quay,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt,	Teller,
Davis,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.

NAYS—26.

Bate,	Eustis,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Turpie,
Butler,	George,	Morgan,	Vest,
Call,	Gibson,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Gray,	Ransom,
Daniel,	Hampton,	Reagan,

ABSENT—22.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Sherman,
Beck,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Hale,	Palmer,	Vance,
Blodgett,	Hearst,	Payne,	Walthall.
Brown,	Hiscock,	Riddleberger,
Chace,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sabin,

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. HOAR February 20, 1889, as heretofore amended, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to inquire whether in any State the free and lawful expression of the will of the people in the election of members of the Fifty-first Congress and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the election of members of State Legislatures who have elected or are to elect Senators of the United States who may claim seats during said Congress, and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the choice of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States in 1888 and declaring the result thereof, has been prevented by violence, intimidation, bribery or other unlawful use of money, fraud, or other crime.

Also, whether the laws governing such elections in any States have been so framed or administered as to accomplish or permit the defeat of the will of the people in such elections.

Also, to inquire into the facts of the recent election in the State of Louisiana, held on the 17th day of April, 1888, at which there was chosen a Legislature which has since elected two United States Senators.

And said committee shall also inquire whether there were in connection with the aforesaid election illegalities, frauds, false canvasses, and false returns, so extensive and systematic in their character as to show that there existed on the part of the various State election officers a deliberate plan to apparently carry said election without regard to the votes actually cast, and to choose a governor and other State officers and a State Legislature by such illegal, false, and fraudulent means, and if so, whether said Legislature was actually and duly elected by the people of Louisiana, or was in fact substantially the creation solely of the returning and canvassing officers, and whether said State of Louisiana has a republican form of government, including a Legislature entitled to choose United States Senators, and to provide methods for the appointment of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Maryland——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Maryland as entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Maryland to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. ALLISON. If this resolution can be voted upon this morning without debate, I shall yield of course for such a vote.

Mr. MORGAN. That can not be done.

Mr. ALLISON. I feel compelled to ask the Senator from Massachusetts to allow me to have the resolution laid aside informally that I may call up the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. I am disposed to defer to the Senator from Maryland in regard to that matter. I understand the Senator had not concluded his remarks when the Senate passed from this subject yesterday. If the Senator proposes to continue his remarks, I do not know whether he would prefer to finish them before the appropriation bill is taken up or to yield now. I shall do whatever the Senator from Maryland prefers.

Mr. GORMAN. I will say to the Senators from Massachusetts and Iowa that the resolution of course can not pass without quite an extended debate, and I rose for the purpose of moving to postpone its consideration until to-morrow, with the view of calling up the bill H. R. 9623, being an act to provide for printing Government securities in the highest style of art, in pursuance of the notice that I gave yesterday. But I will give way, as a matter of course, to the Senator from Iowa to proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I ask that the resolution be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution having been taken up by a vote of the Senate, the Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that it may be informally laid aside to enable him to move the consideration of the pending unfinished appropriation bill. If there be no objection, the appropriation bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. HISCOCK to add an additional section to the bill.

Mr. HOAR. The amendment introduced by the Senator from New York was voted upon under a call of the yeas and nays last night, but the call disclosed no quorum, and I suppose the matter is now open, under the usages of the Senate, for further debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold that under the unbroken usage of the Senate when upon a call of the roll the absence of a quorum is disclosed, it is no roll-call, as if there had been no response. Therefore the question is open to debate.

Mr. HOAR. Then I desire the attention of the Senate for a moment to say that this matter having been reported from the Committee on the Centennial, and having been unanimously passed by the Senate formerly as a separate measure, it was not deemed necessary by the members of that committee to make to the Committee on Appropriations such full explanation of the purpose of the proposed amendment as otherwise would have been proper and desirable, and I think the Committee on Appropriations came to an unfavorable decision upon it without in some particulars being aware of the purpose of those who had framed the pending amendment. On the other hand, there having been no such conference, the friends of the amendment did not have the benefit of such suggestions as the great experience of the Committee on Appropriations would have enabled them to make before it was introduced in the Senate.

I understand from what has occurred in the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations have some anxiety on two points; first, that there may not be time to extend a suitable invitation to the governments of the other American nations to enable them to reach here at or about the time proposed, early in the next session of Congress; and next, that there may be some proposition lurking in this amendment, or possible, at any rate, if it is adopted, in regard to some junketing or banqueting or other matter of that kind which would be out of taste and meet the disapprobation of the people.

An amendment has been drawn which removes both those objections, and which I hope will meet the approbation of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and his colleagues on that committee. Indeed, it has been drawn, I may say, on their suggestion.

The main thing which is desired to be accomplished by the amendment is that at some time during this centennial year the two Houses of Congress shall take an appropriate and dignified notice of this event, the greatest event in American history, and the failure to do it, it being the habit of our people both in the nation and in the States and in towns to commemorate in some way such anniversaries, would, I think we all agree, be deemed a marked and significant omission by the American people.

The other thing which I think all the committee and the Senate desire is that the Chief-Justice of the United States, the great representative and authority of the constitutional law of this country by reason of his great office, should be invited to deliver an address on that occasion before the two Houses of Congress.

This amendment accomplishes those two things, and I believe when it has been read it will meet with no objection in the Senate. I therefore move as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New York what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the first word "That" in the amendment, and to insert in lieu of the matter stricken out:

In order that the centennial anniversary of the inauguration of the first President of the United States, George Washington, may be duly commemorated, Tuesday, the 30th day of April, A. D. 1889, is hereby declared to be a national holiday throughout the United States. And in further commemoration of this historic event, the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on the second Wednesday of December, A. D. 1889, when suitable ceremonies shall be had under the direction of a joint committee composed of five Senators and five Representatives, members of the Fifty-first Congress, who shall be appointed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses. And said joint committee shall have power to sit during the recess of Congress; and it shall be its duty to make arrangements for the celebration in the Hall of the House of Representatives on the second Wednesday of December next, and may invite to be present thereat such officers of the United States and of the respective States of the Union, and (through the Secretary of State) representatives of foreign governments. The committee shall invite the Chief-Justice of the United States to deliver a suitable address on the occasion. And for the purpose of defraying the expenses of said joint committee and of carrying out the arrangements which it may make, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, as to the suggestion there about making the day mentioned a holiday throughout the country, does the Senator think that it is important to keep that in the proposition? We have already some holidays, and if we look at the condition of Italy and other countries that are almost worn out with a cessation of labor by a large number of holidays, it seems to me we need not provide for quitting the ordinary business of the country, because we have already some holidays and perhaps as many as ought to be imposed on the people of this country.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will observe that this is not made a permanent holiday, but only for this one year, and there is to be a great celebration in New York City on that day, and I hope there will be celebrations elsewhere in the country.

Mr. REAGAN. My remarks do not apply, then. I thought it was to make it a permanent holiday.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question was put on the amendment as amended, and it was declared to be agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Is the amendment upon which the Senate adjourned yesterday evening disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is this amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. The yeas and nays were ordered upon that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understood, but the Chair understood that the call was withdrawn.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not aware of the call having been withdrawn, and I want the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks that on this question the yeas and nays be entered on the Journal.

Mr. HOAR. On the substitute, or the final vote?

Mr. HARRIS. I refer to the amendment on which the Senate adjourned last night, appropriating $300,000 for this celebration.

Mr. HOAR. That has been modified, so that the question now comes up on that amendment as amended by the adoption of the substitute just read, which appropriates but $3,000.

Mr. HARRIS. That is a substitute for the amendment pending last night?

Mr. HOAR. That is a substitute for that amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not demand the yeas and nays on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The demand for the yeas and nays is withdrawn. The amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 7, on page 15:

For furnishing, delivering, and laying 2½ nautical miles of new submarine telegraph cable to connect Cape Flattery with Tatoosh Island; also for the construction or repair of the necessary land connections so as to secure uninterrupted telegraphic communication between Tatoosh Island and the commercial telegraph systems of the country, the sum of $6,300, to be immediately available.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment. It is not reported by any committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to the chairman of the committee that this amendment was originally referred to the Committee on Commerce, and on the 19th of February was reported back by that committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; so that it is in order as far as that is concerned. If the chairman of the committee will hear me a few moments, I think I can satisfy him it ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator forward the original print to the desk?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It appears by the indorsement upon the amendment that it was referred to the Committee on Commerce, reported on the 19th instant, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The point of order therefore is not well taken. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, I will say a word with reference to the amendment. This proposes to renew a submarine cable between Tatoosh Island and Cape Flattery. In 1883 that cable was provided for and was constructed and was in operation from that time until in January, 1887, when it broke down. It was then repaired by the Signal Office at an expense of about $1,000. It was continued and was operated until December, 1887, when it again broke down. It was again repaired and continued to be operated until December of last year, 1888, when it again gave way. The matter was called to my attention by persons engaged in shipping on Puget Sound and elsewhere, and also by the Signal Office, and I have a communication from that office. On this the Committee on Commerce reported this amendment. The original papers were mislaid and I this morning have received duplicates from General Greely, Chief Signal Officer, accompanying the same with this letter, which I will read:

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 22, 1889.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to your personal application, I send you herewith a duplicate of the telegram previously forwarded to you, which shows that after five years' work on a rocky, stormy, and unfavorable coast, the Tatoosh Island cable has not only failed, but that the sea end is completely gone. Six or seven hundred dollars have been spent in repairs during the past year, and now the officer reports that it is not worth the further expenditure of money to repair the present cable. This opinion is concurred in by the Chief Signal Officer, from his personal knowledge of the money spent and of the great difficulties attending the repair of a cable on such a barren, rocky coast. The only recourse is the purchase of a new cable or the abandoning of the line to Tatoosh Island with the main line of this service, which connects the light-house at Tatoosh Island with Port Angeles, and thus renders impossible reports of wrecks and orders for assistance to vessels in distress at or near Cape Flattery.

I am, very respectfully, yours,
A. W. GREELY, Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL, United States Senate.

The communication heretofore sent, which was mislaid, is as follows:

[Subject: Tatoosh Island cable.]

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 4, 1889.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your communication of the 1st instant, received this a. m., I have the honor to submit herewith, as requested, an estimate for the proposed amendment to the sundry civil bill providing for a new telegraph cable and the necessary work on the land connections to put the Tatoosh Island line in proper working order.

In this connection I would state that the old cable was laid in 1883, and that it failed for the first time in January, 1887, due to the wearing away of the armor wires from hafing against the rocky bottom during the frequent and heavy storms on that coast. Repairs were made with great difficulty, and costing about $1,000. The second break in the cable occurred in December of the same year, and from the same causes. This also was repaired at considerable expense; but it became evident that the cable could not last much longer, and that if replaced by a new one, a heavier armor would have to be provided to suit the conditions of that locality. The last break occurred in December, 1888, and while an inexpensive attempt was made to repair the damage, it was found impossible to do anything with the worn-out pieces, and the cable has, therefore, not been in operation since.

I inclose herewith a copy of my last annual report, inviting your attention to the marked paragraph on page 23 relative to this subject.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
A. W. GREELY, Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Since that letter was written a copy of the telegram was transmitted to me, received by the Chief Signal Officer from the officer of the Signal Service at Ashland, Oregon, which reads as follows:

[Telegram.]

ASHLAND, OREGON, February 15, 1889.

To SIGNAL OFFICER, Washington:

All efforts to repair Tatoosh cable have utterly failed. Cable is completely gone and not worth further expenditure of money.

SWIFT, Lieutenant.

I have other documents in support of the proposition, and ask their insertion in the RECORD.

The papers are as follows:

[Subject: Tatoosh Island cable.]

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 4, 1889.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 1st instant, I have the honor to submit the following estimate:

"For furnishing, delivering, and laying 2½ nautical miles of new submarine telegraph cable, to connect Cape Flattery with Tatoosh Island, also for the construction or repair of the necessary land connections, so as to secure uninterrupted telegraph communication between Tatoosh Island and the commercial telegraph systems of the country, the sum of $6,300, to be immediately available."

And in connection therewith to say that the wording of the estimate as submitted above must be insisted on, as otherwise, especially if the portion in regard to land connections is omitted, the office will be much embarrassed and the Government placed at the mercy of private corporations, who may control the approaches to the cable.

It should be immediately available, as it will take several months to obtain this cable.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
A. W. GREELY, Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

[Subject: Tatoosh Island cable.]

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 16, 1889.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In connection with my letter of the 4th instant, inclosing an estimate for a new telegraph cable for the Tatoosh Island line, I have the honor to say that, in order to leave nothing undone to restore communication with the island through the old cable until an appropriation for a new one should have become available, another attempt has been made to recover and repair the broken cable from the mainland to Tatoosh Island. The result of this last attempt is shown in a telegram just received from the officer in charge of the line, and of which the following is a copy, namely:

"ASHLAND, OREGON, February 15, 1889.

"To the CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
"Washington, D. C.:

"All efforts to repair Tatoosh cable have utterly failed. Cable is completely gone and not worth further expenditure of money.

"SWIFT, Lieutenant."

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
A. W. GREELY, Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

[Estimate.]

Two and one-half nautical miles of cable, domestic manufacture, at $2,200 per mile, makes $5,500; necessary land connections, $800.

For furnishing, delivering, and laying 2½ nautical miles of new submarine telegraph cable, to connect Cape Flattery with Tatoosh Island; also for the construction or repair of the necessary land connections so as to secure uninterrupted telegraphic communication between Tatoosh Island and the commercial telegraph systems of the country, the sum of $6,300, to be immediately available.

I will say one word further. All the shipping, both coastwise and foreign, that comes into Puget Sound, of course comes in and goes out past this island. The light-house is there and the signal officer has been stationed there for a number of years. In 1887 there were over four thousand vessels that went in and out there, and I think perhaps two or three times as many now.

I hope the amendment will be adopted. It is a very important matter.

Mr. ALLISON. The information now presented by the Senator from Oregon, like the cable itself, was lost, and therefore the committee had no opportunity of investigating the subject. I do not object to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless some amendment be reserved the question will be taken on concurring in gross in all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VEST. I want to reserve one amendment for action in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indicate the page?

Mr. VEST. I have not a copy of the bill before me, but it is the amendment for the purchase of additional ground for the Public Printing Office, about which we had some discussion the other day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Section 3, the Chair understands. Are there further reservations? As the Chair recalls the understanding, there was unanimous consent that the amendments concerning the plate-printing should be reserved for a separate vote in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. That was suggested by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but he afterwards told me personally that he would not insist upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then, if there be no objection, all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except the one reserved by the Senator from Missouri, will be regarded as concurred in in the Senate. The Secretary will state the reserved amendment.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agreed to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 3. That in order to provide additional accommodations for the Government Printing Office, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Architect of the Capitol Extension, acting as a board, be, and they are hereby, empowered and instructed to acquire, as hereinafter provided, the several parcels of real estate embodied in square No. 624 of the city of Washington, lying east of a 20-foot alley running from G street to H street, and bounded by H street on the north, G street on the south, North Capitol street on the east, and said named 20-foot alley on the west; said parcels being divided east and west by Jackson alley, and intersected in part by a 14-foot alley, running from G street to Jackson alley; said real estate now in part being occupied by the Government Printing Office. And for the purpose of acquiring said square, or any part thereof, a sum sufficient to pay the cost thereof is hereby appropriated. And when said real estate shall be acquired, said board may direct that the 14-foot alley, running from G street to Jackson alley, shall be closed and used for the aforesaid purposes.

That for the purpose of acquiring said real estate the said board may purchase the same, or any part thereof, from the owner or owners; and if the said board shall be unable so to purchase the same, or any part or parts thereof, at a price that, in their opinion, is reasonable, they may take proceedings for the condemnation thereof in the manner provided for in section 2 of this act.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, when this matter was under discussion the other day in Committee of the Whole I raised a point of order that this amendment did not come from any regular committee, nor was it in the Book of Estimates, nor was it recommended by the head of a Department or any public officer. I understood the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to state that the Public Printer in his report had asked for this appropriation in order to purchase this ground. Upon examination I find that the Public Printer has not done so. It will be seen that this is an appropriation of from at least $180,000 to $200,000 to purchase a large amount of ground adjoining the present site of the Public Printing Office. In the report of the Public Printer for 1888 I find the following:

In the proper place, I shall ask for an appropriation for this purpose—

That is, to put additional storage-rooms to the Public Printing Office.

What is demanded is a storage building, of sufficient capacity, erected adjoining the present building containing the bindery, and properly connected with it.

In the proper place, I shall ask for an appropriation for this purpose, and I trust Congress will not fail to grant it, as well as make provision for appraising and condemning such private property as may be necessary to provide a site for the same.

That was simply for a building for storage, and in accordance with that statement here was his recommendation as to an appropriation:

Purchase of site and erection of additional storage building adjoining office, $50,000.

Now, it goes without saying that that is not the recommendation which is contained in this amendment. That was simply to provide a storage building to cost $50,000, and now it is proposed by this amendment to buy all the remainder of that block adjoining the Public Printing Office, the cost of which will amount at the very lowest estimate to $180,000, and in my judgment it will go to $200,000 or $250,000 the minute it is known that the Government needs that property.

We were also told by my friend from Maryland—who stated to me that I had no personal knowledge on this subject and that he had—that the data would show that this appropriation was necessary in order to remove the dangerous condition of the present building. Now, I want to read in the last report of the Public Printer what he says:

The lack of proper space in the office is also of great importance in connection with the health and comfort of the employés. In some of the divisions artificial lighting is required daily, and this, in summer, renders the heat intolerable, and the eye-sight and general health of many employés suffer in consequence. The near proximity of the office stables and those of adjoining property-owners, as well as the filthy condition of adjacent alleys and rows of tenements, add to the general unhealthiness of the office, due to the malarious neighborhood in which it is built, and calls, as a matter of humanity, for the early adoption of plans for the erection of a new and capacious building in another and more convenient locality for the purpose of the public printing.

We heard a very pathetic and eloquent appeal from my friend the other day in behalf of the employés in the Printing Office, so eloquent and so pathetic that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] offered a resolution instructing the Architect of the Capitol to inquire into the condition of that building and make immediate repairs in order to remove this dangerous condition; and now the very report to which we were referred as a recommendation of this appropriation says that the malarious condition of that neighborhood is such as to endanger the lives of the employés; and yet we are asked to buy the remainder of the block in the very same neighborhood.

I think there is no locality in the city of Washington so objectionable for a public building as that where the Government Printing Office is now located, and notwithstanding the statement of the Public Printer that the malaria there is such as to endanger the health of the employés, we are asked now to buy the remainder of the block, and notwithstanding the fact that he never asked but for $50,000 not only for the site but for the building, both included, we are asked now to buy ground amounting to $180,000 or $200,000, I believe to $250,000, and to erect, not an additional storage building, but an addition to the Printing Office, the whole cost of which will amount, as I have not the least doubt, to nearly a million dollars. I have gone now to the very authority cited by the Senator from Maryland, and it does not sustain his argument or his position.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that on this question, one of so much importance to the individuals employed in the Government Printing Office and to the Government itself, there should be any feeling whatever exhibited simply because the proposition happened to be considered for the past four years by the Committee on Public Printing and not by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I do not think the whole question is broader than that.

The Joint Committee on Public Printing, including three of the members of this body who have been acting upon that committee for years past, have believed that under the law everything relating to the conduct of the public printing, the building, the repairs necessary, the additions that might become necessary, was directly under their jurisdiction, and I do not think I am mistaken when I say that universally they have so acted, and in no case have they ever thought it necessary or proper to refer their recommendations to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

For one, as the minority member of the Printing Committee, I should have been delighted if my friend from Missouri and the other members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had taken this matter into consideration and ascertained what was necessary in relation to it and made proper provision for it. As they have failed to do so, as they have never thought it was their duty up to this hour to do it, the Committee on Printing have gone on to discharge what they believed to be a public duty.

When the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration a year ago the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who was the Democratic member in charge of the bill and whose attention had been called to this matter, requested me, and I think my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], to go to the Printing Office and confer with the Public Printer and ascertain what was necessary to be done. We performed that duty and came back and formulated the exact provision that is now proposed to be put in this bill. It was presented to this body by the Committee on Appropriations upon the recommendation of the Committee on Public Printing, and so far as I know no member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds thought that we were exceeding our duty or interfering in the slightest degree with their prerogatives. It is away beyond that to-day, sir. It is a question whether Congress shall take action and furnish ample room and ample provision for the public printing. It is a question, as I have said and as I read and presented from the report of the Public Printer, whether we shall make provision to protect the people who are employed in that building now where their lives are in jeopardy unless he interferes with the public affairs by removing from this old building the immense weight that is put upon it. I make no mistake about his statement; I read it to the Senate, and it is contained in that document. It is true he does not make a specific recommendation for the construction of a new building, as his predecessor had done, but I state upon my responsibility as a Senator and as a member of the Committee on Printing, and also of the Committee on Appropriations, that in my judgment no more urgent case has been presented to the Senate than the one now under consideration.

If there are others who, upon a mere technicality, and because of some supposed slight to a committee, will take the responsibility of defeating this appropriation and jeopardizing the business interests of the Government and the health and welfare of the people employed at the Printing Office, let them take this responsibility; I have discharged my duty.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland shall not introduce a false issue into this controversy. I made no point as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I think and repeat now, as he has brought the subject up again, that this appropriation ought to have gone to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. But that is not the point which I make to-day. He, the other day, as a member of the Committee on Printing, who had taken charge of this matter, stated that the Public Printer recommended the purchase of this ground adjoining the site of the present Public Printing Office. I go back now to his recommendation, and I find that the only thing the Public Printer ever asked was an expenditure of $50,000 to put up a storage place, not an addition to the Printing Office, but a place in which to store paper and type and other material, and here we have an appropriation contemplated of nearly $1,000,000 without any recommendation on the part of the Public Printer.

Again, the Senator says that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has not done its duty by failing to recommend an additional building for the public printing or because it has never taken that question up; and yet the Senator in his argument the other day, if I remember it correctly, said that the Committee on Printing had taken charge of this matter and that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had nothing to do with it. To-day he shifts his ground and says that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has not done its duty because it has not made a recommendation of the appropriation contemplated in this pending amendment.

Mr. President, there is no question here about danger to human life unless it be in the statements made by the Public Printer as to the malaria. He does state in his report of 1888 that he wants additional storage room because the paper and the type piled up in the Public Printing Office made some of the floors insecure, and he proceeds to ask for an appropriation of $50,000, and that is the whole of his recommendation. But he does state in his last report of 1889 that the present site of the Printing Office is so unhealthy by reason of malaria as to endanger the health of the employés; and yet my friend who is so solicitous for the health and comfort and safety of the employés in that office wants us now to expend a million dollars to put up an additional building in that same unhealthy and malarious locality, the worst in the city of Washington.

As a matter of course I do not expect to defeat this appropriation, backed as it is by the weight of the Committee on Appropriations, with the Senate numerically in its present conditions; but I want to call public attention to the statements of the Public Printer and to the facts in order that this amendment may be defeated in another place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, in view of the statement just made by my friend from Missouri I wish to state precisely what the Public Printer does say. I read it some days ago. He says:

The condition of the H street wing of the office—

That is the whole front on H street, the entire length of the building, being the original building purchased by the Government from Cornelius Wendell, constructed by private parties—

The condition of the H street wing of the office, as to its capacity to carry the weight to which it is subjected in its present crowded condition, has been a source of daily anxiety during the past year, and I have frequently felt impelled to order the discontinuance of labor and the removal of work awaiting completion, in order to relieve the floor from the dangerous accumulation of weight upon it, which threatened the lives of the employés and the safety of the property under my charge.

I do not know how the Public Printer could have penned a stronger recommendation than that.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator from Maryland if, in the same report and in connection with the very thing he has read, the Public Printer does not ask for an appropriation of $50,000 only to purchase a site and put up a building, and here this contemplates an appropriation involving finally about a million dollars.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, Mr. President, and this matter has been here for consideration often before, and the opposition of gentlemen who do not want to make ample provision for this office has resulted in the construction of one or two little storerooms and a small addition to the present establishment, all of which are found inadequate now; and the Public Printer, I take it, looking at the action of Congress last year on this very bill, where the Senate made provision for an entire and complete structure, or rather the purchase of ground to begin it, to make the Printing Office what it ought to be, a fire-proof building, and it failed to become a law, became discouraged, and with a view of temporarily preserving the lives and the health of persons employed there has made a specific recommendation only for temporary relief.

Mr. VEST. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I ask him now if he thinks that Congress in the teeth of the statement just made in the report of 1889 by the Public Printer that this vicinity, this site which is proposed to be purchased, is unhealthy and malarious and dangerous to the health of the employés, ought to make this purchase?

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I am not going into the question of the sanitary condition of that section of the city. The location of the office where it is may have been unfortunate, but it is there, and nobody in Congress or out of Congress in my judgment would think of attempting to erect an independent building in another section of the city and to abandon that immense affair, which we have constructed at a cost of a million dollars; and, besides that, the operatives in this great establishment, men who get from a dollar and a half to four dollars a day, have their little homes in that section. They have located there. It has become a permanent affair to them, and they evidently do not think, as they reside in that section, that it is unhealthy. They live there and have their work near to their doors.

Now, the only practical thing for Congress to do is to make provision to acquire enough property to enlarge the building and put up one that is fire-proof and that will be well ventilated and will have plenty of light, and to have it so constructed that we may have two sets of engines and two sets of machinery, as every private establishment in the country conducted upon any great scale would have, so that if an accident should occur to one the whole work of the Government would not stop.

That is the best judgment of gentlemen who have served upon the Committee on Printing and who have examined the question; and I think my friend from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] will concur in that opinion in a general way. Nobody has dissented from it either in the House of Representatives or among those who have served upon the Committee on Public Printing in the Senate.

So far as I am concerned, I do not want to spend a dollar of the public money unless it is for some great public purpose; but I say that we have voted and my friend from Missouri and I both vote constantly for appropriations three times as much that will not produce half the results both to human happiness and for the promotion of the best interests of the Government that this will do.

Mr. VEST. I simply want to read again, in answer to the Senator from Maryland, to put myself entirely in an accurate position as to this whole matter, because no one is more anxious than myself to provide proper accommodations for these employés, what the highest authority on this subject says, and that is the Public Printer himself. This is from his report of 1889:

The near proximity of the office stables and those of adjoining property-owners, as well as the filthy condition of adjacent alleys and rows of tenements—

I suppose those are the quiet, cleanly domestic establishments of the employés—add to the general unhealthiness of the office—

Now mark this language—

due to the malarious neighborhood in which it is built, and calls as a matter of humanity for the early adoption of plans for the erection of a new and capacious building in another and more convenient locality for the purpose of the public printing.

Not that it is proposed to buy this ground, but away from it. Now, sir, I may be pardoned, and must be, as I was told the other day that I had no personal knowledge of this matter, if I turn to the recommendations of the officer at the head of the bureau. If his statements are not to be relied upon, then I am at sea and simply must vote as the committee tells me.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I do not take much stock in any man's opinion as to healthful or unhealthful points in this city. I think they are all about the same, and I think this subject of malaria, etc., is greatly exaggerated. I believe a person, with due precaution and observance of the laws of health and life, can enjoy as much health in the District of Columbia as he can anywhere else. Every indiscretion, every late hour, and every excess is charged up to malaria in this District, especially by physicians when they do not know what else to assign it to; and I am disposed to set down the Public Printer's estimate of the sanitary condition of the locality of the Government Printing Office at about the same rate and value.

I did not rise, however, merely for the purpose of saying this. I care not whether this question is considered by one committee of Congress or another. It is a matter of small importance whether the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or the Committee on Public Printing shall pay proper attention to this subject. I take it that either one of these committees would do right on the subject whenever it took jurisdiction of it. I would say that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds would be a very proper committee if they had taken hold of the matter and were disposed to push it forward. For the reason that the Committee on Public Printing has taken charge of the matter, I shall support them in their jurisdiction.

Mr. President, I have been in the Government Printing Office quite often, and I was never in it in my life that I did not feel a sense of discomfort, apprehension, and anxiety. A low, dark, unsafe, rambling building with twenty-five hundred people in it is what the observer contemplates on going there, which is no more fire-proof than a rick of straw under a high wind on the plains. One of the most important functions to be performed in that Government Printing Office is by the watchmen. The watchmen, with the vigilance that admits of no relaxation at all, have to tread the floors every moment of the night-time and of the daytime in view of the possibilities of fire. It is not a tall building, and perhaps there would not be much of a holocaust if a fire should take place. Young, active men would get out from there, and perhaps some old women, eking out a subsistence, might be lost in a calamity of that sort, and I understood the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], in the kindness of his heart, to suggest it would not burn more than a dozen or two. Perhaps not.

But, Mr. President, it is a disgrace to our civilization that the tremendous work of the Government printing is carried on in that dark, low, uncomfortable-looking building. Laboring people ought to have some cheerful surroundings. They ought to have some access to sunlight and to air; they ought to have an opportunity to see the world outside and see the blue sky and see the trees in bloom and blossom, instead of being immured in comparatively a dungeon.

The amount of work to be done is accumulating rapidly. Resort has been had to the report of the Public Printer, for whom I have the highest possible respect and whose efficiency in the management of this office has stood and will stand for years to come the most censorious criticism. He makes some statements here which have not been produced, which I will submit to the Senate. He says:

The public printing is also increased year by year by the creation of new bureaus, commissions, and adjuncts of the public service by acts of Congress. This growth must naturally go on, for as the country increases in wealth and population the Government printing must increase with it.

It seems as if some men were prone to remember the time when this Government had 40,000,000 people and can not think of it now as a Government of 65,000,000. They seem to attach their veneration to a period which we have outgrown, to a period when we wore swaddling clothes instead of being clothed now as a giant.

The Public Printer proceeds to say:

Larger appropriations are absolutely demanded to meet this inevitable growth of the public printing. It is a mechanical impossibility for the office to further increase its daily average of work under the present rate of appropriations and with the present facilities and space.

While the increase of printing goes on the Public Printer says it is a mechanical impossibility to increase the daily average of the work of that office with the present appropriations and the present space.

The limit of capacity—

He says—

has been reached in the folding and binding divisions, and each is entirely unequal, with the present floor space, to the task of handling the full amount of work which is daily sent up from the press-room.

What a picture is this! "The limit of capacity has been reached," and here we stand debating, with a great flood-tide of printing, increased day by day and week by week and month by month and year by year, and yet knowing that the limit of capacity has been reached in several divisions of this Government Printing Office beyond which they can not go! He continues:

The folding-room is so much embarrassed for want of working space and storage room, that it is necessary to transport daily many tons of printed matter to storage-rooms half a mile distant, and to handle the same with trucks and elevators, merely as a temporary expedient for relief, while presses have daily stood idle in the press-room, with work awaiting them, simply through the inability of other divisions of the office to handle their full product. The bindery is scarcely able to meet the current demand upon its facilities, while a large amount of delayed work of former years is still in arrears.

This condition of affairs has been called to the attention of Congress year after year, and it must now be said that the demand for additional space for certain divisions of the office has grown so imperative that the remedy can not be longer postponed without still greater embarrassment of the public service. The exigency calls for the erection of a temporary building, with the utmost speed, adjoining the main office, until plans and means can be provided for the provision of a proper and capacious building.

There is more of this that I might read and would but for the condition of my throat and lungs. I have read enough, however, and I have seen more with my own eyes to satisfy me of the necessity of early and energetic action on this subject.

As to the location of this building, I would as soon see it constructed there as any place else if the property can be purchased at proper rates. There is something in what the Senator from Missouri says that if it is known we are to purchase that ground prices will be placed upon it with a view to get all the money the owners can out of the Government. It might be well to fix an alternative, as we did when we purchased the property for the Library building and made a good purchase by having the alternative right under the law to purchase one piece of property or another. Perhaps something of that kind would be well here. But as to the general object, I know nothing connected with the service of the Government in Washington City more imperative than the construction of a new Government building for the Public Printing Office. It is suggested in my hearing by Senators about me that the condemnation proceedings contemplated by the amendment will protect against any exorbitant or improper price. That may be so, and I trust that it will be so.

In regard to the question of economy with reference to public buildings, I will simply say that if an inquirer on that subject goes over this city he will be utterly amazed to find how much of the Government work is done in improper, imperfect, unheathful, dark, and dismal places. He will be surprised at the amount of rents we are paying all over this city. With the magnificent structure known as the State, War, and Navy Department building, if it was all given to the War Office it would not more than accommodate the archives of that one Department of this Government. The consequence is that there is a locality all around that building inhabited by Army officers and employés of the War Department and the Navy Department, and in some instances I believe of the State Department, for which the Government is paying more rent annually than it would take to construct proper buildings for the service of which I am speaking. So, take the Post-office Department, and you will find the same; and yet, whenever it is proposed to erect a proper building, a reputation for economy is sought to be made by opposing the payment of money which would purchase for the Government proper accommodations, while nothing is said about the improvident, wasteful, and extravagant habit of paying large amounts for the rent of buildings that we have no claim upon after the rent is paid.

We are paying for rents year after year more money than would purchase in a few short years all the space that we need; and now when a proposition comes up to appropriate one hundred or one hundred and fifty or two hundred or two hundred and fifty thousand dollars—I care not how much—to make a proper place for the hard and overworked men in the employment of this Government in the Government Printing Office, I have no hesitation in declaring that it ought to be done and done at once, and the sooner the better.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Indiana refers to me when he speaks of there being persons who can not recognize the fact that this Government has grown——

Mr. VOORHEES. No, I do not.

Mr. VEST. I think I know the size of the United States quite as well as I know anything else; and as to a character for economy, I have never had any ambition in that direction. I have reported more bills for public buildings in this city, I believe, than any other Senator during my ten years' service.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not undertake to make a personal application of any general remarks that I made.

Mr. VEST. I am not making any personal application, but I am simply meeting the general drift of the Senator's argument.

I have always advocated the purchase of proper sites and the erection of buildings with adequate capacity for the public service in every portion of the city of Washington and for every public purpose, and the records of the Senate show that I have reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a bill for the erection of a hall of records, absolutely necessary, which we have passed three times and sent to the House of Representatives without any action from that House upon it at all.

Every word the Senator from Indiana has said in regard to the enormous expenditures for rent in the District of Columbia is true; and we should now—and it is a good business principle—erect every building that is necessary for the purposes of this Government without renting at all. Property is advancing here. We can put up these buildings now cheaply, and we can put them up of such size as to meet the increased growth of the Government. If we delay, the price of property, even if it is condemned hereafter, will more than counterbalance any item of expense which may come from an increased cost of construction.

But, Mr. President, whilst I say all this, I believe that the business of this Government, as far as possible, should be conducted like every individual would conduct his own business—economically, wisely, with prudence, and with foresight. The fact that this country is large is no reason why we as trustees of the people should rush into all sorts of useless expenditure, and be satisfied with the statement that there is a surplus in the Treasury and the resources of the country are so great that it can stand any extravagance whatever.

I believe that a public printing-office should be put up, constructed from top to bottom in such a way as to meet the necessities of that bureau, and in a healthy locality. I believe, notwithstanding what the Senator from Indiana has said about malaria, that the worst part of the city next to that adjacent to the Potomac Flats is where the Public Printing Office is to-day located. I would purchase no more ground there. I believe the money would be thrown away comparatively. I think the duty of the Congress of the United States now is to tear down that old building, dispose of the real estate, and put up a public printing-office convenient to all the Departments of the Government and in a healthy locality.

I agree with the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Maryland that the present old trap in which the public printing is carried on is a disgrace to the Government, and I agree in a large measure with their statements; and yet we are asked to add to it a new building, but we retain the old one, and we retain the site because we put in this additional sum of money amounting for the site alone at the lowest calculation to nearly $200,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the resolution reported by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to revise the existing laws regulating the election of members of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that that may be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the adoption of this amendment in some form I think is certainly necessary, but the question whether or not it should be confined to the locality where the Printing Office is now located seems to me to be a subject of serious consideration, and I think the Senator from Maryland, who seems to be specially interested in this amendment, should modify the amendment so as to allow the possibility of a choice of some other locality. If the Printing Office is to be kept where it now is, beyond all question the adjacent lots mentioned in the amendment should be acquired by the Government without delay. If it should be removed, that question should be decided at once, because all that has been said here to-day and much more may be truly said in reference to the ability of the Government to discharge its obligation to those who are employed in this building. There can be no excuse for the Senate or for the committees of the Senate who are charged either directly or indirectly with the care of the public buildings and the construction of new ones for permitting this nuisance and this danger to the lives and health of people to remain. We are worse than any uncivilized and barbarous people in the world if these statements be true, and that they are true all persons seem to concur, in reference to the condition of this building.

Mr. President, certainly some action should be taken, and the Committee on Appropriations desired to do that which was practicable and which could be done at the earliest moment. They therefore adopted the only practicable suggestion which was before them on this subject; but in the light of the suggestions made by the Senator from Missouri, it seems to me that it would be only reasonable either upon the conference or elsewhere to provide for a consideration of some other and better locality in which this building should be constructed, but unquestionably there should be, as stated by the Senator from Missouri, a building complete and adequate for the purposes of the Government built without a moment's delay. It should be commenced at once and the present condition of things should not be permitted to continue longer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I ask leave now to call up the amendment, offered by myself, to prepare a pedestal and site for a statue of General Winfield Scott Hancock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 24, page 93, it is proposed to add as an additional paragraph the following:

Site and pedestal for statue of General Winfield Scott Hancock: For the preparation of a site and the erection of a pedestal for a statue of General Winfield Scott Hancock in the city of Washington, $40,000; said site to be selected by and said pedestal to be erected under the supervision of the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Joint Committee of the Library, and such other person as the President of the United States may appoint.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia by whom is this statue itself to be erected?

Mr. DANIEL. There is no statue prepared to be erected, but it is only in contemplation that in time one will be.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say to the Senator that I introduced a measure some year or two ago for a statue of General Hancock, and I am quite confident in my recollection that the provision passed the Senate and never was taken up in the other House. I may be in error, but I think it was within a few weeks after General Hancock's death took place. I am heartily in accord with whatever the Senator thinks should now be done. I shall be willing for one to go much further than to have the pedestal merely prepared, and to now vote, if anybody shall propose it, for a provision for the statue itself. I would not, of course, interpose any motion in regard to a matter which the Senator from Virginia has considered.

Mr. DANIEL. I was not aware that the step had been taken which is referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I regret that it has not been consummated by the concurrence of the other House. Had I known it I would have consulted with the Senator before offering any proposition upon the subject. However, I do not conceive that this amendment at all conflicts with the plan embodied in the Senator's bill, but is in harmony with it. There can be no doubt that the time is not far distant, whether or not it may be done at this session, when a statue of General Hancock will be erected, and this is only a step in that direction which can be readily consummated awaiting the event.

Mr. HOAR. I should like, with the leave of the Senator from Virginia, to make one other observation in which I am sure I shall have his concurrence. I also introduced a year or two ago a proposition for a statue at the seat of Government to President James Madison. It was at a time when a provision was in process of making for several important public works, the monument, I think, at Yorktown, and some public work in New York, and perhaps one at Brattleborough, Vt., and one or two important statues here, the statue of Lafayette, which is now in process of construction in France.

It was not adopted at the time, but I desire to take this occasion to say that it seems to me almost a reproach to the people of the United States that no adequate and worthy memorial of that great statesman and patriot exists at the seat of Government. For reasons undoubtedly satisfactory to her, Virginia in the erection of that perhaps the noblest work of art on this continent, the statue of Washington surrounded by his friends and supporters, the great Virginians of his day, which exists in Richmond, Va., did not provide for the representation of the figure of Mr. Madison there. Perhaps one reason, in selecting the group about the central figure, why Mr. Madison was omitted and other eminent and illustrious Virginians preferred, was the expectation that that duty of piety and patriotism would be discharged by the national Congress.

Mr. Madison was one of the very greatest of men. There is no single mind which was so impressed on our Constitution as his, not even that of Alexander Hamilton, his great opponent and rival; and if my public service should be prolonged here there are few acts which would give me more pleasure and which would give my constituents more pleasure than to have me co-operate with any movement which the State of Virginia, that Mr. Madison more immediately represented, should make to have an elegant and proper monument to his great fame erected here.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not make any point of order on this amendment, but I desire to say that the Committee on Appropriations in inserting a provision for a pedestal and the erection of a statue to General Sheridan and General Logan did so in view of the fact that the Army of the Cumberland is preparing a statue of General Sheridan, and the Army of the Tennessee of General Logan, to be erected in this city. The Committee were not aware that any such effort was being made in the case of General Hancock. But I shall not make a point of order on the amendment. I have no doubt, as the Senator from Virginia has stated, that the soldiers who served under General Hancock will make suitable preparations for a monument to him.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I have heard with exceeding gratification the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts in reference to a monument to the memory of James Madison.

It was said in ancient Rome that he who wandered through the forum would wonder why no monument of Cato was there, and that his memory was kept even greener by the absence of a statue which all deemed so fitting than it might have been by placing it there.

The same may be said, Mr. President, in reference to James Madison, who was called the "father of the Constitution," and who in that instrument has undoubtedly left enduring marks of his handiwork.

In the early days of the Republic there were no two States which were more heartily in sympathy with each other than Massachusetts and Virginia. The soldiers of Virginia fought on Massachusetts soil, and the soldiers of Massachusetts were down South even farther than Virginia, shoulder to shoulder and hand to hand in that greatest struggle of all the ages; and it can not be other than peculiarly gratifying not only to Virginia's representatives here but to all of the Virginia people to hear the encomiums pronounced upon her eminent men by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

I trust, sir, that it is an indication that, however much the sentiment of the majority of the people of these two great Commonwealths may be divided upon some incidental questions, the day will not be far distant when the minds of their foremost men will be in unison upon propositions which are recognized as for the universal good.

I hope, sir, that the State of Virginia, however, will not wait for this fitting recognition of her great statesman by the Government of the United States. The citizens of that State can never pass through the Memorial Hall in this building without feeling some sense of regret and almost of mortification that she has not yet contributed the statues of two of her sons which she has been invited to do, that they might be in that Memorial Hall; and I trust that, even before the Government of the United States shall carry out the just plan which has been so eloquently suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, Virginia will see to it that her contribution is made to that hall of art and memory, and that the figures of James Madison and Patrick Henry may stand there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill in the Senate? If there are none, shall the amendments be engrossed?

Mr. PLUMB. I think I offered an amendment a day or two since which has not been disposed of, to come in as an additional section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair remembers that the Senator from Kansas gave notice of an intended amendment, but it is not at the desk.

Mr. PLUMB. I forwarded it to the Secretary's desk and had it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section the following:

Soldiers and sailors who were honorably discharged from the military and naval service of the United States of the war of the rebellion, and the widows and children of deceased soldiers and sailors, shall be eligible to appointment, transfer, and promotion, subject only to such examination as may be prescribed by the heads of Departments, and without competitive examination.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that open to objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not wish to speak to the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. DANIEL. I simply inquire, is that proposition open to objection at this stage, or is it an amendment that has passed before the proper committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia mean to inquire whether it is liable to a point of order?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not appear to have been reported by any standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. It has not been.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia interpose a point of order?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the Senator from Virginia, if he will permit me to appeal to him, will not make the point of order. This amendment is in line with what he himself has very eloquently expressed, and it is practically in pursuance of the Revised Statutes and of what I think is really the fair construction of the civil-service rules themselves, although the rules appear to be of one mind and the commissioners of another.

Mr. DANIEL. With the permission of the Senator, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. What are we going to do with the poor grandchildren who are orphans? Why not put them in?

Mr. PLUMB. I was early taught not to leap the stile until I got to it. The grandchildren are beyond the purview of my present reach.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not believe in hereditary honors in this Government. I believe the people themselves of their own free will and accord will always recognize proper considerations of patriotism and merit, and that full merit does not need to be legislated into office. Therefore, sir, I interpose the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the amendment can not be received under the rules. Are there further amendments to the bill in the Senate?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the sale of land allotted and patented to certain members of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians, and for other purposes, and agreed to the same.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1128) to create ports of entry at Tacoma and Seattle, in Washington Territory; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. 185) for the division of Dakota into two States, and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the resolution reported by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to revise the existing laws regulating the election of members of Congress, etc.

Mr. HOAR. I move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution that was before the Senate this morning.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to call up the agricultural appropriation bill, which I gave notice the day before yesterday, at the time of reporting it, I would move the consideration of at the close of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks if there be an appropriation bill ready for action, it has the right of way.

Mr. HARRIS. I would suggest to the Senator from Kansas that if he will ask unanimous consent to lay aside informally the unfinished business, I suppose there will be no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. What is the unfinished business?

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that instead of moving, the Senator ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill, laying aside informally the unfinished business.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not understand the Chair as to what the unfinished business was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, directing that committee to revise the existing laws regulating the election of members of Congress etc.

Mr. PLUMB. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee and ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill 12485, being the agricultural appropriation bill.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12485) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with, and the committee amendments be acted upon as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be read at length, and the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in the text of the bill.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Kansas consents, if the Senate is willing, that, pending this bill and before he takes up the consideration of it, I can ask the Senate to put upon its passage a House bill of very great importance that will take no longer time than the reading of the bill, but unless it is put upon its passage very speedily it will fail. It is a bill to divide the Great Sioux reservation, very familiar to all the members of the Senate, and I will say that it has been so constructed that all parties interested in it are satisfied with the present condition of the bill, and, therefore, it will take no time further than the reading of it. I have no further interest in it except that it is a matter of great interest to Dakota and all that part of the Northwest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business having been informally laid aside at the request of the Senator from Kansas, the Senator from Massachusetts now asks that the bill which the Senator from Kansas desires to be considered by unanimous consent shall be informally laid aside to enable him to ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 11970) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. I feel constrained to object.

Mr. DAWES. If it causes any debate I will withdraw it. I hope my colleague will see that the public interest is so great in this bill that it will not jeopardize any matter he has in charge.

Mr. PLUMB. If the colloquy were between any two Senators than those from Massachusetts I should be disposed to let them take the time of the Senate to carry it on, but as they can settle their matters privately——

Mr. DAWES. This is not a private matter. It is a matter of public concern. Of course, if my colleague objects I can not proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the appropriation bill called up by the Senator from Kansas will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, line 10, after the words "compensation of," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" and on page 2, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

For compensation of Secretary of Agriculture, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 6, to increase the appropriation for salary of "chief of division of accounts and disbursing officer" from $2,000 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One assistant librarian, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 4, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for "office of Secretary of Agriculture," etc., from $74,160 to $83,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "botanical division," on page 3, line 7, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" in line 8, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" and in line 9, after the words "botanical clerk," to strike out "eight hundred" and insert "one thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

One botanist, $2,500; one assistant botanist, $1,600; one botanical clerk, $1,000; one assistant botanist, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 14, after the word "division," to strike out "nine thousand eight hundred and forty" and insert "ten thousand seven hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Section of vegetable pathology: One chief of section, $2,000; one assistant, $1,400; one clerk, $1,000; in all, for botanical division, $10,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "chemical division," on page 4, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" and in the same line, after the word "all," to strike out "eleven" and insert "thirteen;" so as to make the clause read:

One chief chemist, $2,500; one assistant chemist, $1,800; one assistant chemist, $1,600; employment of additional assistants in the chemical division, when necessary, $8,000; in all, $13,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous," on page 6, after the word "dollars," at the end of line 7, to insert:

And the unexpended balance of appropriations under this head for the current fiscal year is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1890.

So as to make the clause read:

Botanical investigations and experiments.—Botanical division: For purchasing specimens, paper, and all necessary materials for the herbarium, and for labor in preparing same; for investigations and experiments with grasses and forage plants, including the establishment and maintenance of experimental grass stations, and of other economic and medicinal plants, and for traveling and other necessary expenses connected therewith; and for employing local botanists for exploration and collection of plants in little-known districts, and for special work for the improvement of the herbarium and for artists for drawing and engraving, $20,000. And the unexpended balance of appropriations under this head for the current fiscal year is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 15, after the words "enable the," to strike out "Commissioner of Agriculture" and insert "Secretary of Agriculture;" in line 23, before the words "of Agriculture," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" and in line 25, to strike out the word "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" so as to make the clause read:

Chemical division: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to extend and continue the investigation of the adulteration of food, drugs, and liquors, including the purchase of samples, transportation, traveling expenses, stationery, return postage, printing and illustrating, analyzing, investigating, and examining samples purchased on the open market, the sum of $5,000, to be made immediately available; and for these purposes the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons as he may deem necessary: Provided, That the Secretary is hereby required to make a separate report to Congress as to when and where the samples of food, liquors, and drugs were purchased, when and where analyzed, and the result of such analysis, together with the name of the manufacturer and the brand or label on the package or article.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 14, after the word "traveling," to strike out "within the United States;" so as to make the clause read:

Investigating the history and habits of insects.—Entomological division: For the promotion of economic entomology, investigating the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, arboriculture, and horticulture; experiments in ascertaining the best means of destroying them, and preventives to the biting of domestic animals by poisonous insects and remedies and antidotes for such bites; for publishing reports thereon, and for illustrations, chemicals, traveling and other expenses in the practical work of the entomological division, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 22, before the word "cocoons," to strike out "transportating" and insert "transporting;" so as to read:

For collecting and disseminating information relating to silk-culture; for purchasing and distributing silk-worm eggs, and for conducting at some point in the District of Columbia experiments with automatic machinery for reeling silk from the cocoon, and for expenses incurred in collecting, purchasing, preparing for transportation, and transporting cocoons, and for expenses of stations in connection therewith, and for necessary traveling expenses, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, page 8, line 25, before the words "of Agriculture," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" and on page 9, line 4, after the words "and the," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to sell in open market any and all reeled silk and silk waste produced in these experiments, and to apply the proceeds of such sales to the payment of the legitimate expenses incurred therein; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall make full report to Congress of the experiments herein provided for, and also of all sales and purchases made under this paragraph, with the names and residences of all producers of cocoons of whom purchases are made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 16, after the word "appropriation," to strike out "and also under the appropriation to said association made for the fiscal years 1887 and 1888, as provided by law, if not already made;" in line 19, after the words "to the," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" in line 23, before the word "ladies," to strike out "California;" in the same line, after the word "Culture," to strike out "Association," and insert "Society;" on page 10, in line 2, after the word "dollars," to strike out "to be paid directly to said Joseph Neumann," and in line 4, after the words "through the," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" so as to make the clause read:

For the encouragement and development of the culture of raising raw silk, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Woman's Silk Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia, and to be paid directly to said association; and said association shall make a full and detailed report of the expenditures and results obtained under this appropriation to the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall transmit the same to Congress, and $2,500 for the same purposes, and under the same restrictions and conditions, to the Ladies' Silk Culture Society of California, and for the continuation of the study and experiments by Joseph Neumann of the wild native silk-worm of California, $2,500; and the said Joseph Neumann shall report the results of such work to Congress through the Secretary of Agriculture on or before the 1st day of January, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to change the phraseology in lines 4 and 5, on page 10, so as to read:

And the said Joseph Neumann shall report the results of such work to the Secretary of Agriculture—

In place of "to Congress."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the words "Congress through;" so as to read:

And the said Joseph Neumann shall report the results of such work to the Secretary of Agriculture on or before the 1st day of January, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has the amendment in lines 2 and 3 of page 10 been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that it may be considered as open for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. I find on page 9 of the bill an appropriation of $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the "Woman's Silk Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia," and it provides that that $5,000 shall be "paid directly to said association." The bill as it came from the House also provides an appropriation of $2,500 "for the continuation of the studies and experiments by Joseph Neumann of the wild native silk-worm of California," and provided that, as in the other case, the money shall be "paid directly to said Joseph Neumann."

The Senate Committee on Appropriations, I find, propose to strike out the words "to be paid directly to said Joseph Neumann." What I want to know of the Senator in charge of the bill is this: If it is proper to make an appropriation to enable the Woman's Silk Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia, to develop the culture of raising raw silk, and if it is proper that that sum should be paid directly to them, why is it not also proper that this appropriation of $2,500 should be paid directly to Joseph Neumann for his study and experiments of the wild native silk-worm of California? In other words, why should the money in the one case be paid to the Woman's Silk Culture Association, and in the other case not be paid to Professor Neumann?

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senator from Oregon if the language does not entirely express it? To whom could the money be paid except to Mr. Neumann?

Mr. MITCHELL. Perhaps that would be so on a fair construction, but a similar appropriation was made in the last appropriation bill and there was some trouble on that very point and there was difficulty in Mr. Neumann getting the money. I presume it was to avoid that difficulty, whatever it was, that the other House provided that this $2,500 should be paid directly to him. If that is really the intention, I suggest that the provision should stand that this money shall be paid to Professor Neumann.

Mr. MORRILL. Whenever we make an appropriation for a private person we never use the phrase that it is to be "paid directly" to the person.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suggest to the Senator that that very phrase is used in reference to "the Woman's Silk Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia."

Mr. MORRILL. That does not make it any stronger.

Mr. MITCHELL. That may be, but if it is proper to be used in the one case it seems to me that it is proper it should be used in the other. If it is not proper, then it should not be used in either case.

I insist that this amendment of the committee should not be agreed to, if it is really the intention to pay this $2,500 to Professor Neumann to enable him to complete his experiments.

Mr. PLUMB. While the provision for the payment directly to these two societies is not the best in the world, still those cases and the case of Mr. Neumann are not entirely parallel. Both the associations referred to are composed of quite a considerable number of ladies, who have given their time and largely their own means to the encouragement of silk-culture in the United States, and they have, besides, solicited from other persons with whom they have come in contact subscriptions for the same purpose. So the appropriation which the United States makes is not the whole of the money which they use, and it is more convenient and more proper to pay to them a sum which shall only form a portion of their resources, and a report concerning the use of which is required to be sent to Congress, than it is to pay money to an individual who has that, and that alone, as his resource for investigation.

In addition to that I want to say that I am not impressed with Mr. Joseph Neumann as a success, and I doubt somewhat the propriety of giving anything to him, not because he is not meritorious as a person, but because I think he is not calculated to make the best possible use of the money; and I think, on the whole, that, while it is well enough perhaps for him to go ahead, or at least the House seemed to have thought so, it would be well to have the use which he may make of this money under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. Neumann has made a report which I have in my hand, in which he has got things delightfully mixed up, showing that he is not devoting himself alone to cocoons, but he has a cure for poison-oak, and he is trying to establish wild-coffee plants, and has various things of that sort in mind. While I should be glad to encourage a cure for poison-oak and encourage the planting of wild-coffee plants, I prefer to keep them separate, so as to know what each one is costing us, and so on.

My own belief is that this money is not very well spent. But Mr. Neumann is a very well-meaning man, a very enthusiastic man, and I am willing that he shall have the $2,500; but I do insist, as a matter of fairness to the Treasury and as a matter of precedent in the expenditure of the public money, that it ought to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, and of course it may, and it is bound to be spent by him; but we simply give the Secretary of Agriculture that measurable control over the expenditure which we think he ought to have.

It is not a matter of very great importance, but as Mr. Neumann is in the bill it is well enough to put a certain limitation upon him.

Mr. MITCHELL. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the distinction between these parties is not as my friend from Vermont seems to think. The Senator in charge of the bill has very plainly indicated that, while he is willing in the case of the Woman's Silk Culture Association that the money shall be paid directly to them, in the case of Joseph Neumann the money shall not be paid directly to him. The Senator from Kansas suggests that perhaps Professor Neumann has been giving his attention to some other matters outside of this particular business of investigating the native silk-worm of California. That perhaps may be true. It is very probable that the Woman's Silk Culture Association of the United States at Philadelphia have confined their attention exclusively to the business of developing the culture and raising of raw silk.

But with reference to Professor Neumann, I can say that he is an old resident of the Pacific coast; he has resided in the State of California I think for some 30 years, and he has been giving his attention almost exclusively for the last quarter of a century to the business of developing the production of silk in this country and especially on the Pacific coast. He is the discoverer, as the Senator from Kansas must admit, of a native silk-worm in California which produces a very excellent quality of silk. I believe that Professor Neumann has the respect and confidence of the leading men of the Pacific coast as an expert in this character of business. He is generally known over the Pacific coast, and I think the Senators from the State of California will vouch for him, and other Senators, too, from that coast know him.

The seats are rather empty just now, but I see the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST] present. I think probably he has knowledge of Mr. Neumann.

I say it is all wrong to make fish of one and flesh of the other. If you propose to appropriate money to two different parties to enable them to proceed with an investigation in regard to a particular matter, you should either say that the money should be paid directly to them in both cases or you should say it in neither case; but when you do say it in one and do not say it in the other it is a reflection on that other. That is all there is to it. I insist that the amendment of the committee should be voted down, and that no reflection of this character should be cast upon Professor Neumann, either because he happens to live on the Pacific coast or for any other reason.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL. I object to that part of the amendment of the committee, and hope it will be voted down, wherein the committee proposes to strike out the words "to be paid directly to said Joseph Neumann."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The specific amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 2 and 3, on page 10, the committee report to strike out the words "to be paid directly to said Joseph Neumann."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes have it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I call for a rising vote. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I will venture on behalf of the committee to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. All right. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 10, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "ten;" and after the word "dollars," at the end of the same line, to insert "of which sum $1,000 shall be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of economic ornithology and mammalogy: For the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy; an investigation of the food habits, distribution, and migrations of North American birds and mammals, in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry; for publishing report thereon; and for drawings, traveling and other expenses in the practical work of the division, $10,000 dollars, of which sum $1,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 4, before the words "of Agriculture," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" in line 5, before the word "shall," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" in line 8, after the words "prevent the," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" and in line 14, after the words "That the," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" so as to make the clause read:

An equal proportion of two-thirds of all seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents; and the person receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase. But nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending flower, garden, and other seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of improved and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants: But provided, however, That the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each member may have seeds of equal value, as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it in accordance with the order we are proceeding under to allow an amendment to be offered now to the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is usual to proceed with the committee amendments and then to recur to amendments offered by Senators.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to offer an amendment right at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received when the committee amendments have been concluded.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 14, line 4, before the words "of Agriculture," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" so as to read:

Salaries and expenses of Bureau of Animal Industry: For carrying out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, $500,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, and in such manner as he may think best, to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, and for this purpose to employ as many persons as he may deem necessary, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals and the quarantine of the same whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia from one State into another.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "plague," at the end of the same clause, on page 14, to insert:

The authority granted to the Commissioner of Agriculture by the act of May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, and by the provision of the appropriation act for the Agricultural Department, approved July 18, 1888, relating to said bureau, is hereby vested in the Secretary of Agriculture; and the said Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to perform all the duties named in said acts to be performed by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment by adding, after the word "acts," in line 1, page 15:

And all other acts of Congress in force on the 8th day of February, 1889.

That was the date on which the act creating the Department of Agriculture went into effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Would it not be better to insert the words after the word "Industry," in the twentieth line?

Mr. PLUMB. I think this will accomplish the purpose. I think to put it there would somewhat disturb the arrangement of the paragraph, and this is sufficiently comprehensive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "acts," in line 1, it is proposed to insert:

And all other acts of Congress in force on the 8th day of February, 1889.

So as to read:

And the said Secretary is hereby authorized and directed to perform all the duties named in said acts and all other acts of Congress in force on the 8th day of February, 1889, to be performed by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 15, line 8, before the words "of Agriculture," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" so as to make the clause read:

Division of forestry: For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to continue an investigation and report upon the subject of forestry, and for traveling and other necessary expenses in the investigation and the collection and distribution of valuable economic forest-tree seeds and plants, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 25, at the bottom of page 15, to insert:

Experiments in manufacture of sugar from sorghum and beets: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and from beets, and especially to so continue said experiments as to result in the acquisition and extension of knowledge concerning all the processes of the production of cane and beets and the manufacture of the same into sugar, including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies, $50,000. And the sum remaining unexpended from the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1889 is hereby reappropriated and made available for the purposes hereinbefore expressed: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby required to make a separate report to Congress, stating fully and accurately an itemized account of every expenditure made under this provision and the results of all experiments made, and also including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas what amount of the former appropriation remains unexpended.

Mr. PLUMB. About $50,000.

Mr. VEST. The amount appropriated was about $100,000.

Mr. PLUMB. It was about $100,000. I move to amend the amendment by inserting, in line 6, after the word "beets," the words:

And the best varieties of the same.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Agricultural Stations," on page 17, line 3, before the words "of Agriculture," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" and in line 9, before the words "of Agriculture," to strike out "Commissioner" and insert "Secretary;" so as to read:

That to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States, under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," $600,000, $15,000 of which sum shall be payable upon the order of the Secretary of Agriculture to enable him to carry out the provisions of section 3 of said act of March 2, 1887, and to compare, edit, and publish such of the results of the experiments made under section 2 of said act by said experimental stations as he may deem necessary; and for these purposes the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons as he may deem necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GEORGE. I move to amend the bill by striking out on page 11, commencing at line 20 and ending at the word "purchase," in line 7, on page 12, and inserting in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 20, it is proposed to strike out all from the words "an equal" down to and including the word "purchase," in line 7, on page 12, in the following words:

An equal proportion of two-thirds of all seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents; and the person receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The Secretary of Agriculture shall apportion among the States, on the basis of their representation in Congress, all seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and shall furnish for distribution the part allotted to each State to the experiment stations established in said State under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto;" and in case any State or Territory shall have failed to establish agricultural experiment stations in accordance with the provisions of said act of March 2, 1887, the seeds, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants allotted to said State shall be furnished by the Secretary of Agriculture to the commissioner or secretary of agriculture of said State or Territory for distribution. The Secretary of Agriculture shall report, as provided in this act, the place where purchased and the quantity and price of seeds purchased and the date of purchase; and in making distribution, as hereinbefore directed, he shall have due regard for the adaptation of the seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants to the climate and soil of the different States. All seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants furnished by the Secretary of Agriculture to the agricultural experiment stations or to the commissioners or secretaries shall be transmitted through the United States mails free of charge for postage, in accordance with the existing law regulating the transmission of such matter through the mails from the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate, if I can get it, to this amendment. The amendment that I offered was agreed to by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], the chairman of the committee, in obedience to the wishes of the committee, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know whether it would be proper to state what favor the amendment received from the Agricultural Committee of the other House. If I were allowed to make a statement upon that subject, it would not be adverse to the amendment.

As the law now stands, two-thirds of all the seeds, plants, flowers, etc., which are purchased are distributed to members of Congress in both Houses for distribution among their constituents. The object of this amendment is to substitute for the Senators and Representatives in the distribution of these seeds the lawful, proper agency of the several States as recognized in the experiment stations.

I do not mean to press any argument of this sort, that it is troublesome for members of Congress to make the distribution of seeds, because I think every member of Congress should be willing to incur any trouble that might be imposed upon him by law for the benefit of his constituents. The Committee on Agriculture place their recommendation of this amendment upon the ground alone that the experiment stations are the most suitable and proper agencies for this distribution.

I think it will occur to every Senator at once upon the slightest reflection that if we design, as I hope we do, to make these experiment stations of real value to the States in which they are established, the first step we ought to take in order to accomplish that good end is to bring those stations in communication with the farmers of the States in which they are located. If the distribution is made by the experiment stations, it will necessarily bring in communication with each of them the most intelligent, the most progressive farmers within their respective States.

When the seeds are left to the distribution of Senators, especially Senators representing large and populous States, it will necessarily happen that the distribution will in many instances be made to persons who are not exactly, I will say, the most proper persons to receive them. In other words, there is not that kind of knowledge and there can not be that kind of knowledge on the part of a Senator representing a populous and large State as to the peculiar qualification of all his constituents so as to enable him to decide with propriety and correctness at all times which one out of a hundred of his constituents is entitled to this distribution, for not more that one in a hundred will ever get the seeds.

These experiment stations I look upon as being the result of one of the most beneficent acts ever passed by Congress. I believe they are destined to do an immense amount of good to the agriculture of this country. The distribution of seeds is in the nature of an experiment. It is not and never was the design of the distribution of seeds that a member of Congress should be an almoner as to the seeds, and that they should be distributed merely to save the persons who receive them from the expense of purchasing seeds from seed stores. That was no part of the design of the distribution of seeds, the design being that there shall be purchased by the Agricultural Department seeds not generally known, not generally understood, so that the persons who receive them shall, as agents of the Government, make experiments in planting them, the law being that each man receiving seeds shall make a report to the Department as to how they turn out. I have made some inquiry on the subject, and I find that very few make such a report, and that comes, I think, from its not being generally understood among those who receive the seeds that this duty has been imposed upon them.

We have an experiment station in each State for the purpose of testing seeds. This distribution is for the purpose of testing the value of the seeds, and it seems to me a little incongruous that whilst we have an experiment station in each State whose duty it is to look into this matter to try experiments with reference to seeds, at this very important point we should discard these institutions and impose a duty upon others in connection with this distribution which the others are not so competent to perform.

The Committee on Agriculture was unanimous in recommending this amendment, and I hope it will prevail.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, with the general purpose of the Senator from Mississippi I am in entire accord. In the beginning I was favorable to the amendment which he has proposed, and I agree now that it is better than the provision which is found in the bill; but when it came to be discussed with reference to terms and form, it was found that there was a difference of opinion as to whether the seeds should be purchased by the Secretary of Agriculture and distributed to the States on their requisition, or whether, as is the opinion of the present Secretary of Agriculture, the amount should be apportioned to the several States in money, leaving them to purchase seeds according to their own idea of what the needs of their locality required.

In addition to that there was a sentiment also which was not in accord with either of these ideas, but in favor of retaining the present system. If any one has said any more harsh things than any other person has ever said about the present system, that statement I indorse. I believe it is utterly and entirely vicious in every way. I believe it does not result practically in any good whatever; but it has a certain support, and there are many people who believe that it is in substance meritorious.

In view of this contrariety of opinion, and in view of the lateness of the session, which precludes as thorough a discussion of a matter of this kind as it really ought to have; in further view of the fact that we have practically now entered upon the reorganization of this Department and have given it a dignity it heretofore did not have (and we have reason to suspect that that new dignity will call for a reorganization and for a wider scope), and in view of the fact that we shall get from the incoming Secretary of Agriculture, whoever he may be, some recommendation upon this point which probably may meet the case better than anything that has been suggested, the committee thought they would let this go for this year, trusting that by next year we shall have from the hands of the new Secretary a system which will take the place of the present one more adequately than anything which has been proposed; or if not that, he shall at least give his sanction to some of the propositions which have been pending here and in the other branch of Congress upon this matter.

For that reason we did not deem it advisable at this time to report either this amendment or any modification of it which we might have been able to agree upon. I assure the Senator from Mississippi that it was not because a majority of us did not believe that something should be done, but because we were not able to put into shape that which we did agree upon in the limited time at our disposal, and for the other considerations which I have mentioned.

But, as I said before, I believe that as an ultimate thing the proposition which the Senator has made is superior to that which is contained in the bill. The only question now is, whether it is better to take that which is naturally imperfect from almost any stand-point, or whether we had better wait until we shall have the advice of the new official as to that which will be better calculated to take the place of what we have now, as to what shall remain as a permanent provision.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, if I understood the reading of the amendment, while I prefer it to the provisions that are in the bill, it seemed to me that there was one defect or oversight in the amendment, and that is that there is no provision made for franking the seeds from the experiment stations.

Mr. GEORGE. There is such a provision.

Mr. REAGAN. If so I have overlooked it.

Mr. GEORGE. That is expressly attended to.

Mr. REAGAN. While I agree that the amendment would be some improvement on the existing law, I trust to see the day not far off when we shall have neither of them. I do not agree with the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi that members of Congress should take upon themselves any labor which the law imposes upon them. If you put it for the public good, then I agree to it, but I do not understand that this class of legislation is for the public good.

We are appropriating here under this particular provision $100,000 for seeds. We get ordinary garden and field seeds such as the seed stores sell all over the country. We make the Government a competitor to that extent with the seed stores without benefit to the people except to a few. If the Senator from Mississippi does not overrate the matter, one in a hundred gets a paper of seeds which he could buy for 5 cents from a seed store in his neighborhood.

But the $100,000 is the least part of the expense. A Department with its officers, its clerks, its stationery, its postage, and all its expenses, is provided, costing many times more than the cost of the seeds, and all this to distribute common garden and field seeds, because it is only occasionally that any rare seed or plant is distributed from the Agricultural Department.

Besides, 10,000 packages of seeds will go to a Senator. He has to spend his time in franking them off or employ a clerk to do it. It has always seemed to me the extremist folly that a member of Congress should set himself down to frank seeds worth 2 or 3 cents a paper, while he is called upon to study the great questions that arise for legislation and administration of this country. It has seemed to me a mere waste of time. It has seemed to me almost criminal that a policy should be adopted which required members of Congress to engage in that sort of business when they are called upon to legislate for a great Republic of 60,000,000 people and more, with all its varied and multiplying interests. Some provision surely ought to be made that this manual labor should be performed by somebody else. If the postage on these seeds had to be paid, the postage itself would probably cost more than the seeds are worth.

So it seems to me, while I would legislate on every subject which is necessary to promote the welfare of the country and to carry out its constitutional obligations, still I would not engage in a petty distribution of common field and garden seeds. We disappoint a great many more people by this distribution than we accommodate. We send a paper of seeds to one man in a neighborhood and ten more ask for them to whom you can not send them, and they are disappointed. One gets a 5-cent paper of seeds to discontent ten of his neighbors because they do not get a 5-cent paper of seeds.

So I most heartily concur with the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas in charge of the bill that some legislation be matured in the near future that will change this whole system. If rare and unusual seeds and cuttings are to be distributed, let that be provided for, and it may possibly be done with advantage to the country; but this thing of distributing beans, corn, and pumpkin seeds, mustard and radish seeds, cotton-seeds, and things of that kind which are in the seed stores, making the Government a competitor with the seed stores, it seems to me is all wrong, and I trust that very soon we may avoid such absurdities.

As the Senator from Kansas suggested that the committee had not had time to formulate such a provision as they desired, of course I can not now in the mere consideration of the bill on the spur of the moment undertake to formulate any provision that ought to be adopted, but I take the occasion to make this protest against the existing condition of things in the hope that something may be done in the future to prevent this sort of legislation.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the fact that the amendment does not inaugurate the distribution of seeds.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that.

Mr. GEORGE. It only provides a different mode of distributing the seeds from the one now existing. That is all there is in it. As the law now is, seeds are distributed in a manner which the Senator from Texas says is improper and that they ought not to be distributed in that way. The question for the Senator from Texas and for other Senators here is not whether we shall keep up the distribution of seeds, because that goes on whether the amendment is adopted or not, but conceding that the seeds will be distributed, the question is what is the best mode of distributing them, whether by the agency so much condemned by the Senator from Texas, by Senators and Representatives in Congress, or by the natural and proper agency of the person selected by each State to look after its agricultural interests, who are supposed to be in more intimate connection with and to have a greater knowledge of the wants of particular counties and particular districts in their State than other persons.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Texas especially to that point. It is a question simply as to the mode of distribution, discarding the mode which he condemns, and it is not a question of perpetuating or inaugurating the distribution of seeds.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not think this is a very important question to exercise the wisdom of the Senate, but it seems to me that there is some advantage in the provision for purchasing seeds and distributing them. I know that in my own State, among my own people, there have been introduced seeds producing superior kinds of vegetable and agricultural and horticultural productions, and that they are very much sought for. The rule I have adopted has given very general satisfaction, and that is to write to my friends to give public notice that all persons who will write for seeds of a particular description, to the extent of the amount at my disposal, will be accommodated with them. Under that system the distribution has proved of very great service.

I do not know of anybody in the State of Florida who has a more intimate acquaintance with my own people than I have. I do not know of anybody to whom they could apply with more freedom and readiness than to myself. I am perfectly willing to undertake the labor, and I think every other Senator should be; and if he needs a clerk to do whatever may be required for his constituents he should have it.

I understand the present system to have originated not in the idea of furnishing 5-cent packages of such seed as can be found in the stores, but to furnish a superior seed, to furnish a seed which could be the means of producing a superior plant. If the Agricultural Department does not do that it does not accomplish anything. It was supposed that there would be a greater means of general acquaintance and general knowledge in reference to the most superior and excellent kinds of seeds and plants which that Department would be enabled to obtain and to distribute throughout the country. To some extent, within my knowledge, the distribution has accomplished that purpose, and chiefly through the acquaintance of Senators and Representatives with their own people.

Now you propose to divest this Department which you have recently created of that which is one of its most important functions; that is, the ascertainment throughout the country and throughout the world of that species of agricultural and horticultural production which will succeed best to produce a type of excellence not known in the different localities of this country, and introduce and acclimatize them there. You propose now to destroy that function of this Department which you have created.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not the proposition of the amendment.

Mr. CALL. The proposition of the amendment is to give the seeds to the experimental colleges.

Mr. GEORGE. Not to purchase, but to distribute. The Department would purchase just as they are purchasing now.

Mr. CALL. It is proposed to separate the two functions then. The one purchases and the other distributes.

Mr. GEORGE. As the Agricultural Department now purchases and the members of Congress distribute.

Mr. CALL. These experimental colleges are general colleges. They are charged with various duties. The duty of purchasing or gathering the choice specimens of seeds, as the Senator admits, can be better performed here at Washington City. The duty of distribution of course may be performed by the experiment stations, but with what superior advantage to the general Agricultural Department here? You destroy one link of communication between the people and the Department.

As to the objection that a Senator can not serve his constituents when they request him to do so, I make no account of that. I think the nearer the public servant is to the people the better; the more frequent the communication with him the better. I think that every person in a State or a Congressional district should have the right of appeal free of cost in the mails to his representative for whatever may be within his power to do for him here.

So far as I am concerned, I should prefer that in this matter of distributing seeds and whatever other benefits may be obtained from the Agricultural Department, either in seeds or otherwise, should be shared at least in part by the representatives of the people here; and for the reasons stated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who reports this bill, that when this matter came before the Committee on Appropriations they considered that it had better stand as reported in the bill until a more mature consideration should be given to any change, if change there was to be, I do not see why the amendment should be pressed.

I think it very doubtful whether the transference of the entire duty of distributing the seeds and separating it from the purchasing or gathering power is of any benefit whatever, but it would result in what the Senator from Texas claims to be the case now, in the purchasing of seeds of no special value whatever, the ordinary seeds of the country, which is not the intention of this provision of the bill. The purpose of the provision is to acquire knowledge as to the best and the new kinds of seeds, the most highly developed specimens, and to distribute those in the localities where they are now unknown but may be introduced, and to hold the Department here to a just responsibility to the people for the manner in which it performs this duty.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I desire to say with reference to this matter that I should have been perfectly willing to vote to abolish any distribution of seeds at all. I believe that it is a custom which should never have been introduced. But if seeds are to be purchased and are to be distributed, I believe that the Representatives and Senators ought to be the distributers. I think that no institution in any of the States has the intimate acquaintance with the whole of any named State that its Representatives and Senators have, and the distribution through the medium of the Senators and Representatives is the most equitable and proper mode of making the distribution, if a distribution is to be made.

I shall vote against the amendment for the reasons I have given. I would be very willing to vote for an amendment abolishing the purchase of any seeds for distribution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CALL. I wish to say before the vote is taken that the Department of Agriculture (the Bureau of Agriculture as it was until it was recently made a Department) has introduced into the State of Florida many very valuable plants and many very superior kinds of seed which have been domesticated, being the seeds of different oriental and tropical countries, which promise to be of commercial value to this country.

Among these are different kinds of medicinal herbs that are grown in South America; the camphor tree, and the india-rubber tree, and various trees from the bark of which the ordinary cork of commerce is made, and the bamboo and others with which I am not familiar. I wish to say that the facility which the Department here has of gathering information from all parts of the globe of that species of products which can be acclimated and made valuable in different portions of this country has rendered very great service to the State which I have the honor in part to represent. This distribution from Washington City creates a bond between the person asking and receiving the benefit and the Department giving it that is useful to the Department and beneficial to the people and to the Government. I am in favor of preserving that relationship between the people and their servants.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, of whatever value this distribution of seeds, plants, and cuttings may be, the question involved in the pending amendment is as to the agency that should make the distribution. I can conceive of few if any agencies that I think less competent to make a wise distribution than the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States. If we want to distribute seeds, plants, and cuttings for the purpose of improving our agriculture, we had better employ purely agricultural agencies to make the distribution. They are better informed as to the agriculturists who are capable of making experiment and developing the value of new seeds, new plants, and new cuttings than the average Senator and Congressman.

For that reason I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi. I do not know any agency that could be employed which will be likely to contribute less to the real object, if there be an object in the distribution of these seeds, than to subject them to distribution by Senators and Representatives; but if, according to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, the distribution shall be made by agricultural agencies purely, we may hope for beneficial results. For that reason I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. CALL. The answer to the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee is this: A Senator or Member of Congress is not an agricultural agent nor a farmer. He may be a very good Senator without being either, but he may be a very good farmer and yet be a good Senator or Representative, as is the case with the Senator from Mississippi here. But he is the means of communication with the Federal Government and its different Departments to all the people of his State. That naturally occurs, and it is no harm to the Senator or to the people that they should have a representative charged with high official duties here in connection with the Government who is always open to their demand for any occasion of business or intercourse with the authorities of the National Government.

The farmer, the gardener, the horticulturist in Florida, in Tennessee, or in Mississippi desires to be put in communication with the Agricultural Department here. He writes to his Senator or Representative, "I am such a person and known to such persons who are friends of yours. I am engaged in the development of this particular production or industry. I wish you to represent me as such to the Department and obtain for me such and such plants and seeds." So it does not require him to be a farmer, but only a faithful friend and representative of those who are his friends and supporters, and to take the trouble of so representing them to the Department.

It is a bond of union between the people and the Government and between the Senate and the people which ought to be retained, and in my opinion it will better serve the purpose because the Senator and the Representative are responsible directly to the people, while the experimental station may or may not be. The Senator is responsible to the whole State, and it is his interest and his duty to attend to the wants of the whole State and see that their wants are supplied. For myself I have taken pleasure always in doing it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think we had better let this matter remain where it is. If the amendment should prevail and these seeds be sent to agricultural stations, the man who has charge of one of those stations can not distribute those seeds himself; it will be done by the clerks and employés under him. I take it for granted that members of Congress or the Agricultural Department are as fully competent to make a proper distribution of seeds as the clerks of the party having charge of an agricultural station. If there is any reason for the distribution of seeds, it is for the benefit of the people. I think their interest is fully secured by the present arrangement without the adoption of the amendment. I shall therefore vote against it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to make one remark only in correction of a statement made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], whose speech I indorse all over. He was literally right but substantially wrong. This is not my amendment. It is the amendment recommended by the Committee on Agriculture and offered here by me.

Mr. HARRIS. That only strengthens my case.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Mississippi states it a little strongly, I think, when he says that it is the exact amendment agreed upon by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I am a member of that committee and was present when the matter was discussed. The amendment was not formulated; but it was understood that the chairman of the committee should formulate an amendment, and that it should be again presented to the members of the committee. I have never seen it from that time until the present day.

Mr. GEORGE. It is the amendment formulated by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PADDOCK. I say it was formulated by the chairman, and I supposed it was again to be submitted to the members of the committee for consideration before it was reported to the Senate. I do not therefore feel myself bound to support the amendment as it is presented.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the amendment different from the one the committee agreed to?

Mr. PADDOCK. Perhaps not materially. I should change it somewhat if I had to draw it myself. But aside from the fact that it was not considered subsequently by the committee, as was the understanding, I have come to the conclusion, after hearing the remark made by the Senator from Kansas in charge of the bill and the statement of the Senator from Florida as to his views, that perhaps it is just as well to let the matter go over until the next session, when we shall have a better opportunity to consider the whole question and when we shall have a new and enlarged Department to take up the whole subject and determine upon the proper method. I shall therefore vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out of the bill from line 10, on page 9, to line 6, on page 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The part proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Beginning on page 9, line 10, it is proposed to strike out the following paragraph:

For the encouragement and development of the culture of raising raw silk, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Woman's Silk Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia, and to be paid directly to said association; and said association shall make a full and detailed report of the expenditures and results obtained under this appropriation to the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall transmit the same to Congress, and $2,500 for the same purposes and under the same restrictions and conditions to the Ladies' Silk Culture Society of California, and for the continuation of the study and experiments by Joseph Neumann of the wild native silk-worm of California, $2,500, to be paid directly to said Joseph Neumann; and the said Joseph Neumann shall report the results of such work to Congress through the Secretary of Agriculture on or before the 1st day of January, 1890.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss this subject at any length. Here is an appropriation of small amounts, it is true—one of $5,000 and another of $2,500—to encourage the development and culture of raising raw silk. The production of raw silk and the manufacture of silk are very interesting industries. Already there is a considerable production of raw silk in New Jersey, in Pennsylvania, in California, and perhaps elsewhere. So the production of raw silk is going on, and we see frequently evidences of the manufacture of that silk into very fine fabrics in New Jersey and perhaps elsewhere.

I do not see the necessity, in an existing industry going regularly on and entering into the commerce of the country, of making these donations, and especially in the form in which they are here made. Of course I have less to say about the form than the substance. The first clause of the provision reads:

For the encouragement and development of the culture of raising raw silk, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Woman's Silk Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia, and to be paid directly to said association.

A like appropriation of $2,500 is to be made to the Ladies' Silk Culture Society of California. It is not only, it seems to me, an unnecessary sort of legislation, but I do not like any legislation that selects out particular persons to give them money.

If there is an encouragement to be offered for making silk, it ought to be offered in such a manner as to induce others to go into it and to promote competition and develop that industry. This thing of giving a bonus to particular societies for the purpose of inducing the raising of raw silk does not seem to me to be right. I simply propose to strike this provision out, in order to evidence my own opposition to that feature of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. This method of appropriating the public money is open fairly to criticism, but there has been a consensus of opinion on the part of the committees of both Houses and on the part of the Department of Agriculture that these two associations, that in Philadelphia and that in California, have done a great deal of good in the way of the education of the public in a direction which it is expected will shortly assume practical shape. It is true the conditions which obtain in France and in Italy in the manufacture of what is known as raw silk, of which the American manufacturers import large quantities, do not exist here now, but still there is a large body of unemployed people, sedentary people, who are obliged to remain at home and unable to get around, in addition to boys and girls, who might be well employed in the manufacture and production of raw silk.

The manufacture of silk in this country has resulted in the employment of a very large number of people who otherwise would not have been employed at all. One of the largest manufacturing companies of silk in the United States, with headquarters at Paterson, N. J., has already built factories at Allentown, at Pottsville, and I think at Reading, in Pennsylvania, being induced to locate at those points because there were there unemployed boys and girls, the result of the employment of their fathers in the iron-works at those places. These children have thus been taken out of the streets and have been put to useful employment in a light calling in which they can earn a living and under the influences of which they are kept from the haunts of vice.

The natural extension now of this idea is in the direction of the production of raw silk. Some of these days we shall, I have no doubt, in the development of our tariff system, impose a duty upon the importation of raw silk. A proposition of the kind made by myself during the present session of Congress received a very large vote in this body, and I believe if it could have been properly presented it would have received a majority.

A considerable amount of work is necessary to be done for information to familiarize our people with this line of production in order to get ready for that which I believe is not only the inevitable but the judicious thing to do; and as long as the Government is not itself in a condition to do it or does not care to undertake it, it need not hesitate, I think, to employ such agencies as the Woman's Silk Culture Association at Philadelphia and a similar institution in the State of California. The amount is not large, and I do not think the precedent will be dangerous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. On consultation with the Senator from Kansas who has charge of the bill, and is also a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I move, on page 12, in line 24, after the word "statistics," to insert:

One superintendent of said division, $2,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to insert, after line 6, on page 10:

Also $10,000, to be paid direct to Professor Joseph Neumann, to feed and develop silk-worm culture of the Bombyx mori, or mulberry species, and for traveling within the United States and other necessary expenses in investigating, collecting, and disseminating sericulture; and the said Joseph Neumann shall report the results of such work to Congress, through the Department of Agriculture, on or before the end of the fiscal year 1890.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order on the amendment. It has not been estimated for, and it is new legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw the point of order. I suppose the amendment is subject to the point of order if it is insisted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12389) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Osage River at some accessible point in the county of Benton, in the State of Missouri, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 11338) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Coosa River at Gadsden, in the State of Alabama;

A bill (S. 24) to extend the limits of the port of Portland as a port of entry;

A bill (S. 28) to create a port of delivery at Port Angeles, in the district of Puget Sound, Washington Territory;

A bill (S. 3146) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo.;

A bill (S. 3284) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew at or near Ward's Ferry, Louisiana;

A bill (S. 3645) granting to the Astoria and South Coast Railway Company the right to construct a bridge across Young's Bay, a navigable stream in the county of Clatsop and State of Oregon;

A bill (S. 3666) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges across the Red River," approved May 21, 1888; and

A bill (S. 3921) to authorize the Kentucky Union Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Kentucky River and its tributaries.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that during the remainder of the session members-elect of the House of Representatives be admitted to the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that during the remainder of the session members-elect of the House of Representatives may be admitted to the privileges of the floor of the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. MITCHELL. Does that include Delegates?

Mr. HOAR. It does.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3560) for the relief of William S. Rosecrans.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of General P. H. Sheridan, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

IRENE RUCKER SHERIDAN.

Mr. FARWELL. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on Senate bill 3423.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of General P. H. Sheridan.

Mr. FARWELL. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAVIS, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9623) to provide for printing Government securities in the highest style of art.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator to let me call up——

Mr. HOAR. I must object. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. GORMAN. If it is understood that I can have unanimous consent——

Mr. HOAR. I desire to object to anything except the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts calls for the regular order. The Chair will lay before the Senate the regular order.

Mr. DAWES. I appeal to my colleague, as it is a late hour of the afternoon——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will suspend until the regular order is laid before the Senate. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution reported by Mr. EVARTS, directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to revise the existing laws regulating the election of members of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] yield to his colleague?

Mr. HOAR. I must decline to yield to anybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] declines to yield.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, if the resolution is up and debate upon it is now in order, I propose to submit some remarks upon it.

Mr. HOAR. What has become of the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to proceed to the consideration of a bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland made a motion to proceed to the consideration of a certain bill. The Senator from Massachusetts addressing the Chair called for the regular order. The Chair has now laid before the Senate the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. But I understand the regular order is the motion of the Senator from Maryland to proceed to other business before the Senate, which was in order even if the regular order was demanded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order was laid before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. The regular order is the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the unfinished business and it has been laid before the Senate. If the Senator from Maryland claims the floor, he will be recognized.

Mr. GORMAN. In view of the statement of my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that he desires to submit some remarks upon the resolution, I, as a matter of course, yield the floor to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. HOAR. I deny the right of the Senator from Maryland to yield the floor to anybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland can decline to speak, and if he does the Chair will recognize the Senator from Texas. Does the Senator from Maryland claim the floor?

Mr. GORMAN. I do not claim it under the circumstances.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make known to the Chair——

Mr. REAGAN. I thought I had been recognized.

Mr. HOAR. I addressed the Chair before the Senator from Texas addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think so.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. I will make no disturbance about it, because I am sure of the desire of the Chair to do exact justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts may have been on his feet. The Chair could not look in all directions at the same time.

Mr. HOAR. I addressed the Chair in an audible voice two minutes before the Senator from Texas rose, for the purpose of moving to proceed to take up the resolution; but if the Chair, as very naturally, and as happens a thousand times in the administration of his office, two gentlemen rising at nearly the same time, did not hear me, I yield instantly. I am as sure of the purpose of the present occupant of the Chair to do exact justice in his office as I am of my own life.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the Senator from Massachusetts called for the regular order the Chair supposed that he desired to proceed with the resolution, and the Chair laid it before the Senate. The Senator from Texas immediately rose, and the Chair did not see the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. It was a misunderstanding. I see how it arose. The misunderstanding arose from the fact that I supposed the regular order was the motion of the Senator from Maryland, the Chair having recognized him, and he having made the motion, and the Chair having announced it. Then the Senator from Texas rose, asking the Senator from Maryland to yield to him, and then I demanded the regular order, which was the undebatable motion of the Senator from Maryland. But I do not care about pursuing it. I will let it go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the other business was demanded, which is the regular order, and the only regular order.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to make an inquiry.

Mr. REAGAN. If I am entitled to the floor, I should like to proceed.

Mr. FRYE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HOAR. If the Chair will rule who is entitled to the floor, I will acquiesce with great pleasure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that under the circumstances he is compelled to recognize the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. HOAR. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. REAGAN. I will yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. My memory may be wrong about the matter, but my recollection is that the regular order at 2 o'clock was laid before the Senate; that the regular order was the resolution reported by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], and that then the Senator from Massachusetts asked that it be laid aside and that the resolution offered by him might be considered.

Mr. HARRIS. That was in the morning hour.

Mr. FRYE. Was it not after 2 o'clock?

Mr. HARRIS. It was in the morning hour, before 2 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. It was in the morning hour?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes.

Mr. FRYE. Then I was mistaken. I supposed it was after 2 o'clock when the request was made and that it had been acceded to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the facts as to the alleged outrages in Washington County, Texas, as they appear from the statements made by the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the one side, and in the very able presentation of the case by my colleague on the other, have been so fully presented that I have no need to examine them further in detail.

From these facts it is apparent that unfortunate troubles were brought about in Washington County, Texas, partly by race prejudices, but mainly by the bad conduct and bad counsels of white men seeking to control the votes of the negroes for the unjust and wicked purpose of securing offices to enable them to plunder and oppress the tax-payers and good people of that county.

This I think no impartial person can doubt who will take the trouble to read the testimony. And that the memorialists who brought this case before Congress were prime movers in this wrong and are mainly responsible primarily for the wrongs which followed is made clear by the testimony. And that they have sought to render the people of that county and State odious because the people of Washington County refused any longer to give them offices to enable them to carry out their schemes of plunder is also placed by the evidence beyond doubt.

Their appeal to Congress was no doubt made to enable them to represent themselves as martyrs on account of their Republican principles, so as to secure the favor and support of the Republican party; and as compensation to that party they undertook to furnish it evidence of supposed facts to enable it to make another sectional crusade against the Southern States for political partisan effect. That they have been successful in securing for their appeal a strictly partisan and sectional support is demonstrated by the report of the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which presents to the Senate and the country a purely one-sided and partisan view of the subject, by adopting as their own the views of the memorialists, who are shown to be unreliable and untruthful and infamous by the testimony of many citizens, Democrats, Republicans, Germans, and negroes, numbers of whom are the peers in integrity and patriotism and truthfulness of the Senators on this floor.

I make these statements to show the origin and animus of this political crusade, but not to deny or justify wrongs done or crimes committed by people in Washington County. The evidence shows that ballot-boxes were violated in two or three instances, but it also shows that these acts did not change the result of the election in any case. It also shows that three men who were charged with murder were taken from the jail and hung by a mob. No one deplores more than I do the commission of these crimes, or can desire more than I do that the men who commit such crimes should be punished for their commission; and in expressing this sentiment I am sure I voice the sentiments of the good people of Washington County and of the State of Texas.

That much had been done by these memorialists and those who acted with them to cause indignation and violence is fully shown by the evidence. Their maladministration of the county offices, fraudulent expenditure of public money, embezzlements, and their appeals to race prejudices of a recently enfranchised class, most of whom are very ignorant, to such an extent as to endanger the peace in that county, is fully shown by the evidence. Under the leadership and advice of some of these white men a number of negroes went, armed with shotguns and pistols, to the election at Flewellen's Store, and there cruelly murdered D. M. Bolton, an inoffensive, unarmed young white man of most excellent character, who visited the polling-place, as is supposed, to learn the state of the vote, his father being one of the candidates. To this was added alarming rumors that the negroes were banding together for hostile purposes.

It was under such circumstances as these that three of the negroes charged with the murder of Bolton were hung by the mob. This fact, following the robbing of two ballot-boxes and disturbance at a third, was well calculated to exasperate the negroes, so that we can understand how, under all these circumstances, real danger to the peace of that people did exist.

I do not complain of the fact that such occurrences excite unfriendly criticism and comment. They were repugnant to our sense of justice and a violation of law in matters of great moment to all. But I do protest that it is cruelly and wantonly unjust to charge upon the good people of Washington County and of the State of Texas responsibility for these crimes, which they abhorred and would punish if they could find the perpetrators. And I most solemnly protest against the wickedness of a partisan and sectional appeal being made on account of the condition of things which then existed there, to excite sectional prejudices for party purposes.

If we are to judge of the people of whole communities and States by the law-breakers in them, what are we to say of the proud and prosperous new State of Kansas, where recently there was an appeal to arms and bloodshed and murders by a mob over an effort to locate a school?

And what are we to say of the great State of New York and of the beautiful city of Brooklyn, where a few weeks ago a poor young man, Mr. Henry W. Adams, a descendant, as we are informed by the newspapers, of John Quincy Adams, was thrown from the window of the garret in which he was lodging and instantly killed by a mob for seeking employment as a street-car driver, when the mob was refusing to allow the cars to be moved.

And what shall we say of the great States of Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, where disguised and secret bands of White Caps lynch, whip on their bare backs men and women and drive them from their homes?

And what shall we say of the good State of Minnesota and of the enterprising city of St. Paul, where a few weeks ago Professor D. Henzel received a printed notice, headed with a skull and cross-bones, warning him to change his ways, and charging that he had made himself obnoxious on several occasions and was an habitual drunkard, and soon after received a second warning from some secret source or association unknown to him, which read as follows:

This is the second and last warning. Beware of the Mystic League.

The professor laughed at these warnings. But about 11 o'clock at night he left his hotel and was passing up the street, when he was suddenly attacked by three men and beaten with heavy sticks; three teeth were knocked down his throat, his nose broken, his head severely bruised in several places, and he otherwise injured.

I do not mention these things as matters of special reproach to the people and States in which they occurred; such things may occur anywhere, and would not be countenanced in those States or in any other State in the Union by the better and law-abiding class of the people. Nor do I mention them for the purpose of preaching a political crusade against those States or of making them a pretext for Federal legislation.

I only mention them to show that lawlessness, mobs, and violence may occur anywhere, without damning the character of the communities or States in which they occur.

The fathers and founders of our political system understood human society and human nature, no doubt, as well as we do. And they understood, too, the necessity of providing for the repression and punishment of crime as well as we do.

They believed, too, in the capacity of our people for self-government—local self-government. And they made this one of the distinguishing characteristics of our democratic system of government as contradistinguished from the political theory of the governments of the Old World, under which it was assumed that the governments must be strong enough so that by their repressive force they can maintain order, protect society, and enforce law without reference to the wishes or will of their people.

If ever the American people shall abandon the idea that the people of the States are capable of governing themselves, and if they shall adopt the idea that the people of the States must be governed by a power outside of and superior to themselves, then our free constitutional republic will be at an end and a government of force, a despotism, will be substituted for a government of consent, such as our illustrious fathers framed for us.

Under our political system the Federal Government may punish offenses and crimes against its own laws, but none other. The States are charged with the general preservation of the peace of society and with the punishment of murder, robbery, burglary, arson, and all offenses and crimes against the laws of the State, but they can not punish crimes and offenses against the Federal laws without Federal permission.

In the light of these provisions let us look at the case before us. There was an election in Washington County for State, district, and county officers, and for a member of Congress. Before and during and after this election there were contention, strife, violence, and breaches of the laws of the State about the election of the county officers alone, no disturbance or strife about the election of the State and district officers, and no pretense of any violation of law which affected the election of a member of Congress.

What follows? The defeated candidates for county offices and their friends memorialized Congress, alleging that they were law-abiding citizens of Washington County, Texas; that they are now refugees from their homes in consequence of political persecutions; that they have in vain appealed for protection of their lives and property and for security of their families to the local and State authorities of said county and State, and that they have now no other recourse than an appeal to Congress.

In reference to what is said about an appeal to the county and State authorities for protection, my colleague has so fully answered that point that I do not deem it necessary to repeat the argument; but the fact was that these complainants were the informers and witnesses who brought the parties that they accused to trial, and the persons accused, after a trial before a Republican judge and after a most vigorous prosecution, were acquitted.

So that fully answers this statement of the memorialists.

There is no pretense that the Constitution of the United States or any treaty or any act of Congress has been violated, or that anything has been done over which Congress has any jurisdiction.

Thereupon this Senate adopted a resolution directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to inquire into all the circumstances of and connected with the said alleged events. In the preamble to that resolution it is incidentally stated that a member of Congress was voted for at said election. But neither the memorial of the persons complaining, or the evidence, or the report of the committee, or the speeches of Senators show that the disturbances complained of had any relation to or effect upon the election of the member of Congress.

What then?

After going through a labored investigation that committee reports to the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed carefully to revise the existing laws regulating elections of members of Congress with a view of providing for a more complete protection of the exercise of the elective franchise, and for the punishment of offenses against it, and to report to the next legislative session of the Senate by bill or otherwise.

They do not logically respond to the complaints of the petitioners or to the testimony of the witnesses or to the resolution of the Senate—I mean the resolution under which the Senate acted—but recommended a revision of the laws regulating the election of members of Congress.

I earnestly invite the attention of the Senate to the memorial, the answer to it by the citizens of Washington County, the testimony, and the report of the committee. And I aver that in any tribunal other than a political one, in any tribunal where justice is administered according to law, and where the purpose would be to attain the ends of justice, and not the promotion of political and partisan ends, the allegations of the memorialists would be utterly discredited.

I believe, and feel warranted in saying, that even in political trials in past ages more falsehood and perjury was never employed to blacken the character of a people or to promote the purposes of a political party.

Senators ought to understand that the people of the States where African slavery recently existed are peculiarly and painfully situated, and that they deserve the sympathy and friendly support of the people of the States not so situated rather than to be made the subjects of persecution for the stimulation of sectional prejudice as a means of promoting partisan ends.

Senators ought to understand that the white people of the Southern States are of the same race and kindred as themselves, with the same political and religious principles, and the same system of education, the same industries and aspirations and hopes as themselves, and with the same love of justice and respect for law. Remembering this, a spirit of Christian charity as well as wise statesmanship would seem to require them to place themselves, in imagination at least, in the place of the people of the Southern States as the best means of enabling them fairly to realize what the race problem in those States means. And this would enable them to consider more fairly and justly how it is to be dealt with.

It should not be forgotten that the people of those States and of this age and generation are not responsible for the existence of a large African population among them. That population was brought to this country two or three centuries ago by the Christian nations of Western Europe. And the importation of African slaves was kept up by our colonial ancestors, North and South, until the present Government was formed, and its continuance was authorized by the Federal Constitution for twenty years after its adoption. It ought not to be forgotten that at the date of the Declaration of Independence the people of all the colonies held African slaves, and that at the date of the adoption of the Constitution twelve of the thirteen States were slaveholding States.

I state these facts not to reproach any one, not to justify the existence of slavery, but to show that if it was wrong, the whole American people were responsible for that wrong, and that no part of our people ought to wish the evils it has entailed on us made worse because of prejudice on this subject against the Southern people. Public opinion has greatly changed on this subject since our Government was formed.

The general who was in chief command of our armies during the Revolution was a slaveholder. The president of the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States was a slaveholder. President Washington was a slaveholder; so were Presidents Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Polk, and Taylor.

First the Constitution and laws of the United States and of most of the States encouraged and protected the institution of African slavery. Later it was tolerated, and finally it was abolished by war, destroying to the owners of slaves about $3,000,000,000 of property value, and overturning the social and industrial condition of fifteen States and of millions of people.

Following this was the enfranchisement with the rights of citizenship of the six or seven million people, and the conferring on them the right to vote, when probably seven-eighths of them had no just conception of the nature of political government, or of the functions of public offices, thus imperiling good government and the peace of society in several States, and in many local communities.

This condition was much intensified by camp-followers of the Army and men of bad reputation from the Northern States, and some infamous traitors to their kindred and race in the Southern States, willing to sell their souls for office and money, and seeking to use these newly enfranchised people to promote their personal fortunes by making them believe that the white people among whom they lived were their enemies, and thus creating race prejudices where none did exist, and where none would have probably existed of a serious character but for the teachings of these bad white men.

This condition of things was still further intensified by the fact that a class of politicians in this country, instead of trying in the interest of both races and for the welfare of the whole country to harmonize the feelings and interests of the whites and blacks, have done all they could to produce alienation and ill-will among them as a means of procuring or promoting partisan political ends.

In the mean time the white people of those States have been struggling with this problem as best they could. The blacks are under the protection of the law everywhere. They have the right to vote everywhere. Their lives and property are protected by the same laws which protect the lives and property of white people. The whites, who have owned most of the property, have taxed themselves and furnished schools to aid in the education of the blacks, in order to do what they could to qualify them for good citizenship and its duties.

In all this, friction has sometimes occurred and wrongs have been done and crimes committed by those of both races. The wonder is, under these circumstances, not that conflicts and crime have occasionally occurred, but that they have not oftener occurred with more serious results.

I do not mention these things for criticism or to discuss the rightfulness or wrongfulness of any of them, but for the purpose of showing that this condition of things is the result of causes for which the Southern people are not alone responsible and which they had no power to prevent—that this condition is the outcome of a policy introduced by the governments of Western Europe, fostered by all the American Colonies, and sanctioned by the Constitution and laws of the United States and of most of the States; and I mention them for the further purpose of appealing to Senators who represent States not involved in this condition to aid us by their wisdom and patriotism and sense of justice to solve this race problem in such a way as to save the rights of all the people of all races and sections, and in so doing to aid us in giving security, prosperity, and peace to the whole country.

If the opposite policy of sectional agitation and fault-finding, and the encouragement of race and sectional prejudices is to be continued in the future as a means of political advantage, by consolidating partisan strength, or for any other reason, it will mean, and can only mean, oppression and wrong by the majority section of the country to the minority section. But it will mean also a great deal more than this.

It will mean strife and ill-will where charity and fraternal good-will should exist. It will mean that partisan malignity shall take the place of patriotism. It will mean that sectional hatred shall take the place of patriotic devotion to the best interests of the whole Union. It will mean race divisions and strife and suffering at the South, and a greatly retarded prosperity at the North. It will mean, if carried to its logical end, a government of force substituted for our government of consent, and that the Southern States of the Union are to be made the Ireland of America, with all the multiplied evils to the whole country which must necessarily flow from such a policy.

And worse still, if the policy of the men who would overthrow the rights of local self-government in the States is to prevail, they would certainly Africanize some of the Southern States, render it impossible for the white people to remain in them, and, leaving them to African rule, they would plunge them into barbarism, make any other government than a despotism impossible in them, make them valueless to the Union, distinctive of the general welfare and best interests of the whole country, and compel the adoption of military rule in them instead of local, civil, and constitutional self-government such as they now enjoy.

It seems to me needful that the Senate should proceed with great caution and deliberation with the consideration of measures which would necessarily lead to consequences so fatal to good government and popular liberty.

It is undoubtedly true that the bad, the violent, the lawless men of the South get the inspiration for their conduct to a great extent from the wicked politicians and newspapers of the Northern States who foment sectional strife for partisan purposes, not caring how much injury is inflicted so that by this means a temporary partisan success is achieved.

If Northern politicians and newspapers would pursue a friendly course towards the people of the South bad men in the South would be deprived to a large extent of a pretext for such wrongs as occasionally occur there, and good men in the South would be aided in their efforts to prevent violations of the law.

Not the Southern States alone, but this whole country has before it a serious problem to solve in this race question. It will require time and patience for its solution. But I believe the wisdom and patriotism of this country is equal to that task, and that in due time it will be solved; but not wisely if it is to be done by the intermeddling of politicians for political purposes. The blacks through the ages of pupilage in their former condition as slaves were raised from a condition of savage barbarism and cannibalism to a knowledge of the arts of peace and industry, and the greater portion of them have learned the difference between superstition and religion.

Education is progressing favorably among them, and a spirit of inquiry has been awakened among them which will no doubt lead to good results. Even now some of them are men of learning and intelligence; some of them are efficient educators of their race; and there are divines of real ability and of much usefulness among them. A good many of them have acquired property and own their own homes. And as a rule, those who have acquired intelligence, property, and homes have become conservative, and aid by their examples and counsels in preventing strife and preserving order. I have myself sold nearly a dozen freedmen land for their homes, and they have been paid for.

The people of the Southern States understand and recognize such facts as I have just stated. They willingly pay taxes to aid in the education of the freedmen and help them to build school-houses and churches, because they believe these instrumentalities improve their chances for understanding the rights and duties of citizenship and will make them better and more useful citizens.

I make these statements to show, among other things, how different, as a general rule, the relations of the white and black people of the Southern States are from what politicians and newspapers engaged in sectional agitation often represent them to be. It suits such men and papers to seize on every wrong that is done and on every violation of law and hold them before the public as representing the real condition of things. It does not suit them to allow their partisans to know the truth as it is.

If the Senators who made the report we are considering could travel through Texas and see the actual relations as they exist there between the races and could hear from the white people there what they think and how they feel about this race problem, I feel sure they would regret having made such a report as they have submitted to the Senate.

I shall vote against the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections because—

First. It is not warranted by the testimony in the case.

Second. Congress has no rightful jurisdiction over the case as presented.

Third. Because such a proceeding as this contemplates a denial of the right of local self-government.

Inasmuch as another resolution is presented to the Senate and will doubtless come up for action, the resolution presented by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on behalf of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, for a much more extended and general investigation than the one proposed by the resolution which I am considering, and as I may not have occasion again to give expression to my views upon that subject, without attempting to elaborate the views which I entertain or to discuss them at length, I propose to submit certain reasons why I can not vote for that resolution.

The resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts as now amended is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to inquire whether in any State the free and lawful expression of the will of the people in the election of members of the Fifty-first Congress and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the election of members of State Legislatures who have elected or are to elect Senators of the United States who may claim seats during said Congress, and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the choice of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States in 1888 and declaring the result thereof, has been prevented by violence, intimidation, bribery or other unlawful use of money, fraud, or other crime.

Also, whether the laws governing such elections in any States have been so framed or administered as to accomplish or permit the defeat of the will of the people in such elections.

Also, to inquire into the facts of the recent election in the State of Louisiana, held on the 17th day of April, 1888, at which there was chosen a Legislature which has since elected two United States Senators.

And said committee shall also inquire whether there were in connection with the aforesaid election illegalities, frauds, false canvasses, and false returns so extensive and so systematic in their character as to show that there existed on the part of the various State election officers a deliberate plan to apparently carry said elections without regard to the votes actually cast, and to choose a governor and other State officers and a State Legislature by such illegal, false, and fraudulent means, and if so, whether said Legislature was actually and duly elected by the people of Louisiana or was in fact substantially the creation solely of the returning and canvassing officers, and whether said State of Louisiana has a republican form of government, including a Legislature entitled to choose United States Senators and to provide methods for the appointment of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States.

I can not vote for that resolution for these reasons:

First. The Senate has no jurisdiction over the question of the election of the members of the House of Representatives. That body is the judge of the qualification and election of its own members, by the Congress to which they are elected, not by the Senate.

Second. This Senate has no jurisdiction over the election of members of a State Legislature. The two houses of the several Legislatures are the judges of the qualification and election of the members of their respective bodies.

Third. There being no contest about the election of candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States, this Senate has no jurisdiction over the question of the election of electors for President and Vice-President. These officers being elected without contest the powers of the electors are exhausted, and their offices are functus officio. There is nothing to investigate.

Fourth. This Senate has no jurisdiction to inquire into the motives governing the enactment of the laws of the several States, or whether such laws reflect the will of the people. These are questions for the consideration of the people and the authorities of the several States. For the Senate to enter on such an investigation would be an act of impertinent intermeddling in matters over which they have no authority or control, and can only have for its purpose a denial of the right and capacity of the people of such States for self-government, and the overthrow of our present political system, so as to consolidate all political power in the Federal Government and establish a despotism of federal majorities—and so destroy republican government in this country.

Fifth. This Senate has no power or right to inquire into the regularity of the election of Senators whose terms of office do not commence until the beginning of the Fifty-first Congress. The Senate of each Congress is the judge of the qualifications of its members. This Congress can not determine who are to be members of the next Congress.

Sixth. This Senate has no right or constitutional authority to set on foot an investigation as to "illegalities, frauds, and false canvasses" in elections in the States, except in a case made under the Constitution and laws of contest for the right of a Senator to his seat. The Senate is not charged by the Constitution with a general supervision over the conduct of States of the Union.

Seventh. The Congress of the United States, on the application of a Territory for admission into the Union as a State, has the constitutional right to determine whether the Government provided for is republican as a condition of its admission; and being in the Union, if they should adopt a despotic or monarchical or other anti-republican form of government, and that question should be brought before Congress in any legal way, Congress might determine whether such State had a republican government.

Where a State government is republican in form, with its executive, legislative, and judicial officers selected as in the other States, mere irregularities and violations of law in such States, unless they are of a character which deprive the great body of the people of their rights and liberty, will not justify Congressional interference.

To illustrate this view, if it could be proven that the great States of New York and Indiana were carried in the recent election for President and Vice-President by bribery and corruption, this would be a great crime and anti-republican, but it would not justify a proceeding by Congress to deprive the people of those States of the rights of local self-government. It would be the act of criminals and not the manifestation of a purpose by their people in their organic capacity to overthrow or destroy republican government in those States. So there may have been instances of the violation of the law in Louisiana, but if so they have been the acts of criminals and not the acts of the people of that State in their organic capacity, manifesting a pupose to overthrow or destroy republican government.

I conclude by saying that questions of such gravity as are raised by these resolutions have rarely come before this country or any country in the world. They unquestionably raise the question of the capacity of the people for self-government, and they make it necessary, if we are to proceed, that we shall determine that the people of certain States in this Union are no longer capable of self-government and that they must be governed by a power outside of themselves and superior to themselves, whose coercive force will enable it, independently of them, to preserve the peace of society and enforce the laws.

If we do that, Mr. President, instead of this proceeding being a proceeding to maintain republican government, it will be a proceeding which beyond all doubt will overthrow republican government in this country and establish a despotism of majorities, the worst of all characters of despotism.

I maintain that in a country of the territorial extent of this, with the great population this country has and with the vast and diversified interests which it has, that only two forms of government are practicable. The one form is a federal system, a confederation of governments, such as we have, by which we intrust to the General Government all the duties which pertain to the relations between the States and with foreign powers and to the general protection and defense of the country. To the other is confided control over local and domestic institutions. This takes local questions out of the arena of Federal politics and leaves them to be settled by the people immediately concerned with them, and not by people who have no concern and no just relations with them. The other system of government which might exist in this country would be a monarchy.

A central republic could not be long maintained in this country. There would always be in it a majority and minority section. And the majority section, whichever it might be, would be sure to oppress the minority section, and by so doing would create discontent and sooner or later bring about strife and revolution.

If we are to adopt the principle that self-government is no longer practicable, if we destroy it in a portion of the States, it may be assumed that we can govern our Ireland, oppress and rob and plunder our Ireland and make the people vote as we please, or prohibit them from voting, and that we shall not disturb the rest of the United States. If Senator's delude themselves with such a belief they ought, it seems to me, to revise their studies and their thoughts upon this subject. Once we break down the federative system, once we deny the capacity of the people of a State in this Union for self-government, we will have destroyed the Union which our fathers made, and we will will have sacrificed the liberty which cost so much blood and suffering, and which is the result of such consummate wisdom in the formation of the government whose blessings we enjoy.

The field which this subject opens is so large that it is hard to see where one may suspend his remarks. The anxiety which I feel extends not merely to the States in which the black population live, but it extends to the whole American people and to all the States.

I have been reared amongst the black people and have lived amongst them all my life, and associated with them all my life. Those who belonged to my family when they were slaves had as much affection for me as my children have, and I have provided for their welfare and security where their necessities called for such provision.

Those who live around me got into scrapes such as freed people very often got into soon after their liberation by committing petty offenses not common among white people, and which, I am glad to say, are becoming less common among the blacks. When they got into trouble they came to me to defend and take care of them, and I always did it; and the only two instances of violence in relation to election laws which have occurred in the county in which I live were two cases in which black men threatened the lives of other black men for voting the Democratic ticket. I prevented bloodshed or harm being done to anybody by timely interposition. These are the only instances of intimidation or attempted wrong that I have heard of in that county, and I have been there at every election since the close of the war.

Though these things are of a personal and individual character they are not peculiar to me. The men who live in that portion of the country, who have associated with these people, understand that not only the welfare of the blacks, but the welfare of the whites depends upon the preservation of proper relations between them. So far as the protection of the law is concerned, where I am acquainted in the State of Texas their rights of person and of property are as secure as the rights of person and of property of any white man in the State.

I repeat what I said a little while ago, that if Senators could travel through that State and could mingle with the people, could know their feelings and witness their action, and see their anxiety for the promotion of harmony and prosperity between the races, and see the earnestness with which they denounce fraud and violence and wrong, I am sure they would never countenance such a report and such resolutions as have come from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which was before the Senate this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Resolution by Mr. HOAR authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate alleged election outrages in certain States.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that on this question the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal. Are they desired by one-fifth of the Senators present?

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is confined to his home by sickness, and is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], as has been stated.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to know if the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] is recorded as voting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. FAULKNER. Being paired with him, I decline to vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BROWN (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia withdraws his vote.

Mr. BROWN. I also announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Eustis,	Harris,	Reagan,
Berry,	George,	Hearst,	Saulsbury,
Call,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Coke,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Daniel,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—21.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Blair,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Teller,
Chandler,	Frye,	Paddock,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt,
Davis,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Stewart,

ABSENT—35.

Aldrich,	Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Beck,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	McPherson,	Sherman,

Brown,	Hale,	Pasco,	Vance,
Butler,	Hampton,	Payne,	Vest,
Cameron,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Walthall.
Chace,	Jones of Arkansas,	Quay,

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In view of the fact that this is the 22d day of February, the birthday of George Washington, I think in reverence to his memory we ought to adjourn, and I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" have it.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for a division.

The question being put, the ayes were 23.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and withhold my vote in his absence.

Mr. BROWN (when Mr. COLQUITT'S name was called). I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] and my own pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HEARST (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with my associate from California [Mr. STANFORD] on political questions, and as this seems to be drifting that way very much, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Daniel,	Gray,	Reagan,
Berry,	Eustis,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Call,	George,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Gorman,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—21.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Blair,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Teller,

Butler,	Hearst,	Payne,	Vest,
Cameron,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Walthall.
Chace,	Jones of Arkansas,	Quay,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HARRIS. Upon which I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon which the Senator from Tennessee asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. My colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. I shall not announce these pairs again for the evening.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. TELLER. On this and the two preceding motions my colleague [Mr. BOWEN] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Platt,

Hampton,	Palmer,	Sawyer,
Hearst,	Pasco,	Sherman,
Hiscock,	Payne,	Spooner,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call disclosing the absence of a quorum, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I move a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Dawes,	Hiscock,	Sabin,
Bate,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Berry,	Eustis,	Ingalls,	Stewart,
Blair,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Teller,
Call,	Frye,	Morrill,	Vest,
Chandler,	George,	Paddock,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Wilson of Iowa,
Coke,	Gray,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	Harris,	Pugh,
Daniel,	Hawley,	Ransom,
Davis,	Hearst,	Reagan,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names.

Mr. HARRIS. In that condition of affairs, Mr. President, I am somewhat in doubt as to the next step. It is evident that there is not a voting quorum here, and quite evident from the roll-call that there is an actual quorum present. I had intended to follow up the motion by a motion to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. DAWES. Instead of making that motion will not the Senator make a motion to take up and consider at the present time the Sioux bill that I have been trying to get up?

Mr. HARRIS (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.). In lieu of which I believe I will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask what was the number of Senators present as disclosed by the last roll-call?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PASCO (when his name called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], or I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bate,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Berry,	George,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Call,	Gorman,	Ransom,
Coke,	Gray,	Reagan,
Daniel,	Harris,	Turpie,

NAYS—19.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Platt,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Frye,	Morrill,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Hawley,	Paddock,

ABSENT—40.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Beck,	Dolph,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Farwell,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Spooner,
Brown,	Hale,	Pasco,	Stanford,
Butler,	Hampton,	Payne,	Teller,
Cameron,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Vance,
Chace,	Hiscock,	Quay,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,	Walthall.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It being ascertained by the call of the yeas and nays that a quorum is not present, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Davis,	Hiscock,	Sabin,
Bate,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Blair,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Teller,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Call,	Frye,	Paddock,	Voorhees,
Chandler,	George,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa
Coke,	Harris,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	Hawley,	Ransom,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have responded; a quorum is present.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. HOAR. Let the roll be called on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the roll-call will be resumed upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. GORMAN. I desire the Chair to state what the pending motion is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion to take up the resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. It is very evident that we shall not have a quorum present, and under the circumstances it is not possible to go on with the business of the Senate to-night.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us try it and see.

Mr. GORMAN. Unless we can take up by unanimous consent the bill which the Senator from Massachusetts nearest me [Mr. DAWES] desires to have considered, I shall move——

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maryland if we can not have unanimous consent to take the vote on this question at a fixed time.

Mr. GORMAN. I think not.

Mr. MORGAN. You can not do that.

Mr. HOAR. Let the roll-call proceed.

Mr. HARRIS. Was there a quorum present by the last roll-call?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators responded.

Mr. HARRIS. Did the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] understand me as objecting to the consideration of the bill to which he referred awhile ago?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be the regular order, then, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed.

Mr. GORMAN (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m). I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The last motion was a motion to adjourn.

Mr. GORMAN. The last business was the call of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think that has been regarded hitherto under the practice of the Senate as the intervention of business. It is requisite before the same motion can be repeated that some business shall have intervened.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it is manifest——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This motion is not debatable.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say, as it is manifest that there is a purpose on the other side of the Chamber to filibuster, by alternating these several undebatable motions, which have been several times voted down, I shall not undertake (although a quorum of the Senate is present to act now, but is absent when there is a vote) to press the Senate further to-night. I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SAWYER. I wish the Senator would withdraw that motion to enable me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw the motion for one moment in order that I may make a single remark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw the motion for that purpose?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. There is nothing that has occurred here this evening which justifies the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts that this side of the Chamber is filibustering or intending to filibuster. I simply wanted to make that statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 23, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 22, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution which is on the Speaker's table touching the prerogatives of the House in relation to the revenue bill amended by the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] calls up a matter of privilege, which is in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I have some reports from the Committee on Rules to make, and I must raise the question of consideration against that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] raises the question of consideration. The Clerk will report the resolution.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BURNES.

Mr. DOCKERY. Pending the question raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I ask unanimous consent to offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the ladies' gallery of the east side of the Hall, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be set apart for the use of immediate friends of the late Hon. James N. Burnes on the occasion of the eulogies to be pronounced to-morrow at 2 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PREROGATIVES OF THE HOUSE AS TO REVENUE BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the resolution against which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] raises the question of consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the substitution by the Senate, under the form of an amendment for the bill of the House H. R. 9051, entitled "An act to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue," of another and different bill, containing a general revision of the laws imposing import duties and internal taxes, is in conflict with the true intent and purpose of section 7, Article I, of the Constitution, and that said bill and substitute be returned to the Senate with the respectful suggestion that said section vests in the House of Representatives the sole power to originate such a measure.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a point of order pending against that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] reserved a point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] now raises the question of consideration against the resolution. If the House determines to consider the resolution, the point of order will then come up for consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. I am charged with certain reports from the Committee on Rules, which I desire to present.

The SPEAKER. The question is, first, Will the House proceed to consider the resolution? If that be decided in the affirmative, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Maine upon his point of order.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 49, noes 83.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was determined in the negative—yeas 89, nays 144, not voting 89; as follows:

So the House decided not to consider the resolution.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I was not in the Hall when my name was called, though I was here before the roll-call was completed. I am not entitled to vote under the rule, but I would have voted "no" had I been here.

Mr. O'FERRALL. My colleague, Mr. LEE, is absent sick. If present, he would vote "no."

Mr. COWLES. My colleague, Mr. MCCLAMMY, is absent. If here he would vote "no."

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, who had voted in the negative, and Mr. HUTTON, who had voted in the affirmative, being paired, withdrew their votes.

Mr. BLAND, having voted in the affirmative, changed his vote, immediately before the announcement of the result, from "ay" to "no."

The following members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. BUNNELL.
Mr. HOGG with Mr. SYMES.
Mr. SNYDER with Mr. PARKER.
Mr. BARRY with Mr. GALLINGER.
Mr. GRANGER with Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut.
Mr. BIGGS with Mr. MORROW.

Mr. PERRY with Mr. NUTTING.
Mr. COLLINS with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.
Mr. CATCHINGS with Mr. COGSWELL.
Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio.
For this day:
Mr. WILKINS with Mr. MCCOMAS.
Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. MCCULLOGH.
On this vote:
Mr. GRIMES with Mr. DUNHAM.
Mr. BLANCHARD with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.
Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.
Mr. FRENCH with Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL.
Mr. THOMPSON, of California, with Mr. LEE.
The vote was announced as above stated.
Mr. BLAND. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.
Mr. RANDALL. I move to lay that motion on the table.
Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BLAND. Is it in order now to raise the question of consideration?
The SPEAKER. Against what?
Mr. RANDALL. That is what we have just been voting upon. [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. The vote just taken was upon the question whether the House would proceed to the consideration of the resolution.
Mr. BLAND. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 165, nays 83, not voting 74; as follows:

XX——139

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.
Mr. LANHAM. I desire to state on behalf of my colleague, Mr. CULBERSON, that he is absent on a committee of conference.
Mr. ENLOE. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] on this vote. If he were present, I should vote "no."
Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.
Mr. BLAND. I object.
The Clerk then read the names of those voting.
The following additional pairs were announced on this vote:
Mr. ATKINSON with Mr. ENLOE.
Mr. THOMPSON, of California, with Mr. LEE.
Mr. MORGAN wiih Mr. DUNHAM.
Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. BRUMM.
Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. HUTTON, on the Cowles tax bill. Mr. ERMENTROUT would vote for the bill; Mr. HUTTON against it.
The vote was then announced as above recorded.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING, ETC.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit, from the Committee on Rules, the following privileged report.
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to reserve the privilege of raising the question of consideration.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to do that after the report is read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on and after to-day the House sessions shall begin at 10 a. m., and after the reading of the Journal up to 11 a. m. the names of members shall be called in their alphabetical order for the consideration of matters by unanimous consent; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for unanimous consent at any other time except to concur or non-concur in Senate amendments to House bills, or to consider Senate bills when presented to the House by the Speaker.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question, unless some gentleman desires to discuss the resolution.
Mr. SPINOLA. I hope the gentleman will amend the resolution so that the names shall be called as they appear on the roll, taking a name alternately from the beginning and the end of the roll.
Mr. HATCH. How would that affect those in the middle of the roll? [Laughter.] They might object.
Mr. BLAND. I raise the question of consideration. There are important appropriation bills pending; there is a contested-election case that ought to be disposed of, and this resolution gives preference and precedence to private matters.
Mr. RANDALL. We will take care of the appropriation bills.
The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules?
Mr. WASHINGTON. Pending that I wish to ask, if the House enters upon the consideration of the resolution, will it be amendable?
The SPEAKER. Not if the previous question is ordered.
Mr. WASHINGTON. Because I shall object to the adoption of the resolution unless we begin to call the roll of members for unanimous consent where we left off when that order of business was pursued last summer. It is not fair to those of us who are near the bottom of the list.
The SPEAKER. The only question is now, Will the House proceed to consider the resolution?
The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.
Mr. RANDALL. I now demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.
The previous question was ordered.
The SPEAKER. Under the rules, thirty minutes are allowed for debate. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
Mr. RANDALL. I do not desire any time, and unless some other gentleman wishes to oppose the resolution, I ask for a vote.
Mr. BLAND. I desire simply to state, Mr. Speaker, that members on the other side of the House have strenuously pressed the consideration of the Smalls-Elliott contested-election case, and, I think, with a distinct understanding all over the House, that the case of Sullivan vs. Felton should be immediately taken up and considered after the South Carolina case was disposed of. Yet, in the face of that understanding, and although the gentleman from Georgia was pressing the consideration of that case, we were met by filibustering from the other side in order to prevent action upon it. I think, sir, in view of the fact that this case has been pending during the whole of this session of Congress, that now in the closing hours of Congress, when the appropriation bills are pressing, and when it is sought to force upon the House the consideration of revenue bills, when we have not the time to give them a fair and just consideration, it is only just to the House and just to the gentleman who has been contending for a seat, that that election case should be disposed of. It ought not to take over two or three hours, and we could dispose of it to-day without difficulty. Besides, as I have said, we have appropriation bills and other public measures of vastly more importance than the bills aimed at by that resolution which gives precedence to private bills that may be called up by the individual members on this floor.
In the interest of public legislation, in the interest of fair dealing towards gentlemen who claim seats upon this floor, I have raised the question of consideration upon that resolution, and propose to continue to raise it until that election case is disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will notice he will see that this gives one hour additional to what we now have for public business. It gives from 11 to 12 o'clock, and it gives another hour from 10 to 11 for unanimous consents. So that it does not in any degree interfere with the business as now conducted between the hours provided for under the rule under which we are acting.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will provide the time to consider this election case, that will be another thing.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not care about the resolution, but I want to point out that the effect of its passage will probably be to prevent gentlemen who want to pass private bills from passing them. They are only given one hour to ask unanimous consent, and one single objection kills that bill for that hour, so that it puts it here in the power of any single gentleman on the floor to prevent the passage of a bill; and this resolution, while apparently holding out an opportunity to members to get their private bills through, really prevents the majority of them from doing it. Now, as to commencing at 11 o'clock and running on, I think there is no objection to that.

Mr. PERKINS. It is that much to nothing.

Mr. RANDALL. It is an hour better than one minute.

Mr. MILLS. We had this resolution some years ago, and passed a larger number of bills under it.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. IRENE RUCKER SHERIDAN.

Mr. REED. I make a privileged report from the Committee on Rules on the accompanying resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Friday, February 22, immediately after the passage of this resolution, the bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of General P. H. Sheridan, shall be in order, and the previous question on the third reading and on the passage of the bill shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. REED. On that I demand the previous question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And on that I raise the question of consideration.

The question was put on the consideration of the resolution; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CHEADLE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 108, noes 44.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE].

Mr. SOWDEN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 175, nays 67, not voting 80; as follows:

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1128) creating ports of entry at Tacoma and Seattle, in Washington Territory.

MRS. IRENE RUCKER SHERIDAN.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. KILGORE that the House take a recess; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 2, nays 216, not voting 104; as follows:

A MEMBER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. KILGORE. Let the reading go on, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk recapitulated the names.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of the day:

Mr. FORD with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. BIGGS with Mr. DUNHAM.

The following additional pairs on this vote were announced:

Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. ATKINSON.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. STRUBLE.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until half past 9 o'clock to-morrow.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. KILGORE; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. KILGORE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 93.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

The tellers took their places.

Mr. BINGHAM (pending the count by tellers). Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent to submit a proposition whereby I think a conclusion can be reached as to this bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman can proceed.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would submit the proposition that, in lieu of the pension which the bill carries, $3,500 a year, an amendment shall be adopted making it $2,500. I propose to make that difference between this pension and the pensions allowed heretofore to the widows of major-generals for the reason that there are four minor children of General Sheridan, the oldest of whom is but twelve years of age, and those children have all to be educated. Furthermore, this is the only case in which the widow of the General of the Army will come before Congress for pension, the wife of General Sherman having recently deceased and the wife of General Grant being pensioned as the widow of a President. I therefore submit this proposition in order that we may reach a vote.

The SPEAKER. Is it the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the amendment shall be agreed to or that it shall be voted upon?

Mr. BINGHAM. That it shall be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] asks unanimous consent that the bill shall be taken up and a vote taken upon its passage with the amendment agreed to as suggested by him.

Mr. MILLS. And with the understanding that they will abide by that in a conference report.

Mr. TAULBEE. If there is to be no increase of this pension by a conference committee I shall have no objection to the proposition of the gentleman, but if there is to be any such increase then I think it my duty to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not know what a conference committee will do.

Mr. KILGORE. I assume that the gentleman is acting in good faith in making this proposition.

Mr. BINGHAM. I assure the gentleman from Texas that I am acting in good faith.

Mr. KILGORE. And I assume that the colleagues of the gentleman from Pennsylvania who sit by and consent to the agreement are acting in good faith.

Mr. STRUBLE. I, for one, think that the amendment ought not to be made, but I shall not raise any objection to it.

Mr. KILGORE. I suppose that a conference report, though privileged, would be subject to a question of consideration just the same as the bill is now, and to obstruction in other respects under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration can always be raised against a conference report.

Mr. CHEADLE. I shall not formally object to the proposition. I wish merely to enter my protest against it. I regard it as a monstrous proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM]?

Mr. KILGORE. In view of the agreement to adopt that amendment, which I think is in the line of action by Congress in regard to the pensions heretofore accorded to Mrs. Logan, to Mrs. Blair, and to Mrs. Hancock, I will not further use obstructive tactics against the consideration of this bill as amended and with the understanding which has been stated that the friends of the bill are acting in good faith in accepting the amendment. The Committee on Rules have given this measure the right of way, and it is impossible, therefore, to prevent its passage.

The SPEAKER. Then the motion to take a recess is withdrawn, the previous question is ordered, the resolution is adopted, and the Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. Gentlemen who have speeches to make on this bill ought to be permitted to do so.

The SPEAKER. There are thirty minutes for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

The Chair desires to state that it was not discovered until after the resolution was reported that an amendment to this bill had been agreed to in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, an amendment not affecting the amount of the pension, but another part of the bill. The Chair is at a loss to determine from the language of the resolution whether that amendment is to be considered pending in the House, or as having been agreed to. It will be read, that the attention of members may be called to it.

Mr. BINGHAM. The amendment is a restriction, I believe.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out, in lines 7, 8, and 9, the words "during her natural life, from and after the 5th day of August, 1888."

The SPEAKER. This amendment was agreed to in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and if there be no objection, it will be considered as agreed to in the House.

Mr. MATSON. I think there was an amendment to insert in lieu of the words stricken out, the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised at the Clerk's desk that the amendment merely strikes out the words which have been read.

Mr. MATSON. I ask to amend so as to insert in lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to insert the words he has stated.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. MATSON. I will say to gentlemen that when they make this objection they cut out the children of General Sheridan from the allowance which the pension law would make them.

Mr. REED. What is the remark of the gentleman?

Mr. MATSON. If the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" be inserted, the effect will be to give the widow the allowance provided by law for each child.

Mr. HOLMES. What is the object of inserting the words proposed?

Mr. MATSON. Because it will give the widow that much more.

Mr. HOLMES. It will merely make this matter a shuttle-cock as every different administration comes into power.

A MEMBER. Without this amendment there will be no pension for the children.

Mr. MATSON. Besides that, if the widow should remarry she ought not to have her pension continued, contrary to the general policy of the pension laws.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered. If there be no objection, the amendment striking out $3,500 and inserting $2,500 will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection. There are now thirty minutes allowed for debate.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not wish to occupy time, but I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] whether the effect of the bill as now framed and proposed to be passed, without the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," would not be, in case of the remarriage of the widow, the continuance of the pension after such marriage, contrary to the general policy of the pension laws?

Mr. MATSON. I think it would; indeed I am quite sure it would.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think that is all wrong.

Mr. MATSON. It would be a violation of the whole pension system.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not see the justice of allowing to one class of widows a pension of only $96 a year and paying to others $2,500 a year, the husbands of both classes of pensioners having lost their lives in the same service.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the qualification proposed to be inserted, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," should go in for this reason——

Mr. MATSON. It has been inserted in all the other bills.

Mr. BINGHAM. It has been in every other pension bill; and the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House, taking this Senate bill, struck out the words "during her natural life," clearly with the intent that in case of remarriage the pension should cease. The insertion of the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" would give to the children $2 a month under the general statute.

Mr. SPINOLA. That is right.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I withdraw my objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection these words will be inserted. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CHEADLE obtained the floor and yielded to Mr. KILGORE.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to say that I am opposed to pension bills of this character. While I have antagonized this and other pension bills, I have done so upon principle. The Government has adopted the system of granting pensions in proper cases to men who served in the Federal Army, and all that can now be done is to prevent the abuse of that system and wrong to the deserving. But the cases ought to be meritorious; the bounty of the Government ought not to be bestowed upon fashionable people to enable them to become the leaders in fashionable society; it ought not to go to the rich nor the lofty, and it ought not to be used to create and build up an aristocracy in a democratic government. The tendency of the times is to bestow favors on the favored, the fortunate—to give bounty as a matter of sentiment and where the least needed.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to this debate I can not discuss this question at length as I had proposed to do. I will therefore ask to extend my remarks in the RECORD and yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR].

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the gentleman from Indiana will have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen have leave to publish remarks.

Mr. LAWLER. I object.

Mr. KILGORE. I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] object to the request made by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. LAWLER. I object to all of them.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I think the amount of pension provided for in the amendment should be reduced from two thousand five hundred to two thousand. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] emphasized the importance of standing by the fundamental ideas of the American system in the legislation of Congress on the subject of pensions. I agree with him in the main in what he has said on that subject. "I believe in the principles of the American system with all my soul and without an if or a but." No man can go before me in admiration of the military achievements of General Sheridan. He wielded a flaming sword with unerring judgment, and in martial history and in the poetry of the future he will be the heroic character of the war. But the inspiring thought, the fortifying principle of that character was his faith in American principles. Without his abiding faith in these principles he would have been only a hireling in that grand conflict, and the imperishable laurels of victory would never have encircled his brow. We are proud of our republican institutions; and the central principle of republican institutions is the doctrine "that all partial laws are iniquitous, and that all special privileges are wrong." We admire the prowess of General Sheridan, but it was the grand army of American citizen soldiers that made General Sheridan a possibility; they had faith in him because he had faith in them. The flag throughout all the years of our history before the war, in so far as the General Government was concerned, had represented equality before the law. The legislation had been impartial.

The Constitution, following the Declaration of Independence, had recognized the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence; no titles of nobility were allowed, and the whole spirit of our system tended to the doctrine that so far as the General Government was concerned every child of the Republic should have an equal chance. Made by that condition, out of that condition came this great historic character. The son of a poor Irish emigrant, inspired by the principles of our system, educated by the Republic, becomes, perhaps, the most interesting military character in our history. The character acquired that reputation in a war which resulted from an effort of the American people by legal means to make our system more truly republican in its theories and practices, and was won in a triumph over those who were desirous, we believed, to create a new system in which social eminence and caste would be in ascendency as controlling factors in government.

That success was only possible because in the estimation of the heroic men who fought in the ranks as well as their trusted leaders the perpetuity of government by the people and for the people was involved. I do not know that reference to American precedents in the earlier days of the nation will have great weight, but I do know that the history of the times in which these precedents were made was of importance in forming that heroic character that made our cause and our country successful.

On the 23d day of January, 1821, a bill was under consideration in Congress to allow a pension to the mother, wife, and children of Commodore Perry, the hero who had by his leadership driven the British from the Lakes in the great naval engagement on Lake Erie, a heroic picture of which adorns the walls of the Capitol. He had been sent by his country on a dangerous mission to the Orinoco, and had died in that service far away from home and friends. The provisions of the bill allowed $350 to the mother of the hero, $400 to his widow, and $150 each to his four children until they became of age. The provision for his aged mother was struck out and the allowance for his widow and children was adopted on a vote of 76 to 62.

Subsequently, in 1824, on the 9th of January, a bill was under consideration to allow the mother of the hero the sum of $300 a year. It had been recommended by the Legislature of South Carolina, and Mr. Hamilton, of that State, supported it in an able speech; but in doing so he laid down certain principles to which I desire to call attention of the House. He said:

> In a republic like ours, where we give nothing to pride and luxury, these claims are to be considered in reference to the extent and character of the services, the ability of the Government to discharge them, the existence of absolute want of the party to be relieved, and the relief itself to be controlled by the practice of a wise and judicious frugality.

Mr. Wickliffe, of Kentucky, in opposing the bill, said:

> Shall we extend the bounty of the Government to the mothers of men who hold a distinguished rank in society, and when application is made on behalf of others who need it more tell them that we can extend our benevolence only to those who died in heading armies or squadrons in battle?

This language applies with great force at this time. There are thousands of widows all over this country whose husbands have died of disease contracted in the service, who are to-day alone struggling to earn an honest living by hard work, who are denied a few dollars a month to keep them from want. And while this is the case it is proposed to increase to a higher rate than before and vote this large sum to this widow. Do you suppose such an act will be likely to inspire the patriotism of the masses of people?

Mr. Clay, the Great Commoner, in opposing the bill to pension Mrs. Sarah Perry, after contending that in our history we had never pensioned any but those who had fallen in battle, said:

> What is the basis on which in other countries aristocracies are erected and titles and honors showered on individuals, to be transmitted down to the remotest posterity, but the same principle?

Said he:

> If you wish to make your country illustrious, you must diffuse your glory. It is not to your heroes, but to the body of the people, the men who fight your battles, to whom you are indebted for your safety and eminence as a nation.

These were the views that prevailed in our early history. It was the influence of these views that made such illustrious men as Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan possibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I do not expect or desire to be able to have this committee follow the precedent set by the Congress of 1824 in refusing to grant a pension to the aged and indigent mother of the hero of Lake Erie. Neither do I hope to be able to persuade the House to adopt the view that was held even by the friends of the pension to that aged and honored lady, namely, that a pension should only be granted to one who is in need, and then on the principles of the closest frugality; but I do hope that while there are thousands of poor widows reduced to penury by the loss of husbands who died of disease contracted and wounds received in the service of their country, while thousands of infirm parents, who have had their lives saddened and their props taken away by the untimely death of those on whom they might have leaned in their declining years, have been denied that aid which but for their patriotism they might have received from those sons who fell in the storm of battle, we shall go no further in this distinction than we have gone already.

The country granted a pension of $2,000 to Mrs. General Logan and a similar sum to Mrs. General Hancock, Mrs. Blair, and Mrs. McClellan. These worthy ladies were themselves patriots. They had borne themselves grandly, heroically, when the nation was in peril; every fiber of their hearts was in harmony with their husbands. They sustained them with their smiles of encouragement when the storm-cloud of war was darkest. They gave the sunshine of their presence to the soldiers of the Republic when groaning in anguish with wounds or bearing with heroic fortitude the agony of death. They by their own services earned the nation's gratitude.

The wife who girds her husband's sword
'Mid little ones who weep or wonder,
And bravely speaks the cheering word,
What though their hearts are rent asunder;
Doomed nightly in her dreams to hear
The bolts of death around him rattle,
Her heart hath shed a drop as dear
As e'er bedewed the field of battle.

Surely some of these eminent men are the equals and are recorded as high on the scroll of fame as any other American names. Surely their services are as much entitled to be recognized and rewarded as any in American history. Surely their honored widows are as much as any others entitled to be kindly dealt with by a loving country.

I do not suppose it will avail anything to mention the word "economy" in connection with this subject. The "vast surplus" is the excuse for appropriations of all kinds. But should we not remember that all money raised by taxation is a burden on the energy and resources of the people who must fight our future wars? Should we not remember that the lighter those burdens are, consistent with public duty, the greater will be the patriotism of the people? Should we not remember, with Alexander Hamilton, that the necessities of a nation in every period of its existence will be found to be at least equal to its resources, and that every dollar taken by the hand of extravagance from the national Treasury diminishes by that much the fund out of which we may hope in future to relieve the wants of the widows and dependent parents of the soldiers who suffered and died in the service of the country? That every dollar taken with an unequal hand from the national Treasury lessens by that much the chance that justice shall ever be done to all, and renders that neglect the more saddening in the reflection that a few in high social position are bountifully provided while the mass are left to penury and want?

The great difficulty in times of war and public danger is not to secure officers. The state has provided for that in an equal way. It is to secure soldiers for the rank and file. That difficulty will be greatly increased if Congress shall enlarge the preferences given to officers over men. I hope, therefore, that the pension in this case will be reduced to the sum allowed to Mrs. Logan, Mrs. Blair, Mrs. Hancock, and Mrs. McClellan. I had hoped that the amendment which has been indicated would be adopted. The reduction to $2,500 is in that direction. I am in favor of pensioning Mrs. Sheridan at the same rate as the widows of the four other distinguished generals of the Union service whose names are on the pension-roll. I do not think she ought to have any more. The gentleman who introduced the bill brings forward the consideration that she has her family to support, and of course that consideration is entitled to weight.

I think in the granting of pensions, which are gratuities, there should be no distinction in rank. But I do not wish to be invidious in this case. As there is only one case of the kind it will not be dangerous as a precedent. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 12 voting in favor thereof.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 132, noes 34.

So the bill was passed. [Great applause.]

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF GENERAL W. S. ROSECRANS.

Mr. RANDALL. I report, from the Committee on Rules, the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this resolution the House will proceed to consider Senate bill 3560, entitled "A bill for the relief of William S. Rosecrans," upon which the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon its third reading and upon its passage.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to offer an amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I have not the permission of the committee to do that.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the gentleman then permit me to offer an amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman can offer his amendment and have it read.

Mr. SPINOLA. Let it be read, then, for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to have it read?

Mr. RANDALL. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by including Senate bill No. 2395, authorizing the President to appoint and retire John C. Frémont as a major-general in the United States Army.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is not pending.

Mr. HATCH. You can not under the rules move to amend one private bill by adding to it another.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. STRUBLE. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 99, noes 19.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to occupy any time.

Mr. STRUBLE Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say in opposition to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to fifteen minutes.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, it is evident the House will pass this measure, but I wish before that action is taken to put myself on record as opposed to it. In my judgment it is not good policy to continue in the line of encouraging our officers in the regular Army, after having been educated by the Government and fitted for that service and assigned to their respective positions, to give up their places in the Army of the United States and retire from that service with a view of accepting political honors or business vocations, and after making such trial as each may see proper in such line as may be chosen, to come to Congress and request restoration to rank theretofore held by them.

I wish to say that, in my opinion, if this policy is pursued it will be in its tendency demoralizing to our regular Army service. I think it ought not to be pursued further, but rather when our cadets go from West Point and take their positions in the regular Army of the country it ought to be the understanding that they shall hold the places to which they have by the Government been assigned; or if they voluntarily abandon them for other positions, whether in political or business life, they can never expect to be restored to their former military status.

Mr. BLAND. Did not the gentleman vote in favor of retiring General Grant after he had left the Army and gone into the civil service?

Mr. STRUBLE. I admit that I did, but I hold the case of General Grant to be a worthy exception to all others in this country.

He resigned at the call of his countrymen to become their Chief Magistrate; to become Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, while General Rosecrans resigned on his own motion, and I feel justified in saying, in a practical sense, in the face of the enemy, for, as all gentlemen here know, we were then engaged in a gigantic struggle to preserve the life of the nation, and needed every competent, patriotic general then in the service.

Mr. Speaker, I have stated the most serious objection I entertain to this bill, but while I have another, and one that I feel intensely—before proceeding to state it let me say that it is not my purpose to indulge in any filibustering tactics to defeat or postpone final action on the bill.

Sir, my mind runs back to-day to the Forty-eighth Congress, to the second session thereof, when the friends of General Grant on both sides of the House were intensely anxious to do a noble deed that the heart of the old commander might in the gloom of rapidly approaching night—the night of death—be somewhat cheered and sustained. The session was fast waning. The bill proposing to restore him to his former rank was finally called up, but serious opposition was found to exist to its passage.

From what source did it come, and who led the opposition? Was it one of the then so-called "brigadiers," one of those who might have felt a lingering bitterness toward the old hero because of his career while leading armies in the South? No. Some of these had objections to the bill, but the one prominent, persistent, bitter, and unyielding foe of that humane measure was the gentleman who is now so anxious to be placed on a military list from which he retired in time of war and of peril to the Union.

Can any of us on this side of the Chamber who were here forget the spirit of unrelenting hatred with which General Rosecrans then pursued General Grant? Others possibly may, but I can not and will not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Did he not withdraw his objection?

A MEMBER. He did.

Mr. STRUBLE. Yes, he did at almost the last moment and under suggestive circumstances, and when his doing so would accommodate a friend in the matter of a contest then pending between Mr. Frederick and Mr. James Wilson, of Iowa; and as gentlemen then present will remember, in order to save the Grant bill Mr. Wilson had to consent to a judgment of ouster from his seat in Congress. General Rosecrans made and continued his opposition to the bill with the most venomous and vituperative abuse of the grand commander of our armies during the closing days of the war of the rebellion and who then lay sick and unable to say a word in reply.

Mr. BUCHANAN. When he "lay sick unto death."

Mr. STRUBLE. Yes, as my friend says, "when he lay sick unto death;" and he placed his opposition mainly on the same ground I have urged against this bill, namely, the unwise policy as affecting the permanent efficiency of the Army. But it is well known that the powerful motive leading him was hatred of Grant. His words and actions showed this to be true. And notwithstanding that General Grant was then rapidly sinking and soon thereafter passed away, this unrelenting foe continued to administer blow after blow upon his devoted head.

Mr. Speaker, there is a homely old maxim that I am told obtains even among the lowest classes who engage in personal combat, as well as in higher circles of pugilists, and that is, "Never kick a man when he is down." At the close of the Forty-eighth Congress and at the time to which I have referred, the dear old warrior who had, more than any other man, saved us a nation, was "down"—down on a couch of intensest suffering and near the last day of his earthly life. Did the beneficiary in this bill exhibit a sense of common humanity, of sympathy for a fellow-man down and dying? No, verily! On the contrary, he continued to kick the poor, helpless creature until forced off the floor of the House by the persuasion of those of his associates whose hearts beat in unison with those of the people in all parts of the land, and whose tears flowed copiously at the thought of the silent, uncomplaining warrior who was then so grandly battling the great foe of us all.

But, Mr. Speaker, I must hasten on. To prove that this unyielding hatred of Grant did not cease with his death I wish to read a letter I hold in my hand. As I have said, he not only followed and abused him in this House and in the public press of the country before his death, but he pursued him relentlessly after death. I hold in my hand a letter addressed to myself, which I will read as showing in what manner he characterized General Grant long after he was dead and buried.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 9, 1889.

DEAR SIR: I see by the papers that a bill has been recently presented in Congress to place General Rosecrans on the retired-list of the Army. I am reminded by this of a conversation I had with him and General C. L. Young, of Toledo, Ohio, about the Chickahominy campaign, in the summer of 1887. In that conversation I asked his opinion of General Grant, and he replied with a good deal of emphasis and apparent feeling that General Grant "was a skunk."

Think of it, gentlemen; that such a term should be applied to that man! General Grant a skunk! And yet this man, who thus vilified the name of his country's loved one, comes here to-day without words of apology or a single particle of evidence to show that he has ever changed or ever will change in the feeling which animated his mind or in his conduct and utterances, and asks this relief.

Mr. SPINOLA. Who wrote that letter?

Mr. STRUBLE. The writer of this goes on to say:

I would not like to see any injustice done to General Rosecrans. I would give him full credit for his success in the Army. I would even excuse his many blunders as a commander, but I never can forgive his treatment of General Grant, whose character he never missed an opportunity to defame while living, and even following him with his vindictiveness into his honored grave. But I know that I voice the sentiment of nine-tenths of the Union soldiers in the country when I assert that his treatment of General Grant was the result of envy and was largely prompted by partisan feeling.

Very respectfully,

M. J. FOOTE.

Hon. I. S. STRUBLE.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask who wrote that letter?

Mr. STRUBLE. I have just given you the name of the writer. He is a soldier from Ohio, a lawyer at 1208 F street, northwest; a man who has the privilege of carrying but one leg that is natural, the other being supplemented by a wooden extremity, one leg having been left on one of the fields of the late war.

Mr. MCADOO. Who is Foote? What is his pedigree?

Mr. STRUBLE. You will find out by inquiring of any of the Ohio delegation, I have no doubt. His pedigree I do not know, but I have met the gentleman, and he appeared to me to be a man of candor and truthfulness.

Now, as I said, sir, I shall not filibuster on this bill, but I propose to hold up here to the gaze of this House and the country thus briefly these facts, and ask the members on that side of the Chamber and on this; you over there who owe so much to the great heart of General Grant; you who in the hours of your dire extremity, in the face of your final and awful trial felt the charity and generosity of that grand heart; and to those on this side, you who followed him, perhaps, many of you, as I did, at Vicksburg, as he went on step by step in that grand campaign that resulted in the surrender of the city and the capture of General Pemberton's entire army; you who followed him elsewhere on the battle-fields of the Republic, at Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge; you who followed him through the Wilderness to Petersburgh, through Richmond, and on to the crowning glory of Appomattox, as well as you who did not follow him in person, but did in sympathy and love, and who believed in him whether you were in the Army or not, appealing to you all, I say, can you, in the face of this treatment at the hands of General Rosecrans, cast your vote for the man who never ceased, and, as I said before, never will, if we may judge from his conduct, while he has the use of his tongue, to slander the name and the fame of that grand old commander?

Mr. SPINOLA. Do you know anything about the writer of that letter?

Mr. STRUBLE. That letter was written by Captain Foote, of Ohio. You can get information, as I have said, from the members of that State, if you desire, as to who he is; or you can visit him at his place of business at any time you please during business hours. I had his permission to use the letter, and I have no doubt you will find him ready to affirm its contents.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want this time to come out of the fifteen minutes allotted to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa took the floor in his own right, and has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would be glad to give that time to any member who desires to use it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should like to be heard.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me a minute.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Will my colleague yield to me a part of the time?

Mr. STRUBLE. I will divide the time between my colleague and the gentleman from Maine, two and a half minutes each.

Mr. ANDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, hand in hand with bravery go generosity and charity. No man in this presence had greater admiration for the great captain of his time than I had while he was living, and there is no man that reveres his memory, now that he sleeps the last sleep, more than I. I was in a frame of mind at the time, in consequence of the assault that General Rosecrans made upon that great captain, that made me feel I would never forgive him. But I have changed with time, and I have come to the conclusion that the manly thing, and the brave and charitable thing to do (in view of the great infirmities of human nature that attach to the great heroes that came from the war, as well as to other men), is to overlook them, and this has changed my purpose and will cause me to give my vote for the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

With all General Grant's heroism, with all his greatness, he had his imperfections, and he from time to time, the war being over, made criticisms of men that he regretted. The same is true of that very distinguished general that followed in his wake. He likewise has said things he regretted.

I served throughout the entire war, and, knowing what I do of the perils and hardships of that struggle for national life and of the value of the services rendered, I never have and never will lift my voice or cast my vote to withhold any honor or favor from any one of the loyal heroes engaged, from the grand commander of all the armies to the humblest soldier in the ranks.

I have said it, and I am willing to say and still believe that the brave soldiers throughout the length and breadth of this country, notwithstanding the record that my colleague [Mr. STRUBLE] has placed here before the House, will justify in the long run a vote in favor of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. CHEADLE. As the gentleman who has just addressed the House is in favor of this proposition, I submit that his time should be charged to the other side.

Mr. STRUBLE. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I believe that I am on record invariably since I have been in Congress in favor of the bestowal of generous recognition for services of a distinguished character that have been rendered to the country by the men who followed its banner in the days of trial and of blood; and it would be a very serious consideration which would prevent me from giving my vote in favor of any proposition to pay any honor to any one of the leaders of our armies during that time when so much was wrought out for the welfare of the nation and for the progress of humanity.

But, Mr. Speaker, with the memory I have of the attitude assumed and the words uttered by General Rosecrans on the floor of this House at a time when Congress was asked to pay to the greatest not only of American soldiers but the greatest then of living soldiers the same tribute, in the same manner, which is asked for himself here to-day, I feel that I can not vote in favor of this proposition without in some measure seeming to indorse or condone the assault made upon General Grant at that time. And, Mr. Speaker, it was not a mere ebullition of the heat of temper in the excitement of debate, but General Rosecrans followed up his assault upon the floor of the House by a deliberate and promiscuous circulation of this vilification of General Grant in pamphlet form under his frank to all parts of our country, and with even more violent abuse in magazines and other current literature. I can not vote in any way that would even seem to give sanction to such accusations as were made by General Rosecrans in the House of Representatives on the 16th day of February, 1885, in which he said, among other things:

It is my duty to say that in reality the bill is a plain proposition to reward General Grant for his distinguished military services, and it is my duty to say that I can not vote for this bill.

It is not my intention, sir, to recount any of the historical reasons why I think that General Grant's military reputation has been exaggerated and misrepresented under the exigencies of party interest and power, and can only suggest that when true history comes to be written it will be pared down to very different dimensions. I do not propose to go into that subject, sir, although I am one of the four living Army commanders contemporary with him, and would feel quite qualified to express opinions of my own on that subject.

But, Mr. Speaker, this House, by the passage of this bill, is called upon by solemn act to renew and reaffirm all the exaggerations and misstatements of fact which have been popularly impressed on the public mind under the circumstances to which I have alluded. It was the interest of a great political party of this country to make the services of General Grant to appear as large and important as possible, for he was their servant and tool to secure power. He himself kept an aid-de-camp in his back office and there prepared the first two volumes of Badeau's Life of Grant, upon which the students of history have put the stamp of unworthiness to be trusted.

* * * * * * *

I would not oppose the passage of this bill on account of these things to which I have alluded, namely, statements made officially by General Grant that were false, and which he knew to be false at the time he made them, and which I have shown in my official reports to be false. I say these things do not enter into my reasons at all. But if we take things as they stand now it has been said over and over again that General Grant is in a state of distress, that there is nothing between him and the poor-house except the income of $250,000, and this statement has been carefully circulated among members of both Houses and the public, and I say it upon my own responsibility, from his family, that even that amount, the $250,000, was lost or substantially lost. That is not the truth.

And he concluded this astonishing speech with this virulent assault upon the great chieftain who even at that moment was passing within the "valley of the shadow of death:"

There is another critical circumstance to which I wish to call the attention of gentlemen on this floor. Congress by a solemn act like this is asked to arrest—what? Why, the progress of public opinion in the investigation into that great confidence mill of Grant & Ward. If gentlemen on this floor can afford to put a cover over that investigation, or can afford to put a ligature around that investigation by such a solemn and significant act as the bill proposes for the purpose of deceiving the public by it, I can not afford to do it. I can not afford by my action on this floor to say to the people of this country that a business which has been so conducted as to rob poor people of many millions of dollars, and which if done on a small scale would have sent its managers to prison, shall be considered as unimportant when the principal manager has allowed a great name to be used as the instrument of the robbery.

I protest against the House of Representatives giving by its action on this bill a quasi-indorsement or condonation of that shameful assault upon the great, silent soldier, who even then, "with malice toward none and with charity for all," was preparing to meet his Maker. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I voted as a member of the Committee on Rules to report this resolution. General Rosecrans in his services in the late war is identified with a great block of soldiers who feel that their record on many important battle-fields is his record and his record is theirs. They desire to see him now, in his old age and straitened circumstances, placed upon the retired-list. I believe it is a proper thing to do. No man has greater veneration for the memory of General Grant than I have. I am not voting to put General Rosecrans's name on the retired-list because of what he said or did not say after the war closed, in this House or elsewhere, but because of his services to the country during the war. And I believe that if Ulysses S. Grant could be called from the grave and stand to-day in this presence he would be broad enough to sweep aside the sayings after the war, arising from passion or prejudice, and say that he would vote to put the name of General Rosecrans upon the retired-list, in obedience to the wishes of a great block of the soldiers of the late war and on account of his services in that war. [Great applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill. I shall vote for this bill, not because of what General Rosecrans said in regard to General Grant, for I deeply regret that, but I shall vote for this bill because of what General Rosecrans did in the war that maintained the Union abroad. When the tocsin of war sounded, General Rosecrans did not hesitate or palter, but he left everything behind him and laid all that he had upon the altar of his country, and when we needed victory, when this country in its heart of hearts was aching for want of victory, General Rosecrans in the very beginning, in West Virginia, gave us victory. Again, in the far Southwest, at Iuka, he gave us victory. He was promoted step by step from colonel to brigadier-general, and from that to major-general, and was placed at the head of the army at Cumberland, and again, in the closing days of December, 1862, at Stone River, he lighted the horizon of this whole country from edge to edge with the fires of victory. Then, following that, he gave us one of the most magnificent specimens of perfect strategy that the entire war afforded, in the Tullahoma campaign, when, almost without the sacrifice of a life, he flanked Bragg out of his fortified position at Tullahoma and carried his army across the mountains into the valley of Chickamauga.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that there is an impression that the battle of Chickamauga was a disaster to the Union arms; but in that it achieved that for which it was fought, in that it gave us Chattanooga as the key of the position and the center of a new advance, the battle of Chickamauga was a victory. Disastrous it was, indeed, upon the field, but it accomplished the purposes of victory in that we held the place for which we fought. Now, Mr. Speaker, we can afford to forget what General Rosecrans may have said, but we can not afford to forget what General Rosecrans did. We can not afford to ignore the fact that he led one of the great armies of the Union and led it to victory. We can not afford to forget that now, in his old age and poverty, he comes to the Government, which he did almost as much as any one man to save, and asks that out of its plenitude, out of its wealth, out of its greatness, it shall extend to him the aid which he requires in his decline. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill most gladly. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE].

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker, Indiana gave the first soldier to die in that great contest, at Laurel Hill, in West Virginia, and the last one at Palmetto Ranch, in the State of Texas. On behalf of all the soldiers of Indiana I rise to say, in the limited time given me, that as one of their representatives it will afford me great pleasure to vote in favor of this bill. Indiana soldiers and Indianians do not desire us to settle the personal differences between the claimant and other officers of the Army. They simply want justice done in this case, and justice demands that William S. Rosecrans's name shall be placed upon the retired-list of the Army. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOLMES].

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, it was my honor and pleasure to serve in the campaigns of both General Grant and General Rosecrans, and I am astonished that any true friend of General Grant can rise upon this floor and attempt to cast Parthian shafts at General Rosecrans.

General Rosecrans stands out as one of the great figures of history in connection with that war; and although the days of fire, of iron, and of blood have passed, gentlemen rise here and attempt to arraign General Rosecrans for something that he has said since the days of peace came in. No man here has denied the justice of placing General Rosecrans upon the retired-list of the Army. No man has denied the grand services that he rendered to this country through that long night at Stone River, or his services at Chickamauga, at Iuka, and in the many battles in which he was engaged. He was competent everywhere, glorious at all times, and the men who followed him and fought with him will never see his name clouded and be silent. [Applause.]

General Grant was an autocrat when the war ended, and endeavored to blot out the name of General Rosecrans, as it were, from the roll of the Army. He attempted to tarnish his fair fame. While I was a friend of General Grant, and have voted for every measure that was calculated to benefit him or his family, and while the American people have piled Pelion on Ossa in doing him justice and taking care of him, it ill becomes any man to rise here in his place to-day and attempt to denounce General Rosecrans. I am sorry to hear my colleague from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] among the opposition. I remember how gallantly my other colleague, General WEAVER, fought under General Rosecrans, and how distinguished a record he made.

Let us here to-day, in voting upon this bill, vote not upon what General Rosecrans said. I have no defense to make of any ill-timed remarks that he may have made. But General Grant, in his final report of the war, did great injustice to General Rosecrans; and I think he also did him great injustice in his memoirs. Yet we did not refuse to pension General Grant on that account. Let us lay aside these small bickerings about what General Rosecrans or any other man has said in a time of peace, and let us do justice to men for what they did in time of war. That is the true issue; that is the true guide in dealing with a question of this kind. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, among all the men who have been placed on the retired-list of the Army there is no man who is on general considerations more entitled to it than General Rosecrans. He is poor to-day and needs the little assistance which this bill will give him.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MACDONALD].

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is precisely the same as the House bill for the same purpose, which was introduced by me and which has been considered and reported favorably by our Committee on Military Affairs. The two bills were introduced simultaneously in the Senate and House, and in view of these facts it is but right that I should say a few words in favor of its passage and in defense of the grand old soldier and veteran who is the beneficiary named in the bill.

Sir, I can not take the time to refer at length to the military career and distinguished and valuable services of General Rosecrans in behalf of the Union. I will not attempt it, for it would require hours to do it justice.

I introduced the House bill, Mr. Speaker, without reference to what has transpired since the close of the war between our great generals; and the fact that this bill passed the Senate without a dissenting voice is conclusive evidence that what has here been advanced in opposition to its passage was not deemed worthy of notice by that body.

The purpose of this bill is to recognize in a substantial manner (and truth compels me to state, at a time when it must be acceptable to him) the valuable and efficient services rendered by General Rosecrans. Selecting from his many important victories for the cause of the Union the battle of Stone River or Murfreesborough, I would ask, who is there here that will say that he did not, by that one victory, earn all that this bill proposes to bestow upon him? Here is the manner in which the lamented President Lincoln acknowledged, by telegraph, that victory:

WASHINGTON, January 5, 1863.

To Major-General ROSECRANS:

Your dispatch announcing the retreat of the enemy has just reached here. God bless you and all with you.

Please tender to all and accept for yourself the nation's gratitude for your and their skill, endurance, and dauntless courage.

A. LINCOLN.

General Halleck also telegraphed him, sending congratulations, and in the telegram said:

The victory was well earned, and one of the most brilliant of the war. You and your brave army have won the gratitude of your country and the admiration of the world.

Congress also, by joint resolution, thanked General Rosecrans and his army for achieving this signal victory.

In answer to the bitter and uncalled-for attack upon General Rosecrans by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE], I will read for the edification of this House, and the especial benefit of the gentleman from Iowa, what one of the then Senators from Iowa said in the Senate when the resolutions already referred to were under consideration. They were introduced by Hon. Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts, and in support of them Senator James W. Grimes, of Iowa, said:

* * * I judge that the exploits of General Rosecrans at Murfreesborough are unexampled in the military annals of this country, and are unsurpassed in military history anywhere. I do not believe that the military commander now lives who has performed such gallant and glorious deeds as he has under such adverse circumstances. Defeated on the first day, with the loss of some prisoners and cannon, on the second day sustaining a repulse of one wing of his army, yet restoring order, rallying his men, and fighting four successive days, he achieved a decisive and triumphant victory. Where in military history is it recorded that a commander has assumed control of a dispirited army, as his was when General Rosecrans took command of the army in Kentucky, marched it 200 miles through a hostile country, supported it over a line of railroad that had been repeatedly destroyed in part and temporarily rebuilt, and then fought it with the bravery, the determination, and the skill that he exhibited? In my opinion General Rosecrans stands to-day the greatest captain of the age.

Senator Wilson, of Massachusetts, said in reference to the above remarks:

I concur entirely in what has been said by the Senator from Iowa concerning the action of General Rosecrans and his forces.

I can well afford to now leave the gentleman from Iowa to explain why he assails the old patriot-hero whose services were thus praised by Senator Grimes. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, General Rosecrans achieved that great victory at a time when, as many of us can remember, the North stood with bated breath watching the fluctuating movements of our armies, and the cause of the Union was trembling in the balance; and President Lincoln and Congress well knew they but voiced the feelings of a people who were then shouting the praises of "Old Rosey" in every loyal State.

That victory was all that Senator Grimes described it, and fully justified the language used by President Lincoln in the dispatch I have read, for General Rosecrans had defeated an army a braver than which could not be found elsewhere in the entire world. However erroneous the Confederates were in their opinions, they were as brave and desperate soldiers as Americans have proved themselves to be on every field.

In conclusion I will quote from the report of the committee upon the bill. It states:

The Legislatures of Indiana and Ohio also by appropriate resolutions expressed their appreciation of his gallantry and brilliant successes.

In 1863 he drove the enemy from their intrenchments, crossed the Cumberland Mountains and Tennessee River, fought the great battle of Chickamauga, and took and held Chattanooga, the gateway of the Confederacy.

In 1864 he commanded the Department of the Missouri, and suppressed what remained of armed opposition to the Union cause.

In 1867 he resigned his position as brigadier-general in the regular Army, and for gallant and meritorious service was brevetted major-general United States Army.

In view of the foregoing facts, the committee believe that it would be a graceful recognition of his services in behalf of his country to give the President power to place upon the retired-list of the Army this distinguished and venerable officer.

As shown above, he has reached within one year of the allotted period of three score and ten years, and we have no doubt that it would be a solace to him in his declining years to be made the recipient of this evidence of his country's gratitude.

Now, sir, I say it is immaterial what General Rosecrans said, or what General Grant said with reference to him. If we should now undertake to carry out the principles advocated by gentlemen on the other side, we would be simply imitating what they say General Rosecrans has been guilty of. I trust that as an act of simple justice to this distinguished officer this bill will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I took part in the proceedings of this House at the time that the Grant bill was passed, and to-day I recall no event of my public life that gives me greater and deeper gratification than what I did on that occasion.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that General Rosecrans could have prevented the consideration of the bill on that day, but he did not do so. I protest against that occurrence being brought up here to prevent the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

I want gentlemen to rise up here to the full stature of manhood and forgive as we expect to be forgiven for our errors. [Applause.] I have always said that General Rosecrans committed a mistake in this connection, but let us forgive him. I feel certain I but express what would have been General Grant's words were he alive when I say, let full justice be done to this faithful, devoted, and wounded soldier of the Union. [Great applause.]

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3560) for the relief of William S. Rosecrans.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint William S. Rosecrans, late a major-general of United States Volunteers, and brigadier-general in the regular Army of the United States, to the position of brigadier-general in the Army of the United States, and to place him upon the retired-list of the Army as of that grade (the retired-list being thereby increased in number to that extent); and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered on the bill, and under the rules of the House there are thirty minutes for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. STRUBLE. I wish to be heard in opposition to this bill for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes are allowed under the rules in support of the bill and fifteen minutes in opposition to it.

Mr. STRUBLE. I will take the floor and yield a few minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], but I will withhold my remarks until we hear from the other side in favor of the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. While the rules of the House provide for thirty minutes' debate, fifteen minutes on each side, they do not prescribe the way in which the debate shall take place. Therefore the Chair accords the floor to the gentleman who first rises.

Mr. STRUBLE. I yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. MACDONALD. I ask whether the time is not to be divided.

The SPEAKER. The rule divides the time, but does not say who shall speak first.

Mr. PERKINS. As a member of the Army of the Cumberland it was my privilege, as it was my duty, in the days of the war to follow in the ranks and obey the orders of the gentleman who is the beneficiary of this bill. As a soldier I honored him, as our commander I obeyed him, and as a citizen I respect him, and I have no unkind word or accusation to bring against him now.

But, sir, I remember, as has been already stated, that but a few years ago he stood upon the floor of this House in opposition to another bill which proposed to confer a like distinction upon a more distinguished soldier, a more respected citizen—our beloved commander, General Ulysses S. Grant. In a speech made in opposition to that bill he indulged in some bitterness, and said:

It is my duty to say that in reality the bill is a plain proposition to reward General Grant for his distinguished military services, and it is my duty to say that I can not vote for this bill.

It is not my intention, sir, to recount any of the historical reasons why I think that General Grant's military reputation has been exaggerated and misrepresented under the exigencies of party interest and power, and can only suggest that when true history comes to be written it will be pared down to very different dimensions. I do not propose to go into that subject, sir, although I am one of the four living Army commanders contemporary with him, and would feel quite qualified to express opinions of my own on that subject.

But, Mr. Speaker, this House, by the passage of this bill, is called upon by solemn act to renew and reaffirm all the exaggerations and misstatements of fact which have been popularly impressed on the public mind under the circumstances to which I have alluded. It was the interest of a great political party of this country to make the services of General Grant to appear as large and important as possible, for he was their servant and tool to secure power. He himself kept an aid-de-camp in his back office and there prepared the first two volumes of Badeau's Life of Grant, upon which the students of history have put the stamp of unworthiness to be trusted.

I would not oppose the passage of this bill on account of these things to which I have alluded, namely, statements made officially by General Grant that were false, and which he knew to be false at the time he made them, and which I have shown in my official reports to be false. I say these things do not enter into my reasons at all. But if we take things as they stand now it has been said over and over again that General Grant is in a state of distress, that there is nothing between him and the poor-house except the income of $250,000, and this statement has been carefully circulated among members of both Houses and the public, and I say it upon my own responsibility, from his family, that even that amount, the $250,000, was lost or substantially lost. That is not the truth.

* * * * * * *

There is another critical circumstance to which I wish to call the attention of gentlemen on this floor. Congress by a solemn act like this is asked to arrest—what? Why, the progress of public opinion in the investigation into that great confidence mill of Grant & Ward. If gentlemen on this floor can afford to put a cover over that investigation, or can afford to put a ligature around that investigation by such a solemn and significant act as the bill proposes for the purpose of deceiving the public by it, I can not afford to do it. I can not afford by my action on this floor to say to the people of this country that a business which has been so conducted as to rob poor people of many millions of dollars, and which if done on a small scale would have sent its managers to prison, shall be considered as unimportant when the principal manager has allowed a great name to be used as the instrument of the robbery.

But General Rosecrans said further that his opposition to the bill was not personal or actuated by ill-will or personal considerations, but that he was against the bill because it was wrong in principle, wrong in policy, bad as legislation, and unjust to the country; that the retired-list of the Army should not be swelled from the walks of private life or civil station. If his argument and opposition to the bill to place General Grant upon the retired-list was sincere and honest, how can he or his friends in consistency ask to have this bill passed for his relief? If Grant in his feebleness and with his honors and grand achievements should not be placed upon the retired-list of the Army, who can say that such a favor should be conferred upon the beneficiary of this bill, General W. S. Rosecrans? Who that heard the speech of General Rosecrans in opposition to the Grant bill, and believed him an honest man, can favor this bill for his relief, that he denounced so bitterly as wrong in principle and unjust to the country?

General Rosecrans was educated at the expense of the Government. For a time he served it in its military ranks and then retired to the pursuits of private life, and when the war of the rebellion came upon us he was commissioned as a volunteer officer and served the country creditably and well. And yet those who are here to-day and who had the honor of serving in the ranks of the Union Army at Chickamauga, know that if it had not been for that grand old soldier and hero, George H. Thomas [loud applause] who stood there and whose columns formed a solid wall against which the Confederate army broke itself in pieces, the name of General Rosecrans would have gone down in dishonor rather than in honor as it stands to-day.

Remembering this, Mr. Speaker, and remembering what his country has already given him, and remembering the position he took upon the bill to which I have already referred when it was before the House for consideration, I as one think we ought not to confer this privilege upon him. Twenty-five years ago he voluntarily left the Army to engage in business and political activities. His energies have been devoted to personal and political enterprises, and for all service rendered the Government of the United States as a soldier or otherwise he has been fully paid, and, as before suggested, I can not see how he or his friends, in consistency or with propriety, come to Congress and ask the country to pay him $5,500 per year as a retired officer the balance of his days, he to give in return no service or consideration to the people of the United States.

For these and other reasons I can not support the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied four minutes. The gentleman from Iowa has eleven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. STRUBLE. I now yield four minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE].

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, there was no man who occupied a prominent position as a leader of the Federal forces during the late war for whom I had greater respect and for whose record I had greater admiration than General Rosecrans. I have also watched and admired his course in civil life since his retirement from the Army, but, sir, I am opposed to placing him upon the retired-list, as proposed by this bill. I oppose it as a matter of principle, and upon the same principle that I have opposed pension laws which have been proposed here from time to time placing numbers of persons upon the pension-rolls, who, in my judgment, had no claim whatever upon it, and, as I believed, should not properly be placed there.

After the country has educated a man at its expense, after he has been permitted to hold high and distinguished positions, and to draw from the country's Treasury large salaries for the services rendered, I think it is his fault if, during the time he is so situated, he fails to make that provision for the future care of his family which the individual in private life is compelled to make out of his earnings if it is made at all; and when he abandons military life and enters upon the pursuits of private life again I am opposed to going back and restoring him to the military rank he formerly held for the express purpose of making him a pensioner upon the public Treasury.

I am opposed to increasing what you might call this civil-pension list, because it amounts practically to that, taking a man from the walks of civil life because he formerly held a military command and placing him upon the retired-list to draw a large compensation thereafter from the public Treasury, for which he renders no consideration and no service, but simply as an act of charity, or, as it is claimed in this case, for distinguished services previously rendered. It should be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that the distinguished services previously rendered have already had ample compensation.

Now, sir, what is the condition of affairs with regard to this favored class? It is growing from day to day. Congress is called upon almost every day to pass some bill to place somebody upon the pension-roll or the retired-list, or to increase somebody's pension. The clamor for increase of pensions comes from the higher grades as an example for the lower.

Rank, social standing, historic names, and frequently personal solicitation at the expense of all these, are brought to bear on the Representatives and Senators in Congress to secure an increase of the bonus which the masses are forced to contribute to the classes.

The pending bill is not without bad precedents. The exceptional case of General Grant, which it was declared at the time would not be considered as a precedent, opened the door through which other exceptional cases have forced their way until now it is wide enough to admit the entire rank and file of the Army.

The exceptional case of Mrs. Lincoln admitted all the widows of Presidents to the $5,000 civil-pension list.

The exceptional cases of Mrs. Logan and Mrs. Blair paved the way for all the widows of the generals of the Army to demand the royal pension of $2,000 per annum; and to-day we raised the limit in the case of Mrs. Sheridan to $2,500 per annum, which I believe is the highest point yet reached in the military list.

Before we have exhausted the possibilities in granting and increasing pensions to the military class there is a strong disposition manifest to enter upon new and practically unlimited fields by seeking for new objects of charity in the civil service.

In the other branch of this legislative body a proposition is now pending to place the widow of the late Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court upon the pension-list, and upon that another equally justifiable proposition is made that the widow of the late Judge Merrick shall also be pensioned. I want to know, sir, where this business is going to end? I suppose we will take every person who had or now has any connection whatever with the Army and give such person a pension in some shape or other before we get through. It looks as if that was going to be the inevitable result. If that is to be true as to the Army are we now going a step further? Are we going to invade the ranks of the judiciary, and later on the ranks of the legislative branch, and, logically, in the end, all the ranks and branches of the civil service, until the office-holders as a class and their widows shall be added to the list of pensioners to eat out the substance of the laboring people of this country?

I protest against it, sir, and would warn the advocates of indiscriminate pension legislation that patient and patriotic as the laboring people of this country are under excessive taxation there may be a limit beyond which violent reaction will set in. While I would be glad to do honor to the distinguished soldier and citizen whose name is now before this body for a place on the retired-list of the Army, I am not willing to honor him, nor any man, at the expense of my honest and earnest convictions of right and duty, and I will not vote for this bill, nor for any proposition of a kindred character, so long as I am a member of this body.

Mr. STRUBLE. I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a story which I believe is authentic, that shortly after the election to the Presidency of Andrew Jackson, at which time there was prevalent an idea that men who agreed with the administration in politics ought to have the offices, delegations from the State of New York visited the President to ask him to remove the postmaster at Albany, who differed with him in politics and had been appointed by a previous administration. It happened that the postmaster was an old soldier in the war of 1812. One delegation failed of its mission, and another came still more urgent. Finally, as an unanswerable argument, as it was supposed, a member of one of the delegations said to the President, "This postmaster not only opposed your election, Mr. President, but he has called you names and tells the worst kind of stories about you." Andrew Jackson replied, "A man that fought like this man did at Lundy's Lane and carries British lead in his body has a right to call me what he pleases. I take the responsibility. He won't be removed." [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I think a man who served the country as General Rosecrans did in West Virginia, on that fearful day at Corinth, at Stone River, and at Chickamauga, has a little right in his old and declining years to talk. I feel very leniently toward any old soldier who has served his country well. I do not think he gives away his right to have justice and recognition by a hasty and unguarded word. I had the honor in a very humble capacity to serve for about four years as a soldier in the Army of the Tennessee, and every soldier of that army points with pride to the fact that our first commander was Ulysses S. Grant. We had afterwards as commanders Sherman, McPherson, Howard, and Logan. Every one of them we loved and adored. We never had a commander to leave us except to take a higher command. Of course we give the first place to Grant; in fact, I might almost say that the Army of the Tennessee idolizes his memory.

I think I speak the general sentiments of soldiers of that organization when I say that our regard for his great services as a soldier and commander is such that we can not harbor ill-feeling against General Rosecrans for any unguarded expressions since the war. I have not the least doubt you could to-day have almost a unanimous vote from the Army of the Tennessee to place General Rosecrans upon the retired-list. [Applause.] Oh, says the gentleman on my right, if it had not been for General Thomas at Chickamauga he would have left the field with his reputation ruined. Yes, and he might have said more.

If it had not been for the grand heroes who carried muskets in the Army of the Cumberland that field would have been lost. Just at this point I want to say that but for the men who fought in the ranks there is not a general who would have a reputation to-day. [Applause.] It was the enlisted men and subordinate commanders on every field that made reputations for the great generals. But it takes a great man to command an army and give them their due. It was Rosecrans who commanded at Corinth when that field was won. It was an exhibition of great generalship. It was a great victory, dearly won, but it saved the Southwest in 1862.

It was Rosecrans who commanded and directed the brave men at Stone River on those fearful winter days when again the tide of battle was turned southward. It was under him Phil Sheridan first rode at the head of a division, and on this bloody field gave evidence of the high rank he was afterwards to obtain. It was Rosecrans's skill and genius that maneuvered the enemy out of Chattanooga and gave the Army of the Cumberland a position at Chickamauga that enabled him to hold at bay Bragg's army, re-enforced by one of the best corps from the rebel army on the Potomac.

Do not forget that it was under Rosecrans that Thomas stood, the Rock of Chickamauga.

Mr. Speaker, there was a day in the nation's peril when good Abraham Lincoln thought he ought to send the thanks of the nation to General Rosecrans and the officers and men of his command for their great services in the field. I regret that men can not pass upon this question without bringing up matters that ought to have no relation to it. Let us do justice to this frail old man, who served his country well in the days of his strength and vigor. His generous, liberal nature has prevented his saving money for his old age. General Grant's place in history is secure. It is not necessary to deal harshly with any soldier in order to place a laurel on his brow. Indeed, I feel quite sure, if the voices of Grant and Thomas could be heard, their noble spirits would say, "Pass this bill!" [Loud applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not want to know anything about politics on such a question as this, and do not want to know anything about politics when any soldier of the Union comes before me for consideration for his services. In the struggle of the Forty-eighth Congress, when we sought justice to the great commander, General Grant, in the same way practically as General Rosecrans does now, I was opposed to the position taken by General Rosecrans. I was against him then when he opposed Grant's bill. He was wrong then, and I was right. He is now brought before us for recognition. The principle is the same. I want to be right again, and so I will vote for "Rosey." [Loud applause.] As a member of the Army of the Tennessee, I followed both Grant and Rosecrans. I fought under Rosecrans at Corinth.

I was with him in that battle, and he was the only general that I ever saw closer to the enemy than we were who fought in the front, for in that great battle he dashed in front of our lines when the flower of Price's army was pouring death and destruction into our ranks. The bullets had carried off his hat, his hair was floating in the wind, and, protected by the god of battle, he passed along the lines and shouted, "Soldiers, stand by your flag and by your country!" We obeyed his orders. We crushed Price's army, and gave the country the great triumph of the battle of Corinth. General Rosecrans was the central, the leading, and the victorious spirit.

I care not that General Grant and General Rosecrans since the war exchanged courtesies that were not courteous. It is enough for me to know now that he asks recognition, and for us who have patriotic hearts for our comrades to give it. I respect the feeling of my friend and colleague [Mr. STRUBLE], but my friend, as I view it, is wrong. He felt the cut and smart of the lash of Rosecrans on Grant, but Grant was equally as explicit in expressing his opinions. It is enough for us to consider that Grant and "Rosey" were both successful and deserving soldiers. Without considering what either of them said, we ought to dispose of this matter without heat or temper. Let us not forget when Rosecrans was against the Grant bill we, on this side, opposed him. We will be logical, consistent, and patriotic now when we stand for this bill. I have no doubt as to what my duty is. I censure not my colleague; I censure no one around me, but I would be censurable in my own judgment if I did not cast my vote for my old commander. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to serve under General Grant, and I cherish his memory. I also had the honor to serve under the distinguished general whose name is under consideration here, General Rosecrans, and I am his friend. I care nothing about the controversy that existed between the two generals while they were both living. It would be unbecoming in me to do so. They were both patriotic, and I believe the cause of the Union would have fared badly had they not been in the service of the Government.

I, too, had the honor to participate in the battle at Corinth in 1862, and I know, and the country knows, that but for the magnificent strategy of Rosecrans, his soldierly bearing, his wonderful grasp of and attention to the details of that battle, the Army of the Southwest would have been overthrown, and the consequences could not have been foretold. He decoyed the army of Price on to the spot where he designed to fight the battle, and the result was that he was victorious and captured parts of sixty-nine different commands serving under Price and Van Dorn and the other Confederate commanders. In that important battle he saved the cause of the Union in the Southwest. Rosecrans was a splendid soldier, a valuable officer, and he is now a most honorable citizen. Few are more distinguished. He is one of the heroes of this age, and his name will live forever. I am for this bill. It must be passed. We can not dishonor him by voting no. I would like to see a unanimous vote. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN].

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to say one word in favor of the passage of the pending bill for the relief of General Rosecrans. As a private soldier who occupied a most humble position in the ranks of the Union Army during the late rebellion, I am glad to be in a position to vote for this measure. It must be said to the eternal credit of this House that it rarely refuses to do honor and justice to the brave and deserving heroes of the country, and I feel confident that it will not hesitate now to do justice to General Rosecrans in this matter.

It is surprising to see certain gentlemen on the other side who served in the grand Army of the Republic during the late unpleasantness oppose this measure for the relief of one of their brave commanders on mere personal grounds. The only ground upon which the opposition rests is that when a like measure was before the Forty-eighth Congress to place General Grant upon the retired-list General Rosecrans opposed that measure and made a bitter and inexcusable attack upon that great military chieftain. No one lamented this assault more than I did, and I firmly believe that the time has come when General Rosecrans himself would gladly recall that speech if he could.

He may have erred in saying what he did on that occasion, but this would not justify me nor any other member of this House in doing him a similar injustice now by voting against this measure placing him upon the retired-list. Justice was done to General Grant notwithstanding the course of General Rosecrans, and yet we are urged to divide upon this question and defeat this bill upon the trivial grounds stated and advanced by its opponents, the bitterest of whom dare not question the patriotism and bravery of its beneficiary.

What statesmanship, what magnanimity! Who amongst us has made no mistakes? None of us are infallible. It is an argument of the most belittling character to say that because this gallant Union soldier made a mistake and on one occasion talked too much that we shall forget all his brave and noble deeds in the past which he rendered in defense of his country's flag and for the preservation of the grandest and most beneficent Government in the world. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has four minutes remaining and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] has seven minutes. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. STRUBLE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA].

Mr. MCKENNA. I think, sir, that the opponents of this measure have drifted into irrelevant consideration. It is hard to resist the impulse of feeling, and we all love General Grant and his memory so much that the slightest criticism of him may swerve us from a fair judgment of any who makes criticism upon him or upon his memory. But, sir, I think with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], that opposition to this bill is made in the name of General Grant which he would not utter or sanction himself. His declaration was "Let us have peace"—not peace only between sections, but peace between men; and if he were here to-day, animated, as I have no doubt that he would be, by that spirit, he would express the same sentiment and would say to us, "Do justice to General Rosecrans as a soldier of the Army of the Union and forget and pass by his defects as an individual, whatever they may be."

If, Mr. Speaker, he was the soldier depicted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON], if he performed the splendid service so eloquently described by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], it was great enough and worthy enough to cover every defect that has been ascribed to him by the opponents of this measure. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, Union men as we are, feeling toward General Grant as we do, revering his memory as we do, we can not perform a better act than to give reward to a man who fought so well as General Rosecrans fought for the cause that General Grant loved and to which his services and heroism were devoted. I hope every Republican will vote for this bill.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to what has been said on this and the other side of the Chamber in favor of this bill. The serious objection which I first raised to it is the bad policy of restoring officers in this way after they have left the Army to go into civil life. There has been no discussion, I think, of that proposition.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The retirement of Grant answers that.

Mr. STRUBLE. The retirement of Grant was an exception—an unusual and a justifiable one, and the country and the world will hold it as an exception to the rule which ought in general to obtain. Mr. Speaker, if General Rosecrans should be restored to the Army, why not also many of the sick and maimed colonels and generals of the volunteer service? Why not these brave men who suffer to-day more than General Rosecrans ever suffered physically—why not restore them as well as this man, who, I believe, was in the regular Army service twice?

A MEMBER (rising). We have passed similar bills.

Mr. STRUBLE. I can not consent to be interrupted now; I would gladly yield if I had more time.

Mr. Speaker, one word in reply to the considerations which have been urged favorable to the career of General Rosecrans as a soldier. I have said not one word to-day reflecting in the least upon either the personal character, integrity, and honor, or upon the military services of this gentleman. Nor have I said a word on the military services of General Grant except by way of general reference. But, Mr. Speaker, I was pained that my colleague [Mr. HOLMES] should have risen in his place and in his zeal for General Rosecrans have deemed it necessary to pass an unfavorable remark as to General Grant, as I had made no reference to the military services of either of these generals except in a general way, and not at all in the way of comparison.

One word in reply to my genial friend and colleague, Colonel HENDERSON, and I am done. We, his colleagues, always listen to him with absolute satisfaction and pride; and you, the other members of the House, pay him splendid compliments. When he pictured before this House and these galleries filled with people the grand soldiery of Rosecrans—when he pictured Rosecrans with drawn sword and hair streaming in the breeze leading his forces on to victory; recalling what I knew personally and what all members of the Forty-eighth Congress know to be his treatment of Grant, I said to myself, "Is it possible that a hero like this, with Grant, another hero, then on his death-bed, could, in this House and elsewhere, malign and defame his memory and traduce his character?" Was Rosecrans the great, brave, and generous soldier that he has been pictured by my colleague? If he was, could he have been guilty, as we know he was, of persistently, continuously, and viciously defaming the name of Grant? It seems to me there is an inconsistency here, though I do not reflect at all upon what my eloquent friend has said, nor in the least deny the correctness of his glowing recital.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has now four minutes remaining.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR].

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the discussion on the comparative qualities of general officers of our Army is very much like a two-edged sword, and that the better plan to deal with such discussion is to do as we have done with our old accouterments, to hang them on the wall.

I would have said nothing in this debate had it not been for the fact that I served under both Grant and Rosecrans, and while there are many defects in the character of General Rosecrans, for which no apology can be made on this floor, yet the services of "Old Rosey" were of such a character in the critical period of the life of this Republic that nothing which this House can do for him to place him on an equality with other general officers of his rank can be too much.

I want to direct one remark to the friends of General Grant. I am sorry that I am forced to do it, but I do it in vindication of the truth of history. No friend of General Grant in this Congress can afford to be otherwise than charitable toward General Rosecrans. General Grant can be criticised just as severely and keenly as General Rosecrans; and the men who fought, as I did, under Thomas from first to last, and who know of the City Point telegrams coming from the General of the Army and from the Lincoln administration, and which were intended to depose and disgrace Thomas, can not patiently sit in this Hall and hear any uncharitable word said against "Old Rosey."

The victory of Stone River was achieved by Rosecrans. The victory of Nashville, secured by Thomas, was the completion of the conquest of the South and Southwest. Let accounts be balanced. Let charity be held up for all. Above all, let no Grant idealism do injustice to just as brave men as himself. [Great applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, opposition to this bill is founded on what General Rosecrans said in this Hall long after the war had closed. The hero of Appomattox and the great captain of the Army forgot after the war had ceased many things which it is well for us to forget. Among others he forgot the personal calumnies which were showered down upon his head. He was able to say and did say in the face of those calumnies to this country which he loved so well when warring factions on all sides threatened another war, "Let us have peace." [Applause.] And in his dying hour he requested one of his opponents, one of the bravest officers of the Confederate side, Joseph E. Johnston, to assist in carrying his honored remains to a most honored tomb. [Applause.]

So far as General Rosecrans himself is concerned, General Grant, with the shadow of death upon him, used these words; and coming to-day to us it should silence all criticism as to what Rosecrans was and what he did in the Army. I read from the Memoirs of U. S. Grant, volume 2:

Rosecrans had very skillfully maneuvered Bragg south of the Tennessee River and through and beyond Chattanooga.

On the morning of the 21st we took the train for the front, reaching Stevensons, Ala., after dark. Rosecrans was there on his way north. He came into my car and we held a brief interview, in which he described very clearly the situation at Chattanooga and made some excellent suggestions as to what should be done.

Not for what General Rosecrans said in the Hall of the House of Representatives, but for what he did when the country needed every true man, is the reason why I wish to place him on the retired-list. [Applause.]

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL-REVENUE BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire further to report, from the Committee on Rules, the following resolution; and in that connection I wish to say, after the resolution is read I wish to ask some questions of the Chair.

Resolved, That Rule XXIII, clause 4, be amended by adding thereto the following proviso:

"Provided, That on Monday, February 25, 1889, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the House shall proceed in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to the consideration of the bill of the House (H. R. 12131) to amend the internal-revenue laws; and at 4 o'clock p. m. on said day the said bill shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed to in said committee, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon such amendments and upon the engrossment, third reading, and passage of said bill, and the votes thereon shall be forthwith taken; and in case the said bill shall not be taken up on said day, then this shall be a continuing order thereafter in all respects until one legislative day shall be occupied as herein specified: And provided, That a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken on an amendment proposed by Mr. FORNEY on behalf of the minority of the committee reporting said bill: Provided further, That after consideration of the said bill has been entered upon no dilatory motion shall be entertained by the Chair."

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, it is well known to this House——

Mr. BLAND. I reserve the right to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. MILLS. I will attend to that.

Mr. RANDALL. It is well known to the House that there is an unfinished appropriation bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I believe I promote public business in permitting that bill to be proceeded with; but I desire before giving way to make some parliamentary inquiries of the Chair in that direction. I wish to ask whether if I do so I will lose any of my rights in any particular in connection with this report which may now be exercised as a matter of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the practice of the House is well settled where a privileged report is made it may be laid upon the table for the present, to be called up at some future time, and loses none of its privileged character.

Mr. RANDALL. It loses nothing, then?

The SPEAKER. It loses none of its privileges.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I do not desire to proceed with this report now, nor do I desire to ask that the previous question be pending, for the reason that I hope the gentleman from Texas will indicate between now and the time I shall again call it up what time he wishes the resolution to be considered.

Mr. MILLS. I would suggest that this resolution lie on the table for the present without any understanding whatever, but losing none of its privileges; and by the time it is again called up I will have conferred with the gentleman and let him know——

The SPEAKER. That is the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as the Chair understands, so that the gentlemen can confer together.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman and myself are both agreed that we ought to go on with the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is not before the House for consideration.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent to have it read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. I can not let it in as a pending amendment.

Mr. MATSON. I only want to have it read for information.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to having it read for information.

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the day following shall be set apart for the consideration of H. R. 9961, entitled "A bill relating to arrears of pensions," upon the same terms and conditions in all respects and as to discussion, the ordering of the previous question, and the taking of a yea-and-nay vote on the final passage thereof.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not germane to the subject-matter.

Mr. MATSON. I ask permission——

Mr. RANDALL. It is understood that that was only read for information. I do not yield for it.

Mr. REED. For information or misinformation?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish they would offer such a resolution in a business sense.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the call of committees for reports.

VETO MESSAGE—DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 1368, entitled "An act to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes."

This bill is to all intents and purposes identical with Senate bill No. 150, passed in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, which failed to receive executive approval. My objections to that bill are set forth in a message transmitted to the Senate on the 11th day of March, 1886. They are all applicable to the bill herewith returned, and a careful re-examination of the matters embraced in this proposed legislation has further satisfied me of their validity and strength.

The trouble proposed to be cured by this bill grew out of the indefiniteness and consequent contradictory construction by the officers of the Government of a grant of land made in 1846 by Congress to the State of Iowa (then a Territory) for the purpose of aiding in the improvement of the Des Moines River. This grant was accepted on the 9th day of January, 1847, by the State of Iowa, as required by the act of Congress, and soon thereafter the question arose whether the lands granted were limited to those which adjoined the river in its course northwesterly from the southerly line of the State to a point called the Raccoon Fork, or whether such grant covered lands so adjoining the river through its entire course through the Territory, and both below and above the Raccoon Fork.

The Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, on the 17th day of October, 1846, instructed the officers of the land office in Iowa that the grant extended only to the Raccoon Fork.

On the 23d day of February, 1848, the Commissioner of the General Land Office held that the grant extended along the entire course of the river.

Notwithstanding this opinion, the President, in June, 1848, proclaimed the lands upon the river above the Raccoon Fork to be open for sale and settlement under the land laws, and about 25,000 acres were sold to and pre-empted by settlers under said proclamation.

In 1849, and before the organization of the Department of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury decided, upon a protest against opening said lands for sale and settlement, that the grant extended along the entire course of the river.

Pursuant to this decision, and on the 1st day of June, 1849, the Commissioner of the General Land Office directed the reservation or the withholding from sale of all lands on the odd-numbered sections along the Des Moines River above the Raccoon Fork.

This reservation from entry and sale under the general land laws seems to have continued until a deed of the lands so reserved was made by the State of Iowa, and until the said deed was supplemented and confirmed by the action of the Congress in 1861 and 1862.

In April, 1850, the Secretary of the Interior—that Department having then been created—determined that the grant extended no farther than the Raccoon Fork, but in view of the fact that Congress was in session and might take steps in the matter, the Commissioner of the General Land Office expressly continued the reservation.

In October, 1851, another Secretary of the Interior, while expressing the opinion that the grant only extended to the Raccoon Fork, declared that he would approve the selections made by the State of Iowa of lands above that point, "leaving the question as to the construction of the statute entirely open to the action of the judiciary."

In this condition of affairs selections were made by Iowa of a large quantity of land lying above the Raccoon Fork, which selections were approved and the land certified to the State. In the mean time the State had entered upon the improvement of the river and it appears had disposed of some of the land in furtherance of said improvement. But in 1854 the State of Iowa made a contract with the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company for the continuance of said work at a cost of $1,300,000, the State agreeing in payment thereof to convey to the company all the land which had been or should thereafter be certified to the State of Iowa under the grant of 1846.

On November, 1856, further certification of lands above the Raccoon Fork, under the grant to the State of Iowa, was refused by the Interior Department. This led to a dispute and settlement between the State of Iowa and the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, by which the State conveyed by deed to said company—

"All lands granted by an act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, to the then Territory of Iowa to aid in the improvement of the Des Moines River, which have been approved and certified to the State of Iowa by the General Government, saving and excepting all lands sold and conveyed, or agreed to be sold and conveyed, by the State, by its officers and agents, prior to the 23d day of December, 1853, under said grant."

This exception was declared in the deed to cover the lands above the Raccoon Fork disposed of to settlers by the Government in 1848, under the proclamation of the President opening said lands to sale and settlement, which has been referred to; and it is conceded that neither these lands nor the rights of any settlers thereto are affected by the terms of the bill now under consideration.

The amount of land embraced in this deed located above the Raccoon Fork appears to be more than 271,000 acres.

It is alleged that the company, in winding up its affairs, distributed this land among the parties interested, and that said land, or a large part of it, has been sold to numerous parties now claiming the same under titles derived from said company

In December, 1859, the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the grant to the Territory of Iowa, under the law of 1846, conveyed no land above the Raccoon Fork, and that all selections and certifications of lands above that point were unauthorized and void, and passed no title or interest in said lands to the State of Iowa. In other words, it was determined that these lands were, in the language of the bill under consideration, "improperly certified to Iowa by the Department of the Interior under the act of August 8, 1846."

This adjudication would seem to conclusively determine that the title to these lands was, as the law then stood, and notwithstanding all that had taken place, still in the United States. And for the purpose of granting all claim or right of the Government to said lands for the benefit of the grantees of the State of Iowa, Congress, on the 2d day of March, 1861, passed a joint resolution providing that all the title still retained by the United States in the land above the Raccoon Fork, in the State of Iowa, "which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior as part of the grant by act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be and the same are hereby relinquished to the State of Iowa."

Afterwards, and on the 12th day of July, 1862, an act of Congress was passed extending the grant of 1846 so as to include lands lying above the Raccoon Fork.

The joint resolution and act of Congress here mentioned have been repeatedly held by the Supreme Court of the United States to supply a title to the lands mentioned in the deed from the State of Iowa to the navigation and railroad company, which inured to the benefit of said company or its grantees.

No less that ten cases have been decided in that court more or less directly establishing this proposition, as well as the further proposition that no title to these lands could, prior to said Congressional action, be gained by settlers, for the reason that it had been withdrawn and reserved from entry and sale under the general land laws. It seems to be perfectly well settled also, if an adjudication was necessary upon that question, that all interest of the United States in these lands was entirely and completely granted by the resolution of 1861 and the act of 1862.

The act of 1862 provides for the setting apart of other lands in lieu of such as were covered by the act, but had been before its passage sold and disposed of by the United States, excepting such as had been released to the State of Iowa under the joint resolution of 1861.

It is claimed, I believe, that in a settlement of land grants thereafter had between the United States and the State of Iowa lands were allowed to the State in lieu or indemnity for some of the lands which it had conveyed to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company. But if the title of the company is valid to lands along the river and above the Raccoon Forks, under the deed from Iowa and the joint resolution and act of Congress, it can not be in the least affected by the fact that the State afterwards, justly or unjustly, received other lands as indemnity.

The bill under consideration provides that all the lands "improperly certified to Iowa" under the grant of 1846, as referred to in the joint resolution of 1861, and for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State, as provided in the act of 1862, "are, and are hereby, declared to be public lands of the United States."

The claims of persons and their heirs who, with intent in good faith to obtain title under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States, have entered and remained upon any tract of said land prior to 1880, are confirmed and made valid to them and their heirs not exceeding 160 acres, and upon due proof and payment of the usual price or fees it is directed that such claims shall be carried to patent.

It is further provided that the claims of settlers and claimants which do not come in conflict with the claims of the parties above mentioned, are confirmed and made valid. By the second section of the bill it is made the duty of the Attorney-General, as soon as practicable, and within three years after the passage of the act, to institute legal proceedings to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands, and to remove all clouds from its title thereto.

One result of this legislation, if consummated and if effectual, would be to restore to the United States, as a part of the public domain, lands which more than twenty-five years ago the Government expressly granted and surrendered, and which repeated decisions of the Supreme Court have adjudged to belong by virtue of this action of the Government to other parties.

Another result would be, not only to validate claims to this land which our highest judicial tribunal have solemnly declared to be invalid, but to actually direct the issue of patents in confirmation of said claims.

Still another result would be to oblige the Government of the United States to enter the courts ostensibly to assert and protect its title to said land, while in point of fact it would be used to enforce private claims to the same and unsettle private ownership.

It is by no means certain that this proposed legislation relating to a subject peculiarly within the judicial function, and which attempts to disturb rights and interests thoroughly intrenched in the solemn adjudications of our courts, would be upheld. In any event, it seems to me that it is an improper exercise of legislative power, an interference with the determinations of a co-ordinate branch of the Government, an arbitrary annulment of a public grant made more than twenty-five years ago, an attempted destruction of vested rights, and a threatened impairment of lawful contracts.

The advocates of this measure insist that a point in favor of the settlers upon these lands and important in the consideration of this bill, is found in the following language of the constitution of the State of Iowa, which was adopted in 1857:

"The General Assembly shall not locate any of the public lands which have been or may be granted by Congress to this State, and the location of which may be given to the General Assembly, upon lands actually settled, without the consent of the occupant."

The State under its constitution was perfectly competent to take the grants of 1861 and 1862. The clause of the constitution above quoted deals expressly with "lands which have been or may be granted by Congress to the State," and thus of necessity recognizes its right to take such grants. This competency in the State as a grantee was all that was needed to create under the joint resolution of 1861 and the act of 1862 a complete divestiture of the interests of the United States in these lands. It must be borne in mind, too, that prior to this time these lands had been conveyed by the State of Iowa in furtherance of the purposes of the original Congressional grants, and that the joint resolution of 1861 and the act of 1862 were really made for the benefit of those who held under grants from the State.

After these grants by the Government it had no concern with these lands. If, in any stage of the proceedings, the General Assembly of Iowa was guilty of any neglect of duty or failed to act in accordance with the constitution of the State of Iowa, the remedy should be found in the courts of that State; and it is difficult to see how the situation in this aspect can be changed or improved by the bill under consideration.

I am not unmindful of the fact that there may be persons who have suffered, or who are threatened with loss, through a reliance upon the erroneous decisions of Government officials as to the extent of the original grant from the United States to the Territory of Iowa. I believe cases of this kind should be treated in accordance with the broadest sentiments of equity, and that where loss is apparent, arising from a real or fairly supposed invitation of the Government to settle upon the lands mentioned in the bill under consideration, such loss should be made good.

But I do not believe that the condition of these settlers will be aided by encouraging them in such further litigation as the terms of this bill invite, nor do I believe that in attempting to right the wrongs of which they complain legislation should be sanctioned mischievous in principle, and in its practical operation doing injustice to others as innocent as they and as much entitled to consideration.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1889.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that that bill and message——

Mr. HOLMES. I ask that the message and the bill be allowed to lie upon the Speaker's table for the present until called up for consideration.

In that connection I wish to ask a parliamentary question: whether it will lose any of its rights or elements of privilege which pertain to it now by allowing it to lie on the table for the present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair). It will not. It is a question of privilege which can be called up at any time the gentleman gets the floor for that purpose.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it in order to interpose an objection unless some time certain be fixed when it is to be called up? The friends of the President and of the veto do not want to be compelled to be on the watch here every moment.

Mr. HOLMES. I will say to the gentleman that I would fix a time but for the pendency of the appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it lie on the table.

Mr. HOLMES. I will say, and give notice now, that I will call up the bill on Monday if I can get the right of way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the message and accompanying bill will lie on the table for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to make a motion of a privileged character.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend until the Chair lays before the House certain executive communications.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM ARROYO HONDO,

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the report of the surveyor-general for New Mexico on private land claim Arroyo Hondo, No. 159; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM CHRISTOBAL DE LA SERNA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the report of the surveyor-general for New Mexico on private land claim Christobal de la Serna, or Los Ranchos de Taos grant, No. 158; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PHILIP P. ROWE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact by the Court of Claims in the case of Philip P. Rowe against the United States.

Mr. WEAVER. I want an order made to substitute a certified copy for the original papers, which never have reached the Committee on Patents. I want that order made, and with it the reference to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to know what matter it is that has been submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the communication.

The Clerk again reported the title of the communication.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order requested by the gentleman from Iowa will be made, and the papers referred to the Committee on Patents and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 28) to create a port of delivery at Port Angeles, in the district of Puget Sound, in Washington Territory;

A bill (S. 24) to extend the limits of the port of Portland as a port of entry;

A bill (S. 3666) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges across Red River," approved May 21, 1888;

A bill (S. 3146) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans., and not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo.;

A bill (S. 3284) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew at or near Ward's Ferry, La.;

A bill (S. 3921) to authorize the Kentucky Union Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Kentucky River and its tributaries;

A bill (S. 3645) granting to the Astoria and South Coast Railway Company the right to construct a bridge across Young's Bay, a navigable stream in the county of Clatsop, and State of Oregon; and

A bill (H. R. 11338) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Coosa River at Gadsden, in the State of Alabama.

RELIEF OF SETTLERS IN HETTINGER COUNTY, DAKOTA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 3751) for the relief of certain settlers in Hettinger County, Dakota.

Mr. PAYSON. In place of a reference of that bill to the Committee on Public Lands I ask unanimous consent to consider it now, with permission to make a brief statement concerning it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Regular order.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I ask that the bill remain on the Speaker's table for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be retained on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the consideration of private business for to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask unanimous consent that members having reports to make or private bills and resolutions to offer for reference be allowed to hand them in to the Clerk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

POWDER-HOUSE AT PORTLAND, ME.

Mr. SPINOLA, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12210) to enable the city of Portland to build a powder-house on Hog Island Ledge; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. WILKINSON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported as a substitute the bill H. R. 3717, a bill (H. R. 12636) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 3717 was reported back with a recommendation that it be laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ILLINOIS RIVER.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 12573) to establish a railroad bridge across the Illinois River, extending from a point within 5 miles of Columbiana, in Greene County, to a point within 5 miles of Kampsville, in Calhoun County, in the State of Illinois; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN F. CLAYTON.

Mr. CHIPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9455) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Clayton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EZRA A. MILLER.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2138) granting an increase of pension to Ezra A. Miller; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS MILLER.

Mr. GEAR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 66) giving a military record to Thomas Miller; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. ROWELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3877) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN C. FRÉMONT.

Mr. SPINOLA submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That on Friday, February 22, the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock until 7.30 o'clock, at which evening session the House will consider Senate bill

No. 2395, authorizing the President to appoint and retire John C. Frémont as a major-general in the United States Army.

THOMAS A. COAKLEY.

Mr. HAYES, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably Miscellaneous Document No. 112, providing for the salary of Thomas A. Coakley, asked that the Committee on Accounts be discharged from its further consideration; that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee be authorized to make provision for it in the general deficiency bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The fact was not announced as to what it was.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a report from the Committee on Accounts, asking to be discharged from the consideration of this matter and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana object?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object. I simply wanted to know what it was.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. I now ask unanimous consent that the House may continue in session until 6 o'clock this evening.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I object.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, and the Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12571) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session a point of order was submitted against the section under consideration. The Chair has examined the point of order and overrules it; and the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Payment to Alabama: For payment to the State of Alabama on account of 2 and 3 per cent. fund arising from the sale of public lands in said State from July 1, 1884, to June 30, 1886, $4,235.21.

Payment to State of Louisiana: To refund to State of Louisiana the amount of overpayments of interest to June 30, 1888, on the bonds of the State held as Indian trust funds by the United States, $13,602.71.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I propose to amend that section by adding "and for payment to the State of Illinois on account of the 2 per cent. that has arisen from the sale of public land in said State from January 1, 1819, to December 31, 1860, $475,163.56."

Mr. SAYERS. I raise the point of order on that amendment. There is no law for it. There is no estimate. The account has not been certified to Congress, and it is not germane to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests the gentleman from Illinois to state whether there is any law authorizing the appropriation proposed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. That is the point I was going to make. Under the act of 1818, admitting the State of Illinois, in section 6, in the third clause of that section, is this provision:

That 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the lands lying within said State, and which shall be sold by Congress, from and after the 1st of January, 1819, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be reserved for the following purposes:

Two-fifths to be disbursed in making roads; the residue for school purposes.

The three-fifths, or the 3 per cent., was paid to the State for school purposes, but not one dollar nor one cent of the 2 per cent. has ever been paid to the State of Illinois. An item that is introduced into this bill pays 2 and 3 per cent. to the State of Alabama for lands sold; and every single State in the Union, except Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, has been paid the full amount of 5 per cent. authorized by the provisions of the acts under which the States were admitted.

The gentleman says that there is no itemized account.

Mr. SAYERS. No estimate.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I have here a statement of the Comptroller which shows the full amount. It shows the number of acres sold, the amount at which the land was sold, and he has even figured up the 2 per cent., and yet not one cent of this has ever been paid.

Mr. RYAN. Why has it not been reported by the Department?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. The gentleman asks, why has it not been reported by the Department? This has been a matter of contention between the Departments for years, and I will explain the reason. About the time when this claim began to run, the General Government commenced what was called the Cumberland road, running out from Cumberland to Jefferson City, Mo. Without any attempt on the part of Congress to charge these States with the building of that road, because it was the purpose of Congress to make it a national improvement to be paid for by the General Government, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, without any direction from any person, sought to charge these States, by an offset against their claims, a large amount of the expense incurred in building that road.

Congress appropriated millions of dollars for the work, intending, as I have said, to make it a great national improvement. There was never any attempt by Congress to charge the expense of this road to any of the States. Besides, Congress abandoned the road before its construction reached the State of Illinois. But a small part of this road was ever built in the State of Indiana. When the ruling of the Commissioner was presented to the Comptroller of the Treasury he sent him a communication stating that it was error to charge Illinois with any of the expense of this road, and requested him to restate the account, holding that this item of the expense incurred in building the Cumberland road was not properly chargeable to the State of Illinois, to the State of Indiana, or to the State of Ohio. I have here the letter of the Comptroller calling for this restatement. The Commissioner declined to restate the account for the simple reason that his predecessor had made the statement in which he charged the expense of the Cumberland road to these States, and declined to reopen the matter, because, as he said, "One officer of the Land Office is not competent to cancel or annul the act of his predecessor."

A resolution was passed by Congress calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to state whether or not the books showed that the State of Illinois had ever been charged one single cent of the cost of this road; and I have here his reply. I will read first, however, a part of the resolution. It called upon him to state—

Whether anything is charged in the Treasury Department against the said fund (that is, the 2 per cent. fund), or any offset exists against it there, and if so, when and how did such offset or charges occur or were the same made, and upon what basis, with the dates and amounts of said charges or offsets, and the form or manner in which the said 2 per cent. fund was expended, with the dates of such expenditure and the authority for it.

The Secretary of the Treasury in reply says:

The books of the Register of the Treasury do, as you suggest, show the amount received into the Treasury from the public lands sold in the State of Illinois since January 1, 1819. A table is herewith transmitted showing the results for each year up to the present time since 1818. The books of the Department do not, however, show anything in regard to such a fund as that referred to in the resolution, either in the way of receipts or of charges or offsets against it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say here that under the law this claim is a proper one. It was properly authorized. The lands were sold, yet not one single cent of that money has ever been paid to the State of Illinois to this day.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the law specify how the amount due to the State of Illinois is to be ascertained?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. It has been ascertained. The authority for it is identical with that under which other like items are brought in by the committee. The amount is 2 per cent. of all the public lands sold under the act of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. But assuming, for the sake of the argument, that there is authority of law, is there any provision for ascertaining the amount of land sold and the percentage thereon? Does the law direct any officer to ascertain the percentage due?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. The provision is the same that is found in the enabling act of nearly every State that has been admitted into the Union. It provides that 5 per cent. of the lands sold shall go to the State for school and road purposes on condition that the State shall not tax the land for five years; and the State of Illinois, at the constitutional convention held at Kaskaskia, in the same year, passed an ordinance in compliance with this requirement. This is all there is to it. The law gives it to the State, and the State, by passing that ordinance, complied with all the requirements of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. But what officer is charged with the duty of ascertaining the amount of lands sold?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. The law does not provide for that in this act or in any of the acts. It is the same in this case as in the case of the State of Alabama.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair will permit me, even if the appropriation is made, not one cent of it can be expended until the amount is ascertained by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. But that has been done. I have the amount here from the Commissioner of the Land Office. It stands there upon the books to the credit of the State, but it has never been settled. The Commissioner of the Land Office says that it stands there to our credit, and the Treasury Department says that there has been no offset or charge against it, but that it has been simply "hung up" in the conflict between the Departments with reference to the question whether or not any portion of the expense of constructing the Cumberland road should be charged to our State. I may add, Mr. Chairman, that the State of Missouri stood in the same position until a few years ago, when its claim was paid, and that claim was no more meritorious than this.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, the covering-in act of 1870 requires that where there shall be any claim affected by that act so that the money which has been appropriated may be covered back into the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit to Congress from session to session an estimate upon the particular claim or claims. Now, we have received no estimate at all from the Treasury Department in reference to this.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to say that the law requires that the estimate shall be submitted by the accounting officers of the Treasury?

Mr. SAYERS. I do say so.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. Is every such item in the bill supported in that way?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair and my colleague will allow me, the estimate gives the committee jurisdiction to report the appropriation, but if it appears that anything is due to any State, or to any individual, under a law, if there is a claim ascertained, then I think the amendment is clearly a proper one.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but the Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to this point, because the Chair is not familiar with the law. If the law provides, as the gentleman from Texas has stated, that the accounting officers of the Treasury shall submit an estimate, and if the accounting officers have not submitted that estimate, then the Chair can not entertain the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. With all due respect to my colleague on the committee I will say that the law does not provide that the accounting officers shall submit estimates before Congress shall have jurisdiction to appropriate. By no manner of means. We appropriate for almost every conceivable purpose in pursuance of law, and, so far as the point of order is concerned, the only question that can be asked is, is the appropriation in pursuance of law? Now, my colleague [Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois] has presented the law, and he says the claims have been ascertained by the auditing officers of the Treasury; but whether they have or not, if the appropriation is made not one cent of it can be paid out until the amount is ascertained by the auditing officers, and so far as the jurisdiction of the committee is concerned, I repeat that under the rule the only question is, is the expenditure for which we appropriate authorized by law? The rest is all a clerical matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Texas that inasmuch as this question has been presented suddenly and for the first time, and the bill can not be completed this evening, that this section, with the amendment and point of order pending upon it, be passed over informally to be recurred to hereafter.

Mr. SAYERS. I have no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to state first that I think there is legislation covering this matter as affecting the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. I do not think it will be found that this appropriation is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter will be passed over informally, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay William Forsyth in full satisfaction of all demands against the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1888 and prior years, submitted in House Executive No. 71, second session Fiftieth Congress, $350.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask that the word "Document" be inserted after the word "Executive" in the fourth line. It was left out by inadvertence.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That one-half of the foregoing amounts to meet deficiencies in the appropriations on account of the District of Columbia shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and one-half from any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SAYERS. At the end of line 10, page 21, I move to insert the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the amounts appropriated for the water department shall be paid wholly from the water fund.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the object of this provision?

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to the gentleman from Arkansas that there is here a water fund, and the law requires that all expenditures on that account shall be paid from that special fund.

Mr. ROGERS. That seems to be proper.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

War Department.

Mr. ENLOE. Under this heading, Mr. Chairman, on page 21, after line 11, I ask to insert the amendment I send to the besk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of War to pay the claim of John McGill, jr., numbered 78063, allowed and certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Government, and appropriated for by Congress in the act approved February 20, 1886, but erroneously paid to another person, $150.

Mr. ENLOE. I offer this by permission of the Committee on Appropriations, and I deem it unnecessary to make any statement in regard to the amendment, as it meets the approval of the committee, unless some gentleman shall desire it.

Mr. HOLMAN. How did it happen to be erroneously paid?

Mr. ENLOE. The circumstances of the case, as I am informed, were about as follows: In the first place, I will state that two claims each for $150, each for a horse, each for the benefit of John McGill, jr., and each from Benton County, Tennessee, were filed with the Quartermaster-General. One was examined, passed upon, and allowed. The other was rejected.

An appropriation was subsequently made by Congress to pay the claim allowed, but it so happened that there were three John McGills, jr., in the county of Benton, one of whom died, and one moved away, and the other, the true claimant, is still there. The administrator of the deceased John McGill, jr., through his attorney, under letters of administration from the county court of Benton County, collected this money. By a mistake the Department paid the money to the wrong person. It was conclusively shown that the claim of the deceased John McGill, jr., had been rejected. I believe this case is known in the Department as the case of the "two Dromios" or three Dromios, and I have been trying for about one year to get the money paid to the right person.

A MEMBER. To the right Dromio.

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, and have been unable to do it up to this time. This statement is sent here by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, with a letter which I hold in my hand, and without taking up the time of the House to read it, I will ask consent to have it printed in the RECORD in support of the amendment, and I will further ask, Mr. Chairman, permission to embody a brief statement in reference to the letter of the Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 15, 1889.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a communication this day sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in regard to the case of John McGill, jr., with the request that favorable action be taken thereon.

Respectfully, yours,

HUGH S. THOMPSON,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1889.

SIR: I have the honor to invite the attention of Congress to the following statement of facts:

On March 20, 1886, the Second Comptroller certified a claim (No. 78063) in favor of John McGill, jr., of Benton County, Tennessee, for $150, for one sorrel mare taken from him by the United States troops on or about November 1, 1864, the payment for which was specifically provided for in the act of Congress approved February 20, 1886 (24 Stat., page 664). War warrant No. 7618 was issued in payment of said claim April 12, 1886, and Treasury draft No. 3760, issued thereon April 12, 1886, for $150, payable to the order of John McGill, jr., was delivered to John Cooper, the attorney, who then represented the claimant before the Department, and who had been substituted and appointed as the true and lawful attorney of John McGill, jr,, by Galen E. Green and Gilbert Moyers, the original attorneys in the case.

On September 13, 1886, the said Galen E. Green presented the aforenamed draft for payment at the Treasury Department, accompanied by a copy of letters of administration on the estate of John McGill, jr., issued in the county court of Benton County, Tennessee, September 8, 1886, to R. L. McElyea, administrator, certified by A. C. McRae, clerk of said court, under the seal of the court, and a power of attorney from said R. L. McElyea, administrator, dated September 10, 1886, executed as required by section 3477, Revised Statutes United States, authorizing the said Galen E. Green, as attorney in fact, to negotiate the aforenamed draft and to receive the money therefor. These papers were approved and filed in the office of the First Comptroller, and, in accordance with the prevailing usage in such cases, the draft was indorsed by the Deputy First Comptroller, as follows: "Payable to Galen E. Green, attorney, authority on file." Said Green thereupon indorsed the draft and received the amount thereof from the Treasurer of the United States.

Satisfactory evidence has been received at this Department since the payment of the draft, as above stated, showing that the true claimant, John McGill, jr., is still alive, residing in Benton County, Tennessee, and that the John McGill, jr., deceased, on whose estate letters of administration were issued to R. L. McElyea, as above shown, was not the true claimant. The Department has made repeated demands upon the said Galen E. Green to refund the amount thus erroneously paid to him, but without avail, and on the 10th of September, 1888, he was disbarred from practice before this Department. As said Green is entirely insolvent, the amount can not be recovered from him by suit.

The officers of this Department have acted in perfect good faith in the matter, and yet the demand of the rightful claimant for payment can not be complied with without another appropriation of the amount by Congress, the amount provided by the act of February 20, 1886, to pay the claim of John McGill jr. (24 Statutes, 664), having been paid to a wrong party. I have therefore respectfully to recommend that a special appropriation of $150 be included in the deficiency appropriation bill now pending before Congress, for the amount allowed and due to the true claimant, John McGill, jr., of Benton County, Tennessee, but which he has failed to receive.

Respectfully, yours,

HUGH S. THOMPSON, Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Upon the receipt of this letter to the Speaker, I called the attention of Mr. Green, the attorney mentioned in connection with the case, to the statements contained in the letter of the Assistant Secretary concerning him. Mr. Green stated to me that he had offered to repay the $150, and that the Assistant Secretary declined to receive it; and, in order to avoid controversy over the matter in the House, I addressed a letter to the Assistant Secretary, reciting the allegations of Mr. Green, and asked him for a reply. He replied as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 19, 1889.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of even date stating that Galen F. Green, attorney in the case of John McGill, jr., has made the statement to you that he had offered to return the amount paid to him in this case, and that his offer was declined, and requesting that you be advised whether such offer was in fact made by Mr. Green and declined by the Treasury Department. In reply I beg to inform you that no such offer was made to this Department. Mr. Green offered to return part of the money provided the proceedings to disbar him were discontinued, which offer was declined unless he paid the whole. He then stated that he was unable to pay the whole amount, and the Department has no method by which payment can be compelled.

Very truly yours,

I. H. MAYNARD.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

I have since seen Mr. Green and submitted Assistant Secretary Maynard's reply to him, and he stated to me, and asked me to state in this connection, that he offered to return the $75 which he received as a fee in the case and the $75 which he paid to the administrator, on condition that the Secretary would issue the draft and place it in his (Green's) hands to enable him to secure a fee in the case, he claiming to be the attorney of the true claimant. This he states was declined.

As to the controversy between Mr. Green and the departmental officers I am not concerned, my only care being to secure justice to the claimant, who should not be denied his money on account of a mistake in the application of the former appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. I have examined this case myself and know it is right.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas: For transportation of discharged military prisoners at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, to place of prisoner's enlistment at prisoner's home, provided the cost to the latter does not exceed cost to place of enlistment, $2,500.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in after line 14 on page 24 of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For post-office and custom-house at Atlanta, Ga.: for paving streets around said building, being for one-third the cost thereof, $1,747.56.

Mr. SAYERS. I raise the point of order upon that amendment, and base it upon two grounds. The first is that it is not germane to the pending proposition; and second, there is no law authorizing it.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I simply desire to say that I anticipated the gentleman would make that point; in fact he told me so.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, of any express statute which warrants this appropriation, except it be held to come in as an incident in the construction of buildings or their improvement. The general clause of the Revised Statutes provides that Congress may make appropriations for purchasing sites and erecting public buildings thereon, as well as for keeping them in repair. Now if this should not be held as an incident to that the point would be well taken.

I desire to say, however, before the Chair rules upon the question, that I would have presented this matter to the committee when the letter came, but I was sick, and that was the reason I did not.

I want to say this, that around this public building, which is a custom-house, post-office, and a building used for the internal-revenue office, the streets have been paved, which will be shown by the papers if necessary.

Mr. SAYERS. That has been overruled a dozen times.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I want to say on the point of order, whatever rulings there have been, I find that in the appropriation bill in the Forty-eighth Congress identically the same thing was allowed for a number of cities. I do not know whether the gentleman from Texas was in charge of the bill then or not. I suppose if he was he has changed his mind.

Mr. SAYERS. They were all Senate amendments, and when they came here they were not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk resumed and continued the reading to line 6, on page 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise so as to enable the House to take a recess under former order.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HATCH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12571) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then (at 5 o'clock), by previous order, the House took a recess until 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 22, 1889.

Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is hereby designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Clerk.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. Before making the motion to go into Committee of the Whole I will ask unanimous consent, in behalf of my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN], who is detained at home in the preparation of an address on the life and character of Mr. Burnes, that myself or some one be permitted to call up a bill for him if his name be reached, and I make a similar request for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. LAIDLAW. I have a bill here to present for one of the New Hampshire delegation [Mr. GALLINGER], if his name is reached, and I would like to have the same privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask if there be objection to either request.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to know what the proposition is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana states that his colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] is detained from attendance at this evening session in order that he may prepare an address on the life and character of Mr. Burnes. He asks the privilege, if his name is reached, that he or some one else may be permitted to call up the bill that his colleague would ask consideration of if he were present; and a similar request is made for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON], who can not attend during the remainder of the session.

Mr. FINLEY. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Now I ask that the same privilege be granted to me to call up a bill for one of the members from New Hampshire.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MATSON. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole under the special order, and if there be no objection the order heretofore pursued in the consideration of bills will be continued. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

JULIET OPIE H. AYRES.

Mr. COBB (by request) called up for consideration the bill (S. 3944) granting a pension to Juliet Opie H. Ayres.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Juliet Opie H. Ayres, widow of Romeyn Beck Ayres, late colonel of the Second Regiment Artillery, United States Army, a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $50 per month.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3944) granting a pension to Juliet Opie H. Ayres, having had the same under consideration, adopt the Senate report thereon, which is as follows, and recommend the passage of the bill.

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill granting increase of pension to Juliet Opie H. Ayres, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant is the widow of Romeyn B. Ayres, late brevet major-general of volunteers and colonel of the Second Regiment of United States Artillery.

She is now receiving a pension of $30 per month, which the bill proposes to increase to $50 per month.

General Ayres was born at East Creek, Montgomery County, New York, in December, 1825. In 1843, when eighteen years of age, he entered the Military Academy at West Point, graduating therefrom in 1847, and at once received his commission in the regular Army as brevet second lieutenant of the Fourth Artillery. With that regiment he served in the Mexican war at Pueblo and the city of Mexico with so much valor that he was commissioned second lieutenant in the Third Artillery on the 22d of September of the same year. From the close of the Mexican till the breaking out of the civil war he was in active service, mostly on the frontiers, having received his commission as first lieutenant March 16, 1852. On the 14th of May, 1861, Lieutenant Ayres was offered a captain's commission in the Fifth Artillery, and accepted it June 28 following. He was present at all the early engagements about Washington, and accompanied the Army of the Potomac in the Peninsula and Maryland campaigns of 1862, and took part in all of the long series of battles ending at Antietam. On the 29th of November, 1862, he was made a brigadier-general of volunteers, taking his commission on the 4th of April, 1863.

July 2, 1863, for "gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Gettysburgh," he was made brevet major in the regular Army, and on July 5, 1864, for his valor in the Wilderness, he was made brevet lieutenant-colonel. With the Army of the Potomac he served through the engagements at Warrenton, Rappahannock Station, and many other places. In July, 1863, he was placed in command of a regiment and sent to New York City to aid the draft, and during the riots that followed rendered gallant services. On the 1st of August, 1864, his conspicuous services in the battles of Spottsylvania Court-House, Jericho Mills, Petersburgh, and Globe Tavern brought him the rank of brevet major-general in the volunteers, and eighteen days later, for gallantry at the battle of the Weldon Railroad, in Virginia, he was made brevet colonel in the regular Army. His brilliant services at Five Forks, Va., made him brevet brigadier-general in the regular Army March 13, 1865, and on the same day, for "gallant and meritorious services in the field during the war," he also received his brevet as a major-general in the regular Army. He afterward took part in the pursuit of the rebel army, culminating in Lee's surrender. On the 30th of April, 1866, he was mustered out of the volunteer service.

Since the war he has been in command at various posts and served on many important commissions. From June, 1866, to February, 1867, he was a member of the tactics board. In July, 1866, he was made lieutenant-colonel of the Twenty-eighth Infantry; in March, 1869, being transferred to the Nineteenth Infantry, and in December, 1870, to the Third Artillery. On the 18th of July, 1879, he was made colonel of the Second Artillery. Three years ago he was ordered to St. Francis Barracks, St. Augustine. The climate did not agree with him there and he was forced to ask for leave of absence. He came to Governor's Island and then removed to Fort Hamilton, New York, where he died on the 4th day of December, 1888, leaving his widow, with two daughters of tender years and her mother (who is approaching eighty years of age, and who is physically in a helpless condition and dependent upon her daughter), wholly without means of support.

Congress has repeatedly granted this increase in similar cases and in several instances where the rank of the officer was of a lower grade and when the services rendered were not so valuable.

In consideration of the life-long services of General Ayres and of his brilliant and conspicuous record in the Mexican war and in the war of the rebellion, and of the indigent circumstances in which he left his family, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

Mr. COBB. I ask unanimous consent to have the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill considered as ordered, and that the bill go over to a full House.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object. I shall object to all such requests, and I shall do so for this reason: The other day a member said upon this floor that my objection to the consideration of a bill was a "trick," when he himself had come upon the floor after the committee rose and asked that the rate of pension proposed in the bill be reduced from $50 to $30 per month. So long as that statement stands upon the record of this Congress I shall object.

Mr. COBB. I did not do it.

Mr. CHEADLE. I admit that.

Mr. COBB. I just want to say this: I called this bill up by request. I should have voted against it if it had come to a vote. [Laughter.]

I will withdraw that for the bill (H. R. 5758) granting a pension to Lavinia Wright, which I also call up by request.

LOVINA WRIGHT.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lavinia Wright, of Maquoketa, Jackson County, Iowa, widow of John J. Wright, late of Company L, Second Regiment of Iowa Cavalry.

The report by (Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5758) granting a pension to Lavinia Wright, respectfully report:

That Lovina Wright is the widow of John J. Wright, who was a private in Company L, Second Iowa Cavalry, who was pensioned for injury to spine incurred in said military service, and who died June 24, 1885, of peritonitis and stricture of the bowels.

Dr. A. B. Bowen, of Maquoketa, Iowa, who attended the soldier in his last illness, as well as at times for years previously, and had several times examined him as United States examining surgeon, and was, consequently, familiar with the soldier's disease and its progress and resulting complications, and Dr. D. N. Loose, of the same place, who assisted said Dr. Bowen in making the autopsy, testify that the disease of which the soldier died was caused, in their opinion, by the injury to the spine for which he was pensioned, and resulted therefrom.

The claim of the widow, however, was rejected in the Pension Office because the medical referee declined to accept the soldier's fatal illness as the result of said injury to his spine.

Your committee are inclined to give the widow the benefit of any existing doubt; and report the bill back with the recommendation that it be amended by striking out "Lavinia," in line 6, and inserting "Lovina" in place thereof; and that, as so amended, the bill be passed.

Also amend title of bill by striking out "Lavinia" and inserting, in place thereof, "Lovina."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, and that the title be amended so as to conform to the bill.

M. JOSIE M'CLAIN.

Mr. MCMILLIN (when Mr. COCKRAN'S name was reached). I was requested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] to call up a bill for him, if it is not objected to by the committee. I know nothing of its merits, and will not vouch for its merits. I only comply with his request to bring it before the House and in order that the House may take such action as may seem proper in the premises. I have no right to call up one myself to-night, as my name will not probably be reached, and of course this would be charged to his recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? The Chair hears none.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of M. Josie McClain, widow of the late Ensign Charles Sumner McClain, United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $30 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 11663, having considered the same, report as follows:

Mrs. H. Josie McClain, of the city of Brooklyn, county of Kings, in the State of New York, is the widow of Charles Sumner McClain, late ensign, United States Navy.

Charles Sumner McClain was appointed cadet midshipman November 3, 1874; served on the United States steamers Pensacola, Lackawanna, and Independence; promoted to midshipman June 4, 1880; served on United States steamer Yantic and Coast Survey steamer Bache. He was promoted to ensign February 4, 1882; served on the Coast Survey steamer Bache; at the Smithsonian Institution; on the Greely relief steamer Alert, and subsequently at the Naval Academy and the navy-yard at Pensacola, Fla. He died at Brooklyn, N. Y., January 11, 1887.

Ensign McClain was an officer of considerable merit in his profession, and was actively employed at sea and on shore during the entire period of his naval career, with the exception of less than ten months.

Upon the fitting out of the Greely relief expedition he volunteered for the service, and before being assigned to that duty was examined by a medical officer of the Navy and pronounced sound and well qualified for the special service required. While on the expedition he contracted a cold which resulted in pulmonary consumption, from which he died January 11, 1887, about two years after his return from the Arctic regions.

"UNITED STATES NAVY-YARD, PENSACOLA, FLA.,
"Surgeon's Office, August 20, 1888.

"This certifies that Ensign Charles Sumner McClain, United States Navy, with advanced pulmonary consumption, was under my professional charge from April 5 to July 14, 1886. After careful investigation during that time and since, I am satisfied that said disease, from which the patient has since died, originated in line of duty from exposure during the Greely relief expedition to the Arctic in 1884. Prior to that expedition the deceased had served continuously in the United States Navy in perfect health for ten years. During the expedition he had several colds, and in about the usual time thereafter unmistakable evidences of pulmonary consumption showed themselves.

"J. W. ROSS,
"Surgeon, United States Navy."

The deceased left one child, Charles Brooks McClain, now over two years of age. Claimant is in receipt of a pension of $15 per month, but has no means to provide for the young child and to educate it when growing up.

Your committee believe his death was incident to the service and in the line of duty, as clearly set forth in the accompanying certificate of Surg. J. W. Ross, United States Navy, and his widow should be granted the relief proposed by the bill.

Your committee therefore report the bill favorably with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNA SLATER.

Mr. COMPTON. I call up the bill (S. 1319) granting a pension to Anna Slater.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Anna Slater, a volunteer nurse in the late war, giving her, during life, the sum of $25 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1319) granting a pension to Anna Slater, have had the same under consideration, and report:

Claimant was a volunteer nurse in United States General Hospital, Armory Square, Washington, D. C., in 1862. She petitions to be placed upon the pension-roll on the ground that, owing to great and severe labor in connection with her duties in general and field hospitals and from exposure incident to such service, she contracted rheumatism, which has continued to the present time, greatly disabling her for manual labor.

Her services as a faithful and competent nurse were certified to by Dr. D. W. Bliss, surgeon in charge of Armory Square Hospital; W. W. Hodgman, general ward-master of the same hospital; D. L. Dix, superintendent of women nurses; Ruth W. Hodgman, Grace A. Falk, Emily D. Spear, and Hiram Spear, employés in Armory Square Hospital.

Thomas D. Bond, of Washington, D. C., in a letter dated January 3, 1888, certifies to the good character of claimant, and states that four or five years ago she was keeping house for him, but was compelled to leave on account of rheumatism, with which she was severely afflicted.

Dr. John Cronmiller, of Laurel, Md., in a letter dated January 4, 1888, certifies that about six years ago claimant consulted him for rheumatic trouble affecting her left arm and shoulder, greatly impairing her usefulness.

Mary A. Lillibridge, Elizabeth Curley, George W. Lillibridge, John W. Whiteside, Theodore Morrison, Margaret Morrison, and Eliza J. Burgee, citizens of Laurel, Md., petition that claimant's name be placed upon the pension-roll, on the ground that she is unable to earn her living by reason of physical disability contracted as a hospital nurse in the service. They further state that claimant entered upon duty in field hospital at Laurel, Md., in the fall of 1862, and remained there until the close of the war, rendering faithful and valuable service.

In an affidavit executed January 3, 1888, A. M. Bond, E. J. Cartle, and George W. Curley, citizens of Laurel, Md., testify to claimant's faithful service as a hospital nurse during the late civil war, and pray that her name be placed upon the pension-roll, on the ground that she is now suffering from disabilities contracted in the service, disabling her to earn her living by physical labor.

The facts in the case warrant favorable action, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill at $12 per month.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I understand from the reading of that bill that it grants a pension to the beneficiary during her life.

The CHAIRMAN. It grants a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. KILGORE. But if she should marry again she would not be entitled to a pension.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas offer an amendment?

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to know what the rule is in such cases.

Mr. MATSON. This is a bill to grant a pension to a nurse, not a widow's pension; and the matter of her marriage has nothing to do with the right to a pension of this kind.

Mr. KILGORE. But if she is a married woman her pension ought to stop. The idea is that when a woman is married her husband will be able to take care of her.

Mr. LAWLER. He may need somebody to take care of him. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas offer an amendment?

Mr. KILGORE. Gentlemen tell me that this is the rule, but I do not think it is a good one. I will ask the gentleman from Maryland whether this bill has passed the Senate?

Mr. COMPTON. This bill passed the Senate at the rate of $25, and the House committee have recommended an amendment reducing the amount to $12.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SUSAN P. MURDOCK.

Mr. CONGER. I call up the bill (S. 2758) granting a pension to Susan P. Murdock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Susan P. Murdock, mother of Washington Murdock, late a member of Company G, Thirtieth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2758) granting a pension to Susan P. Murdock, respectfully report that they adopt the Senate report upon said bill and recommend the passage of the bill.

The Senate report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 2449, Fiftieth Congress, second session.]

Washington Murdock, who was a member of Company G, Thirteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, was the son of Susan P. Murdock, the beneficiary in this bill. He died while in the service, leaving an infant child, to which a pension was allowed and paid until it arrived at the age of sixteen years. In January, 1886, the mother of the soldier applied for a pension on the ground of dependence, which was disallowed. A special bill was introduced for her relief on the 23d of April, 1888, on which an adverse report was made, and the bill was indefinitely postponed. On the 8th of January the vote to indefinitely postpone was reconsidered, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, with additional testimony.

From this testimony it appears that the wife of the soldier and mother of his child was dead, and the care of the child fell upon its grandmother, Susan P. Murdock, the mother of the soldier. It appears further that at the time of and prior to the enlistment of the soldier, the husband of Susan P. Murdock was a cripple; that she was largely dependent upon her son, who recognized his obligation to support her, and as long as he lived contributed to her support from his pay as a soldier.

It further appears from the additional evidence that after the cessation of the pension to the child, she was obliged to support herself and him by taking washing; that she is now seventy-three years of age, disabled mentally and physically to earn anything for her support; that she depends for the ordinary comforts of life upon uncertain, small contributions from charitable sources.

In the opinion of the committee the circumstances of this case are peculiar, as shown by the additional testimony, and such as justify the passage of a special act for the relief of this aged woman, which she has earned not only as the mother of the soldier, but as the guardian of his child.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY J. BYRD.

Mr. COOPER. I call up the bill (S. 2334) granting a pension to Mary J. Byrd.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary J. Byrd, widow of Solomon G. Byrd, late of Company B, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2334) granting a pension to Mary J. Byrd, having considered the same, report as follows:

They adopt and make part hereof the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The Senate report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 965, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2334) granting a pension to Mary J. Byrd, have carefully examined the same, and report:

The claimant, Mary J. Byrd, is the widow of Solomon G. Byrd, late second lieutenant of Company B, Forty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Her declaration was filed December 19, 1879, and rejected May 14, 1887, the ground of the rejection being "that the records of the Department failed to show that the alleged officer was in the military service of the United States at any time."

The action of the Pension Bureau in rejecting the claim for pension in this case was technically correct. The officer had never been mustered into the service of the United States. The Adjutant-General certifies "that the name of Solomon G. Byrd is not borne on the rolls of Company B, Forty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and there is no record of said Byrd as commanding officer in said regiment." The adjutant-general of the State of Ohio, in reply to a letter addressed to him by the Commissioner of Pensions, certifies "that Solomon G. Byrd was appointed second lieutenant, and that he was mustered as second lieutenant in the Forty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry on November 4, 1861, by A. B. Doch, captain United States Infantry, mustering officer." On the return of the papers to the War Department, after this certificate, for further examination, the Adjutant-General certified "his muster-in as reported by the adjutant-general of Ohio was evidently conditional upon the recruitment of a command and muster-in therewith on its completion."

Bertrand Andrews makes affidavit "that he was at the time of enlistment of the soldier a notary public; that the enlistment roll was signed, and that he administered the oath to the soldier; that he went into camp at Mount Vernon on the next day; that it was a wet, cold day, and a few days after that he was brought home sick, and that he never recovered from this sickness, and died in April, 1863; that his enlistment was in October or November, 1862; that he went with the soldier in November, 1862, to Sparta and to Vailes Cross-Roads to procure volunteers, at both of which places he addressed audiences, and several persons enlisted; that the soldier died of consumption from cold contracted in the service."

Thomas Turner makes affidavit that he was a member of Company B, Forty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry; "that in the month of November, 1862, he was with the said company in camp at Mount Vernon, Ohio; that before said regiment was organized fully, Solomon G. Byrd, whom he had known to be a man of good health and constitution for twenty years, came to said camp with a number of recruits; that it was a cold, stormy day when he arrived; that the soldier had been enlisting and recruiting for said regiment; that on the night of his arrival in said camp he took a severe cold and was sent home on account of the said sickness a few days before the said regiment was organized; that the affiant served in the said regiment during the war, and that the soldier had enlisted but had not been mustered in on account of his being sick at home and his inability ever to again join the regiment; that he died in April, 1863."

The facts disclosed by the records of this case clearly bring the husband of the claimant within the equities of the pension laws.

Technically, he was not entitled, nor his widow, to a pension, as he had not been mustered into service, but that he contracted the disease from which he died in the line of duty devolving upon him by the oath which he had taken and the duty to which he had been assigned in recruiting for said regiment, and was only deprived of the benefits which the law confers upon a soldier by having contracted a fatal disease just prior to his being legally mustered into the service of the United States, seems to be fully sustained by the evidence in the papers.

Under these circumstances the committee is of opinion that the widow of the soldier is entitled, upon every equitable ground, to the relief from Congress asked in the bill.

Senate bill 2334 is therefore reported favorably with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LITTLEBERRY W. BAKER.

Mr. COWLES. I call up the bill (H. R. 12619) granting a pension to Littleberry W. Baker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Littleberry W. Baker, who served in Captain Gunn's company, from the State of Alabama, Indian war, 1836, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12619) granting a pension to Littleberry W. Baker, have considered the same, and report:

That the complainant served in Capt. Abram Miles's company, from the State of Georgia, in the Florida Indian war of 1836. He was honorably discharged. He is now about seventy-five years of age, in feeble health, and without income or property.

In common with other survivors of said Indian wars, your committee believe this man should have a service pension, and hence report the bill and recommend its passage, amended by changing the word "Gunn's" to "Miles's," in line 5, and "Alabama" to "Georgia," in line 6.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANN G. BARKER.

Mr. CRAIN. I call up the bill (H. R. 12604) to restore the pension of Ann G. Barker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to restore pensions in certain cases," approved June 9, 1880, shall be construed so as to include within its provisions Ann G. Barker, widow of Thomas Barker, deceased, late a captain in the United States Army.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12604) to restore the pension of Mrs. Ann G. Barker, have examined the same, and report:

Mrs. Ann G. Barker, as the widow of Thomas Barker, deceased, late a captain in the United States Army, received a pension of $25 per month until the passage by Congress of a law in 1868, the provisions of which were construed by the Secretary of the Interior to require him to reduce said pension to $20 per month, which has been the amount received by Mrs. Barker since that time.

The widows of officers of the Navy were included within the provisions of the aforesaid law, but Congress restored their pensions by the act of June 9, 1880, entitled "An act to restore pensions in certain cases," and the object of this bill is to include Mrs. Barker within the provisions of said act.

Thomas Barker entered the service of the United States at the beginning of the war with Great Britain as an officer of New York volunteers, serving with the army under General Scott in campaign in Western New York and Canada with some distinction. He was at the instance of the commanding general appointed first lieutenant Forty-first United States Infantry, August 1, 1813, and promoted captain November 17 of that year. At the close of the war the additional regiments raised for its prosecution were disbanded and he was honorably discharged. He was commissioned second lieutenant in the First Regiment of Infantry February 3, 1819, promoted first lieutenant July 23, 1820, captain May 31, 1829.

Under the last-named commission he was engaged in the Indian wars in Florida, being present in nearly all the battles, from the first uprising in 1832 to that at Caloosahatchie, July 23, 1839. Captain Barker died November 11, 1839, at Tampa, Fla., being one of the victims of the double epidemic then raging—cholera and yellow fever. The widow of Captain Barker, Mrs. Ann G. Barker, is now nearly eighty-nine years old; is and has been for a number of years almost helpless from rheumatism and loss of sight, requiring assistance in dressing and moving about her room, which she has not left for about ten years. She is entirely dependent upon her daughter, who is employed in the Treasury Department at a salary of $75 per month.

After a review of the facts the committee report the bill back and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JACOB WOLF.

Mr. CROUSE. I call up the bill (H. R. 3916) granting a pension to Jacob Wolf.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob Wolf, late of Company H, One hundred and sixty-second Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3916) for the relief of Jacob Wolf, make the following report:

The claimant, Jacob Wolf, was a private in Company H, One hundred and sixty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He enlisted May 2, 1864, and was discharged September 4, 1864. On March 18, 1884, he applied for pension for lung disease and chronic diarrhea, which disabilities he alleges he contracted in service in line of duty about July, 1864. Application was rejected on the ground that the records of the War Department fail to show that claimant suffered from the alleged disabilities while in service. Records of War Department fail to show the facts in the case because the regimental hospital register is not on file, but the regimental prescription book shows that the soldier was treated in July, 1864, the time at which he alleges origin, for the disabilities for which he asks pension. In addition to this Lieut. Col. J. E. Dougherty, of the claimant's regiment, makes oath that he remembers claimant's sickness as claimant alleges, and that he sent claimant home on furlough on account of such sickness.

First Lieut. Henry B. Bennett makes oath that he was acting adjutant of the regiment at the time when claimant alleges origin of disability, and that acting as adjutant he sent claimant home on furlough on account of such sickness, as alleged. He makes further oath that he knows claimant to have suffered from that time to the present time, and that claimant is now disabled.

Dr. John F. Grassklaus, hospital steward, makes oath that he remembers the sickness of the soldier at the time he alleges origin, and that as hospital steward he furnished the soldier medicine and treatment at the time, and has known him to be disabled continually since that time.

Dr. A. P. Beach makes oath that he has treated claimant for aggravated lung trouble.

Dr. M. B. Dawson makes oath that he has treated claimant for lung trouble of long standing; that claimant has "pleuritic adhesion in right pleura."

Dr. H. Monroe makes oath that he has treated claimant for chronic diarrhea.

Dr. J. L. Leeper makes oath that he was called as consulting physician to attend claimant at the time he returned from service.

The examining board of surgeons for the Pension Bureau report, as a result of their examination, that they are of the opinion that the disability was incurred in service as claimed, and not aggravated by vicious habits. They say:

"We find the disability as above described to entitle him to one-fourth total rating."

We recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT W. ANDREWS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 12404) granting a pension to Robert W. Anders.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Robert W. Anders, who served in Captain Richbught's company, from the State of Alabama, Indian war, 1836, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12404) granting a pension to Robert W. Andrews, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The records on file at the Treasury Department (Second Auditor's Bureau) show that Robert W. Andrews served in Capt. John S. Richburge's company, Florida war of 1836, and was honorably discharged. He drew a land-warrant for his services therein. He resides at Jersey, Bradley County, Arkansas. He is now seventy-five years of age and needy.

There is now on the Calendar of the House a bill, favorably reported by this committee, to grant a service pension to all the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832-1842, and many special acts have been passed in such cases pending the consideration of the general act.

Your committee are of the opinion that the bill should pass, and report it back with such recommendation. Amend, however, by changing the spelling of the surname in the title, and in line 5 of the bill from "Anders" to "Andrews," and also by changing the word "Richburght's," in line 5, to "Richburge's."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHRISTIANA FREDERIKA ZEUTMEYER.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama. I call up the bill (H. R. 9250) granting a pension to Mrs. Christiana Frederika Zeutmeyer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Christiana Frederika Zeutmeyer, of Fairfield, Minn., mother of Charles Louis Zeutmeyer, who was killed by the Indians in the year 1862 while guarding Government property at the Lower Sioux agency, Minnesota (and upon whom she was dependent for support), on the pension-roll, subject to the rules and limitations of the pension law.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions upon bill H. R. 9250, referred to them, beg leave to report:

It is established by evidence before the committee that Charles Louis Zeutmeyer, the son of the claimant, was employed in the farm department of the Lower Sioux agency in August, 1862, when that agency was attacked by Indians; that while defending the buildings he, among others, was shot and killed; that his mother at that time was largely dependent on him for support, and is now in her old age without property or sufficient means for support. Her husband is also aged, and for years has been an invalid and unable to provide a support for the claimant.

The witnesses are all of the highest respectability, among them being Hon. William Pfaender, ex-State senator of Minnesota, and Hon. William Schimmel, one of the State trustees for hospitals for insane.

Your committee are of opinion that in this class of cases where a man is shot down in actual warfare while defending Government property, being at the time an employé of the Government, a pension should be granted to his widow or dependent relatives, and hence the bill is reported back to the House and its passage recommended.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I understand from that bill and report that the son of this beneficiary was never in the service at all, but that he was slain while making an effort to protect Government property against Indian marauders. Now, I do not think the principle of that bill is correct. This is a small matter, but my impression is that the beneficiary here is no more entitled to a pension than the family of a sheriff or a deputy sheriff or a marshal or a deputy marshal who might happen to be killed in the discharge of his duty or in the protection of property belonging to the Government, and I must insist upon a quorum if my friend from Alabama presses the passage of this bill. I know he is very much wedded to it, but I feel bound to resist its passage.

Mr. MACDONALD. I can enlighten my friend from Texas.

Mr. KILGORE. That is what I want.

Mr. MACDONALD. The son of this beneficiary was in the service of the Government of the United States at the time of the breaking out of the Indian war in Minnesota in 1862, and, while in the act of defending the Government property near the Yellow Medicine agency, was killed by Indians. The records of this Government are full of just such cases. This lady is very old and feeble, and certainly there is no good reason why she should not receive a pension from the United States Government just as much as if her son had gone through the formal proceeding of being enlisted. He was just as much engaged in the defense of Government property as those who were in the service and who were killed right beside him and whose heirs do receive pensions.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like the gentleman from Minnesota to tell us whether this man was enlisted in the service.

Mr. MACDONALD. I have stated, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KILGORE. The gentleman from Minnesota stated that this man was in the Government employ. The gentleman was very ingenious in his statement, expecting perhaps to overcome a new member in that way.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am not any more ingenious than the gentleman from Texas himself is captious. I merely want him to understand just what the facts are, as I have stated them. This man was in the employ of the Government of the United States and was actually engaged in defending Government property. If he had not been in the employ of the Government I of course would not claim that he was entitled to a pension; but he was actually so engaged, and the records show it, and I think that if the gentleman from Texas will investigate he will find a great many cases of a similar character, and no more meritorious than this, where pensions have been granted.

Mr. KILGORE. But they ought not to have been granted. I dislike to interfere with my friend, but I feel bound to resist this bill. I am willing, however, to consent that it shall be withdrawn. [Laughter].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside this bill to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. KILGORE. I shall have to make the point of no quorum if it comes to that.

The question was taken, and there were—ayes 24, no 1.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama. I withdraw the bill, and call up instead the bill (S. 3309) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth E. Groff.

MRS. ELIZABETH E. GROFF.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Elizabeth E. Groff, widow of Charles H. Groff, late a private in Company K, Forty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3309) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth E. Groff, respectfully report that they adopt the following Senate report upon said bill and recommend the passage of the bill:

[Senate Report No. 1897, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3309) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth E. Groff, have examined the same, and report:

This is a bill to pension Elizabeth Groff, widow of Charles H. Groff, late a private in Company K, Forty-fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteers. It was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that congestion of the brain, of which the soldier died, was not referable to his services.

The soldier applied for an invalid pension for injuries to back and hips, caused by falling into a rifle-pit at La Grange, Tenn. The testimony of his comrades is satisfactory as to his prior soundness. Josiah A. Wilbur, comrade, examined by special examiner, and whose reputation is good, remembers that the soldier was badly hurt by falling into a rifle-pit at La Grange, Tenn. Has not seen him since discharge. George W. Ware, comrade, remembers distinctly that near La Grange, Tenn.—

"A number of our boys fell into a rifle-pit. Were moving at double-quick, expecting an attack from General Mosby. I was near the front and passed over safely, but the boys behind fell in, three or four deep. Captain Wilson said it was a wonder some were not killed. It was on a dark night."

Other soldiers testify as to the rifle-pit event, but do not remember Groff; while others still have no recollection of the circumstance or of Groff. Their testimony is only remarkable for what they do not know.

There is enough testimony to corroborate the soldier's statement as to his falling into the rifle-pit, but he had no attorney to aid him with his invalid application, and therefore the connection of his disability and death with his service is imperfect. After discharge he lived in Iowa, and neighbors say they never heard him complain. It is likely that he suffered without complaining. He kept a store, and could do without a pension until he became very poor and removed to Florida. Then he applied, but it was long after the war and his claim was not well developed.

A special examiner, who was sent to Florida to investigate the case in the interest of the widow's claim, says:

"The claimant is a woman with a good reputation for truth and veracity in Obrine, Fla. I am constrained to place a good deal of stress upon the truthfulness of her statements. She impresses me with being a woman of high moral courage, and though in destitute circumstances, yet she appears to be very energetic. I found her domiciled in a very small cabin out in the pine forests of the subtropical region, where any one possessing the least degree of pride might die of absolute despair."

There is no record testimony of the alleged disease. The soldier was never examined by a board of surgeons. He died the day before the order reached him to report for examination.

The committee realize the absence of full and explicit testimony such as is ordinarily required to connect the soldier's death with his service, but we believe it to be a meritorious case and that Congress has the right to rescue this woman and her children from the despair with which the special examiner, with good reason, testifies she is threatened.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN GALLAGHER.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I call up the bill (S. 2690) granting a pension to John Gallagher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Gallagher, who was a private in Company I, Second Regiment United States Dragoons, in the Seminole Indian war of 1836, and that he be allowed a pension from the date of the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2690) granting a pension to John Gallagher, have had the same under consideration, and adopt the Senate report hereto attached, and recommend the passage of the bill.

SENATE REPORT.

The proofs presented in the claim embraced in this bill were not such as to fully meet the technical requirements of the Pension Bureau, and it was rejected. There is no doubt of the fact of service as private in Company I, Second Regiment United States Dragoons, in the Seminole Indian war of 1836. The hospital records and petitioner's discharge show treatment for such injuries as he alleges, and that they were so serious as to retire him from the Army; the fact of his loyalty is established, and the half century which has elapsed between his enlistment and the application for pension furnishes a reasonable excuse for failure to comply with the usual requirements of officers' and comrades' testimony as to details of injury.

The evidence of a large number of his townsmen in Florida, whose positions entitle them to credit, vouches for his honesty, his crippled condition, and his poverty. This, with his age and army service, induces the committee to disregard the difficulties, which are technical, and to report favorably upon the bill, and recommend its passage, with an amendment making the pension to date from the passage thereof.

NOTE.—Amend by striking out all after the word "date," in the ninth line of said bill, and substituting in lieu thereof the words "of the passage of this act."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES M. BARRETT.

Mr. DE LANO. I call up the bill (H. R. 12575) to increase the pension of James M. Barrett.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The claimant was a private in Company K, Twenty-sixth New York Volunteer Infantry. He enlisted May 14, 1861, and was discharged December 11, 1862. At the battle of Bull Run, Va., August 30, 1862, he was shot through the upper part of both legs. The wound of the left leg caused only an injury to the sciatic nerve, but did not injure the bone structure. That of the right leg fractured the femur at its upper portion, and, union taking place with the lower portion overriding the upper portion, a serious deformity, with a shortening of the leg of 5 inches, resulted. This condition has been permanent ever since discharge.

The claimant is pensioned under the general laws at $24 per month, the disability of the right leg being held equivalent to the loss of a foot or hand.

From the testimony in the case it is shown that the claimant is unable to perform any manual labor that requires him to stand on his feet. The examinations made by the pension examining surgeons at intervals since discharge show that the disability has remained about the same each year. Ex-Surg. W. F. Breakey, of Ann Arbor, Mich., in 1872, reports:

"The disability results from the effects of gunshot wound—bullet entering on outer side right thigh, about 4 inches above the trochanter major, fracturing femur and emerging on inner side close up to perineum; entering left thigh directly opposite, passing behind femur and emerging on outer side about 5 inches above trochanter major. The right femur is united with about 5 inches shortening (the limb being that much shorter than its fellow) and at an angle, the foot pointing in across the left foot. He suffers pain at seat of fracture and in muscles of left thigh; the limbs are weaker than on prior examinations; can not walk without a cane or crutch, and has an artificial foot or thick sole to shoe."

The examining board at Binghamton, N. Y., in October, 1883, after giving a similar description of the wounds, report the disability as of second grade, and state that claimant can perform no manual labor, being unable to stand for that purpose.

Other examinations and testimony of physicians are to the same effect.

Your committee believe that this man would be in better condition to earn a livelihood were his disability the amputation of the right leg at the hip-joint, and we are of the opinion that the general laws being inadequate for relief in this case, the bill should be passed. With such recommendation the bill is returned to the House, with an amendment striking out the words "forty-two," in the eighth line of said bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "thirty-six."

The amendment recommended in the report of the committee was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LUCY, WIDOW OF MUCK-A-PEC-WAH-KEN-ZAH.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call up the bill (H. R. 12420) granting a pension to Lucy, widow of Muck-a-pec-wah-ken-zah, or "John," an Indian who served the United States and saved the lives of many white persons in the Indian outbreak or war of 1862, and died from effects of wounds received therein.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension-roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Lucy Muck-a-pec-wah-ken-zah, widow of Muck-a-pec-wah-ken-zah, or "John," an Indian who aided in saving the lives of many white people and rendered valuable services in behalf of the white settlers during the Sioux outbreak and Indian war in the State of Minnesota, in the year 1862, and who then served the United States as a scout, and who was at the first session of the Fiftieth Congress granted a pension for injuries received and disability incurred while so defending the white settlers, but who has since died from the effects of those injuries, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was as follows:

The present Congress at its first session granted a pension to Muck-a-pec-wah-ken-zah, the late husband of the claimant. The act became a law August 28, 1888, but the certificate of pension did not reach the beneficiary during his life, he having died on September 20, 1888. He left a widow, who is the present applicant, but no children. Lucy was married to Muck-a-pec-wah-ken-zah in 1860, under the name of "Tatigio," according to the Indian custom, and again married to him on March 14, 1875, according to the laws of Wisconsin. She is now over fifty-five years of age and in needy circumstances, having no one upon whom she can depend for a living.

Drs. J. C. Fitch and William Thorne, who treated the husband during his life and attended him in his last illness, certify that his death was due to tetanus, which was probably induced by a small wound upon the ball of the foot while the patient was in a very debilitated condition from chronic bronchitis and rheumatism, the result of exposures and injuries received during his service.

The services of the husband are shown in the report of this committee, which accompanies the bill for his relief, as follows:

"[House Report No. 2856, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6764) granting a pension to 'Muck-a-pec-wak-keu-zah,' or 'John,' an Indian who aided in saving the lives of many white people in the Indian outbreak in Minnesota in 1862, have considered the same, and report:

"That it conclusively appears that this Indian performed important and valuable services in behalf of the whites during the Indian outbreak, and subsequently was on the frontiers of Minnesota and Dakota, in the years 1862-'63, as a scout and under the command of General H. H. Sibley, then in command of that district, and that while defending the whites he received injuries at the hands of hostile Indians and from exposure while such scout which have permanently disabled him and injured his health.

"The following is a memorial from General Sibley to this Congress in behalf of this Indian, and shows him to be worthy of a pension from this Government:

"'To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"'The memorial of the undersigned, late brigadier-general and brevet major-general United States Volunteers, in command of the military district of Minnesota, respectfully represents: That Muck-a-pec-wak-keu-zah, commonly known as "Indian John," was employed by me, during the outbreak and subsequent war with Dakota or Sioux Indians on the frontiers of Minnesota and Dakota in 1862-'63, as a scout, and in that capacity rendered essential service, and was instrumental in saving the lives of white women and children; that while in the service he received injuries from exposure and violence at the hands of hostile Indians which have permanently affected his health and prevented him from properly supporting his family; that he and they are utterly impoverished, and have to depend for subsistence on the charity of the whites; wherefore your memorialist respectfully recommends and urges that your honorable body pass an act for the relief of the said Muck-a-pec-wak-keu-zah, in view of his helpless condition and former meritorious services to the Government, granting him such provision per month during his natural life as will enable him and his family to live in comparative comfort.

"'And your memorialist will ever pray, etc.

"'HENRY H. SIBLEY,

"'Late Brigadier and Brevet Major General, United States Volunteers.

"'ST. PAUL, MINN., March 21, 1888.'

"The additional evidence submitted to the committee shows that this Indian is a full-blooded Sioux and now of the age of seventy-five years; that he was living at Redwood, on the Sioux Indian reservation, at the time of the outbreak; that he did all in his power to induce the Indians not to rise up against the whites, but failed; that in aiding a mother and four children (the husband and father having been killed) to escape he was followed by other Indians and while protecting said mother and children was struck in the breast with a musket and knocked down, and his ribs were broken; that after many difficulties he succeeded in getting the mother and children to his tent, where he kept them for about four weeks; that he rescued others in the same manner and guarded them until General Sibley came and rescued the white prisoners which the other Indians had, when he and those whom he had defended returned with General Sibley to Fort Snelling.

"Drs. Adams and Haws testify that his disability totally incapacitates him for manual labor of any kind. Other witnesses testify sustaining our conclusions.

"Your committee regard this as a truly meritorious case, and inasmuch as this Indian is uneducated, and will find it difficult to understand all the proceedings necessary to enable him to secure a pension in the regular way, we deem it but just that he should be granted a pension without being required to undergo further medical examination to establish his disability.

"We therefore recommend that the bill be amended so as to specify the amount of pension which he is to receive, and that that amount be fixed at the sum of $15 per month, and that as so amended the bill do pass."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, amended by changing the word "Muck-a-pec-wah-ken-zah" to "Muck-a-pec-wak-keu-zah" wherever it appears in the bill.

Mr. LONG (when the report had been partly read). I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of this report be dispensed with. The facts are fully stated in the bill, which has been read. It seems that the husband of this woman was pensioned.

Mr. MACDONALD. I will add that the report has all been read heretofore in the hearing of the committee.

There being no objection, the further reading of the report was dispensed with.

The amendments recommended in the report of the committee were read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY MURPHY.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 3198) granting a pension to Mary Murphy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Murphy, widow of Jeremiah Murphy, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-fifth New York Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) is as follows:

The facts in the case are fully set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which your committee beg leave to adopt as their own, and likewise recommend the passage of the bill.

The report is as follows:

"The claimant, Mary Murphy, is the widow of Jeremiah Murphy, who was a private in Company D, One hundred and fifty-fifth New York Infantry. He enlisted on the 22d of September, 1862, for three years, and was discharged for disability December 24, 1863. The surgeon's certificate of discharge says:

"'Incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of chronic orchitis and cachexia, developed before entering the service, in consequence of which he is totally disabled for military service, but not for civil occupation.'

"In his letter of transmission the Commissioner says the claim was rejected in May, 1886, 'because the claimant was unable to prove that the soldier's death was chargeable to his service.'

"In the opinion of the committee this conclusion is not justified by the testimony, record or lay. It is apparent that the certificate of discharge is not valuable as testimony, that it contains an extraordinary statement, and that there is ground for the belief that it is inaccurate.

"The record recites that he was enrolled September 22, 1862, and is reported on the rolls present to August 31, 1863. Here we have eleven months and eight days continuous service. The record does not account for the months of September and October, 1863, but it is probable that he was 'present' to October 31, when he is reported absent, sick in hospital, and from this date until he was discharged he is reported sick.

"Dr. Alonzo Garcelon, surgeon-general of Maine, testifies that he knew Jeremiah Murphy some twenty years prior to his enlistment; that he frequently employed him as a day laborer, and had good opportunity to know that he was a man of vigorous health, and able to perform manual labor of the severest character; that a short time after his enlistment and before his regiment left New York, he saw him on duty and in the enjoyment of good health; that as his family physician for many years he never knew or heard of any infirmity or sickness of any kind that would disqualify him for the performance of military duty, and believes he was a sound, able-bodied man at the time of his enlistment.

"Robert V. Fitzgerald was first sergeant of the company in which Murphy served. He was well acquainted with Murphy, and said he discharged his duties faithfully for about eleven months, or up to the time he became sick, when he was sent to the hospital. He was unable to say for what sickness he was treated, but many of the company were suffering from malaria, chills and fever, and kindred diseases, caused by heavy rain-storms, forced marches, and bad water. During the time they remained at Centreville there was a large increase in the sick-list, and quinine and whisky were served out to the men almost daily by order of the regimental surgeon. Both medical officers who were with the regiment at that time are dead, and the captain and lieutenant were subsequently killed in action.

"James Butterworth, also a sergeant in Murphy's company, swears he was well acquainted with him; that for the first nine or ten months he seemed well and strong, did his duty well as a soldier; that in August or September he fell sick at Centreville, Va., was sent to hospital, and was discharged for disability in December, 1863.

"R. B. Hayes testifies that he knew him five years previous to his enlistment; that he was well and strong, never knew him to be sick. He came home sick from the Army about January, 1864; saw him daily until he died, June 5, 1864; is unable to say of what disease he died, but the fact that he knew him to be a strong and healthy man previous and up to the time of his enlistment, and having seen him return from the Army about fifteen months later a very sick man, led him to think that his sickness not only originated in the service, but that he died in consequence.

"There are ten or twelve other witnesses who swear to having known him years before he enlisted; some of them worked with him and some of them employed him, and all knew him to be a healthy man and a good worker up to that time; that he came home sick after his discharge, and died in a short time. They are all convinced that his fatal illness was contracted in the service.

"David F. Noyes testifies as follows:

"'During the month of August, 1862, Jeremiah Murphy, of Lewiston, Me., dug and stoned a cellar for me. He was able to do a good day's work, and I think enjoyed good health. I saw him soon after he returned from the Army. He was broken down by sickness, and told me that his sickness was caused by strains and hardships while he was in the Army. I know the widow of Jeremiah Murphy. She is a neighbor of mine, and is in needy circumstances.'

"One month before he enlisted he dug a cellar and 'stoned' or walled it. It is not strange that he passed his examination and was accepted. He served as a soldier eleven months without interval; is commended for his faithfulness and endurance. He is taken ill, treated in hospital, discharged, and there is no interval of convalescence between the time of his discharge and death.

"Referring again to the extraordinary statement of the discharging surgeon, R. B. Bontecou, that the soldier was disqualified for military duty, but not for civil occupation, by orchitis and cachexia, it is obvious to the committee that it should have no weight against the claim. Orchitis and cachexia indicate a vitiated condition of the humors or fluids, a depraved condition of the body, resulting in scorbutic or cancerous diseases, and experts have included under this head consumption and dropsies. If they were disabling for military duty, they should have been disqualifying for cellar-digging and hod-carrying, which was the civil occupation of Jeremiah Murphy before the incurrence in the Army of the disease of which he died.

"The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass."

Mr. DINGLEY (when the report had been partly read). I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of this report be dispensed with. The facts fully appear from what has already been read, and there is a great mass of evidence which is merely cumulative.

There being no objection, the further reading of the report was dispensed with.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN CORR.

Mr. DOCKERY. I call up the bill (S. 3091) granting a pension to John Corr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Corr, late a member of Company K, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry.

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The facts in the case are fully set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which report is hereby adopted together with the recommendation therein contained.

Said report is as follows:

"This claimant enlisted May 1, 1860, and was discharged July 25, 1867. He claims pension on the ground of injury to his knee, caused by being run over by an ambulance at Alverde, Mexico, February 22, 1862, and of chronic dysentery, incurred through exposure and hardship about November, 1863. The claim was rejected for the reason that there is no record evidence of the incurrence of the alleged disabilities.

"Claimant states that he is unable to find any of his comrades or company officers who knew about his being injured, but the records of the company report him 'sick' February 28, 1862, which was only six days after he alleges the disability to his knee was incurred, and the records of the company for the period mentioned (November, 1863) as that when the chronic dysentery was incurred have all been lost, as the Adjutant-General states.

"Michael Martin, of Taunton, Mass., testifies that he has known claimant for twenty-five years; that he has been disabled to the extent of three-fourths by chronic dysentery and disabled knee; that prior to the late war claimant was a sound and healthy man.

"This testimony is corroborated by that of half a score of other witnesses who were neighbors of his, who worked with him, or who had other means of being acquainted with his disabilities, which they all agree were serious so that he was unable to do much work. The testimony of several physicians who treated him for his disabilities is also on file.

"While there is no evidence of any one who witnessed the incurrence of claimant's alleged injuries for the reason stated above, yet that claimant was sound at enlistment is clearly established, and the continuance of his disabilities since discharge is as fully shown. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NANCY POLOCK.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 3762) granting a pension to Nancy Polock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy Polock, widow of W. A. Polock, late of Company C, First Nebraska Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

A similar bill passed both Houses during the closing days of the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, but failed to reach the President in time for his action. Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANTONIA WIENER.

Mr. DUBOIS. I call up the bill (H. R. 8995) for the relief of Antonia Wiener.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to cause to be placed on the pension-rolls the name of Antonia Wiener, of the District of Columbia, subject to the rules, regulations, and general pension laws now in force, except that she shall not be required to furnish further proof as to the origin of her husband's fatal disease.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred a bill for the relief of Antonia Wiener, find that she was the widow of Jacob Wiener, private Company A, Forty-first New York Infantry, who died in the month of July, 1887, of chronic rheumatism. There is no doubt as to the cause of death. He was a pensioner at the rate of $40 per month at the time of his death, under a special act passed during the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress. The report made in his case by the Committee on Invalid Pensions shows that the relief granted him was based on rheumatism resulting in a total disability. The reason this relief was granted was that he could not obtain evidence satisfactory to the Pension Office of the incurrence of the disability.

Since his death his widow has applied for a pension, and been refused on the same ground. She now seeks for relief at the hands of Congress, basing her claim on the decision of the House in her husband's case and the fact that he finally died of the disease for which he was pensioned. In this she is undoubtedly right, and we recommend that the bill pass with the following amendments, viz: Insert after the word "Wiener," in fifth line, the words "widow of Jacob Wiener, private Company A, Forty-first New York Infantry," and strike out everything after the word "force," in the seventh line.

The amendments recommended in the report of the committee were read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH A. HARRISON.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8580) granting a pension to Sarah A. Harrison.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Harrison, widow of John Harrison, deceased, late second lieutenant of Company G, Seventy-ninth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

Sarah A. Harrison is the widow of John Harrison, late second lieutenant Company G, Seventy-ninth Ohio Volunteers, who was a pensioner for total disability from chronic nephritis contracted in the service.

The widow's claim has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the soldier's death from injuries from a fall was not chargeable to his military service.

It appears from the evidence on file that the soldier's whole system became seriously affected from nephritis. On several occasions, while suffering from violent attacks of this disease, he would fall unconscious and remain so for several hours, and it is alleged that on the night of August 7, 1884, while seeking relief, he went to a door on the second floor of his house, and there was taken by a spell of vertigo, which caused him to fall to the ground, injuring him so severely that he died a few hours later.

A number of credible witnesses testify to the frequency of these attacks and their increasing severity, leaving the soldier unconscious for hours.

Dr. E. W. Brown testifies that he attended Mr. Harrison professionally during the last year of his life; that he treated him for chronic nephritis and uræmic poisoning, the result of said disease; that he found him suffering and prostrated from the debilitating influences of his disease to such an extent that he could not control his locomotion owing to his head being affected by said disease, and that from said causes he frequently fell to the ground; that affiant has no doubt that the fall which caused Harrison's death resulted directly from vertigo, induced by the disease.

Upon appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, in view of certain decisions in similar cases, it was held that it is necessary to clearly prove that the resulting death was caused directly by previously-incurred disability and was not produced by negligence, carelessness, or risk on the part of the deceased, nor by a neglect of such care and caution as ordinary prudence required of the deceased pensioner.

There is nothing whatever in the evidence, nor in the circumstances surrounding the soldier's death, which, in the opinion of your committee, would warrant a conclusion other than favorably to the theory that the fall and injuries resulting in death were due to an attack of vertigo, directly due to the disease for which the deceased was pensioned.

The bill is therefore returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THERESIA FICHTER.

Mr. FELTON. I call up the bill (S. 3269) granting a pension to Theresia Fichter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Theresia Fichter, widow of Paul Fichter, late of Company E, of the Fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

For the reasons stated in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which is made a part hereof, we report favorably and recommend the passage of the bill. The Senate report is as follows:

[Senate Report 1916, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3269) granting a pension to Theresia Fichter, widow of Paul Fichter, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report as follows:

The committee report that it appears said Paul Fichter was a private of Company E, Fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, from 1861 to 1864, and was honorably discharged; that while in said service and line of his duty he was badly wounded and injured by being struck by a shell, and also had his health and constitution destroyed, from the effects of which he became paralyzed, and died May 29, 1870; that his widow, the said Theresia Fichter, claimed a pension, and her claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground, as alleged, that the cause of said soldier's death was not due to his military service; that it appears the physician who attended him at the time of his death, a Dr. Smith (since deceased), not only made a mistake in returning the cause of his death as apoplexy, but also in his occupation, and even in his name.

The following is a synopsis of the evidence filed in the case, showing that said soldier's death resulted from his military service:

William Rosinsky testified that he was orderly sergeant of said soldier's company, and that about June or 1st of July, 1864, on the Weldon Railroad, Virginia, said soldier was badly wounded and injured by a shell which struck him in the right side, which carried away a portion of his clothes and made him, from his thigh to his waist, as black as a black felt hat, and by reason of which wound or injury he was disabled for further duty. Saw him a year or so after his discharge, and he was complaining of his wound.

William Friebold testified that he was a private in his company, and corroborates the former witness as to said Fichter being out on the Weldon Railroad, Virginia, on a raid; and this witness saw him when he came into camp wounded in right leg, from his groin down, which was black and blue, and he had to be helped, and his clothes were shot away on that side, and he was totally disabled for any duty afterwards while in the service.

Isabella Sands testified that she saw him at about the time of his discharge from the Army in 1864, and he was then sick all over and complained of being sick and feeling bad, and of pains in his side from wound in his side and hip. She lived near neighbor and saw him from the time of his discharge to his death, and he complained of pains in his head, and in his shoulders, and in his hip; thinks he had rheumatism from his wound. Was not able to do but little work after he came from the Army, only a day or two once in awhile; that soon after his discharge he was attended by a doctor, who said his condition was caused by exposure in the Army and from his injury; that she is certain his death was caused by his army service, as he was never any good after he came from the Army; he was bed-fast for several weeks before he died, and was paralyzed on one side, and for two days before he died he could not speak, though conscious.

Robert Harrid testified that he saw the soldier about the time he came from the Army at the time of his discharge in 1864, and he looked all broke up, and he got it in the Army, and his disability appeared to be greatly from a wound or injury of his side, but he was sick and all broken in health; and a Dr. Smith attended him soon after he came home, and continued to attend him more or less till he died; and he was not able to work but very little after he came home from the Army; only able to work a day once in awhile, and was always complaining of his injured side, thigh, and hip, which made him lame; and was paralyzed on that side, as was stated by the doctor who attended him, who has since died.

Rachel Fichter testified that she saw him at discharge and return home in 1864, and he was then sick and was lame from a wound of right side or leg, and he showed her his blouse and pants, torn and blackened by the shell that struck him, and a piece of the leather of the saddle that was shot away when he was wounded; and he seemed to have a cold also when he came home, and he was greatly broken down and could not work and support his family on account of his wound and bad health he got in the Army. He was hearty and strong when he enlisted in 1861; he was always complaining and never had any good health after his discharge. She saw him every day for two weeks before he died, and from a Thursday to the following Saturday, when he died, he was helpless and had a difficulty with his throat and chest.

Anna Gow, his daughter, testified that she lived at home when her father came home from the Army at his discharge in 1864, and afterwards to near the time he died; and when he was discharged he was crippled up from a wound in his right side near the groin, which made him lame; and he complained of his throat very much afterwards, and was weak in the chest and unable to work but very little; and his wound broke out a couple of weeks or so after his discharge, and broke out in sores every little while till he died. He got weaker, and for two weeks before he died he was sick in bed, and for four days before death he was helpless.

Emma Grouse testified that she saw him at the time of his discharge, and he was suffering from wound in side and groin, and was kind of drawn up and stiff, and was sick and broken down, and he was well and hearty when he went away in 1861. Saw him two or three times a week after his discharge, and he was not able to work; don't think he worked six days during the six years he lived after his discharge, on account of his wound and bad health; that for two weeks before his death she helped to nurse him; that about two weeks after his said discharge he was attended by a Dr. Smith (since deceased) for a trouble in his throat and for his wound, and again for a week before his death, and he could not move his right side and could not talk, and his death was caused by his army service, she is certain.

The committee believe, in view of the evidence recited, that the said soldier died from the effects of a lingering disability, the result of wound or injury incurred in the military service and line of duty, resulting, finally, in paralysis, of which he died.

We therefore report the bill favorably and recommend its passage

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NATHANIEL CRAIN.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10167) increasing the pension of Nathaniel Crain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Nathaniel Crain, of Capt. Robert McAfey's company, of Col. Richard M. Johnson's regiment, in the war of 1813, a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of $8 per month as now allowed by law.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The claimant is ninety-six years of age, and an increase of his pension is prayed for by about two hundred citizens of his locality. He is now in receipt of a pension at the rate of $8 per month as a survivor of the war of 1812. He served in Capt. Robert McAfey's company, Kentucky Militia, in that war, from May 20, 1813, to November 19, 1813.

The committee are of the opinion he should be granted the relief he asks, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY B. M'VEAN.

Mr. FULLER. I call up the bill (S. 3421) granting a pension to Mary B. McVean.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary B. McVean, widow of Donald C. McVean, late major First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The facts in the case are fully set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which your committee adopt as their own and likewise recommend the passage of the bill, amended, however, by striking out the word "major," in line 5, and inserting therein instead the word "captain."

The report is as follows:

"The claimant is the widow of Donald C. McVean, captain Company E, First Wisconsin Volunteers. He lost a leg in the war of the rebellion, and died of remittent fever in 1887.

"From the evidence it appears that he was subject to severe attacks of pain in his amputated limb, and the medical and lay testimony connects his excessive and continuous pain with his death.

"Surgeon Ely McClellan, United States Army, testifies that—

"'Major McVean, post-trader, Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, died at Jefferson Barracks the 16th of May, 1887, after fifty-two days' illness. The fatal termination of this case was undoubtedly due to the inability of the patient to resist disease from the intense nervous shock to which he had been subject in his early life. At the battle of Stone River he received a severe gunshot wound of the right leg—a compound, comminuted fracture—which left the leg always weak and painful. At the battle of Chickamauga, September 19, 1863, he received a gunshot wound of the left leg, which caused an amputation to be made in the upper third of the thigh. A very painful cicatrix resulted, and he very constantly suffered from neuralgia of the stump, which sometimes approached tetanic spasms. Major McVean was constantly under my observation for nearly two and a half years. He was exemplary in his habits and patient in his great suffering, and his fatal illness could in no way be attributed to his personal habits. It is my belief that had he not been the subject of profound nerve shocks he would have recovered from the disease which caused his death.'

"Other surgeons, equally familiar with his case and condition, testify in similar and strong terms that the torture he had endured deprived him of the strength to withstand disease. The claim is rejected on the opinion of the medical referee of the Pension Office, who is unable to trace the requisite 'pathological connection.'

"Army Surgeon McClellan, who is eminent and reliable in his profession, had this soldier constantly under his observation for two and one-half years, and his opinion is entitled to weight. In a subsequent statement he strengthens his former testimony, as follows:

"'It is my belief that the reason Major McVean did not recover from the attack of remittent fever was that he never fully recovered from the shock of the original wounds, and constantly suffered so severely from the pain in the stump of his amputated leg that he had little or no recuperative power. His pulse when he was completely well was always over 100, and during his sickness could not any time be brought below 120 in the minute, and this without a corresponding increase of temperature.'

"He carried continually a fever pulse.

"The committee do not feel that it is incumbent upon then to ignore the opinion of the surgeons who were familiar with the patient, and all phases of his condition, and who, without disparagement, may be regarded as equally competent with the medical referee to decide as to a 'pathological connection,' and with much better advantages in arriving at an accurate conclusion in this case.

"The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass."

The amendment recommended in the report of the committee was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MINNIE A. BAILEY.

Mr. FRENCH called up for consideration the bill (S. 2344) granting a pension to Minnie A. Bailey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Minnie A. Bailey, daughter of Oscar M. Bailey, who was a private in Company F, Fifteenth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2344) granting a pension to Minnie A. Bailey, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The facts in the case are briefly set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which is as follows:

"The applicant is a daughter of Oscar M. Bailey, who was a private in Company F, Fifteenth Connecticut Volunteers, and who died May 8, 1863.

"A pension was granted to the widow of the deceased soldier, and at her marriage the pension was paid to the applicant until she was sixteen years of age. She is now thirty years old, and has been lame from two years since birth from a disease of the hip-joint. She is unable to earn a living, but is dependent upon others for her support. She asks Congress to pass an act allowing her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

"Since the recommittal of this bill additional evidence has been filed which materially strengthens this claim, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

The additional evidence above referred to is the testimony of Dr. Charles H. S. Davis, and of J. A. Harvey and W. G. Gallager, respectable citizens of Meriden, Conn.

The former testifies that claimant has been afflicted with disease of hip-joint from two years after her birth, which has caused deformity of her person and compels her to use crutches.

The two latter testify likewise to her disabled condition and her dependence upon others for support.

Congress having liberally responded in bills of similar character, your committee report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CYRUS TUTTLE.

Mr. FUNSTON called up for consideration the bill (S. 2008) granting a pension to Cyrus Tuttle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cyrus Tuttle, late private Company D, Fifteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2008) granting a pension to Cyrus Tuttle, submit the following report:

Cyrus Tuttle first enlisted in Company G, Third Kansas Infantry; discharged August 7, 1862; re-enlisted in Company D, Fifteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, on the 15th day of August, 1863, and was discharged October 15, 1865.

He made application for pension August 19, 1884, alleging in his declaration that he contracted chronic diarrhea at Fort Larned, Kansas, August, 1865. The claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions, November 19, 1884, on the ground of "no pensionable degree of disability from cause alleged since date of filing claim." The claimant swears that he is unable to furnish the testimony of physician who first treated him when discharged from service in 1865, for the reason that the physician is dead.

A. P. Brown, neighbor, swears—

"That he saw claimant when he came home in 1865, and he was in bad health and said he had chronic diarrhea, and saw him often until 1876, when he left. * * * Came back in 1880; he was still very much debilitated; was not able to do manual labor when he left in 1876, nor since his return in 1880."

This affidavit was filed October 20, 1884.

Jonathan Ruble, neighbor, swears that he saw claimant on his way home from the Army; he was sick, and said his disease was chronic diarrhea; have seen him often since his return; he was unable to work. This affidavit was made in 1884.

Dr. J. V. Mott was "called to treat him in 1884, and found him suffering from a very severe attack of diarrhea, and that he has not been able to work much since."

The claimant is now over seventy-one years of age; is in very destitute circumstances, being practically supported by a daughter who takes in washing and does needle-work. His only income is $5 per month, which he receives as janitor of the public-school building at Fontana, Miami County, Kansas.

Accompanying the bill is a numerously signed petition from citizens of Linn and Miami Counties, Kansas, praying that he be pensioned, and setting forth the good habits and character of the soldier and claimant.

In view of the facts, your committee are inclined to the opinion that he should be pensioned, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELLEN B. FARR.

Mr. LAIDLAW called up for consideration the bill (S. 3588) granting a pension to Ellen B. Farr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Ellen B. Farr, widow of Evarts W. Farr, late major of the Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteers, at the rate of $25 per month.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3588) granting a pension to Ellen B. Farr, having considered the same, report as follows:

The report of the Senate committee, which we adopt as part of our own, is as follows:

"The claimant, Ellen B. Farr, is the widow of Evarts W. Farr, late major of the Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteers. Major Farr served as first lieutenant from June 5, 1861, to January 1, 1862, as captain from latter date to September 22, 1862, and as major from latter date to muster-out, June 4, 1865. He died June 21, 1881.

"He was pensioned as captain at $20 per month for the loss of right arm while he held that rank in May, 1862, and was afterward increased to $24, special rate for such disability. His widow was pensioned at $17 per month January 22, 1881, the rate of total pension for the rank of first lieutenant. No higher rate could be allowed her under the law, because the disability (malaria) which produced his fatal disease was contracted while he held the rank of first lieutenant in 1861.

"The widow now asks for an increase to $25 per month, the amount allowed under the general law for the rank of major.

"The Commissioner of Pensions, in his annual report for the year 1887, makes the following recommendation for this class of claims:

"'I beg leave to call attention to the fact that during the last year the Secretary of the Interior presented to Congress a request for a modification of the law which declares that a pension shall be graded according to the rank of the claimant at the time that the injury was received, without regard to the fact that such claimant might subsequently have been promoted for meritorious services and in good faith. The suggestion of the Commissioner is that the rank, subsequently acquired bona fide, should be considered by the Commissioner in determining the amount to be allowed.'

"Congress has in several instances recognized this equitable and just recommendation by special acts.

"This widow is in indigent circumstances; has a daughter to support, and is in feeble health, being seriously disabled in her right arm, which is indispensable in the performance of the labor upon which she depends for support."

It is proper that we should add that Major Farr was a member of this House during the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, his death occurring before the close of the latter Congress. He was a brave soldier and an able legislator, and as his widow was left in comparatively necessitous circumstances and is now in feeble health, as well as because of the further facts set forth in the Senate report, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES M. FROST.

Mr. GEAR called up for consideration the bill (S. 2759) granting a pension to James M. Frost.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James M. Frost, late a member of Company A, First Regiment Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2759) granting a pension to James M. Frost, respectfully report:

That they adopt the Senate report upon said bill and recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment.

"[Senate Report No. 1319, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"This is a bill to pension James M. Frost, late a member of Company A, First Regiment of Tennessee Cavalry. The claimant filed his application in 1880, alleging rheumatism, and was rejected on the ground that the soldier was not in line of duty at the time his disability was contracted. The claimant was absent from his command by permission from his colonel, to visit his sick brother, and on his return was captured by the enemy and sent to Andersonville prison, where he says he contracted sciatic rheumatism.

"The committee are of the opinion that he was in the line of duty when he was captured. He was not violating any order. He was allowed to visit his brother, who was near his camp. That brother was ill, and died before he reached him. It would have been inhuman to have denied him the privilege, and in availing himself of it he violated no obligation to his conscience or his country. The only question is as to the incurrence and existence of the disability. He was held a prisoner thirteen months, and experienced, he says, the most brutal treatment, so that at the time of his discharge he was a physical wreck.

"A number of his comrades and acquaintances testify to his prior soundness and subsequent disability, but strange to say the postmaster, of whom inquiry is made by the Pension Office, discredits a majority of the witnesses. He admits that Dr. Miller, of Libertyville, Iowa, and Drs. Worthington and Ward, of Fairfield, are entitled to credit. They all testify that they have treated him continuously; that they do not doubt his disability was contracted in the service; that disease was brought on by exposure and hardship in prison; that it does not yield to treatment; that it is incurable. The only ground of rejection by the Pension Office is that the soldier was not in line of duty when captured.

"There have been two medical examinations. One of the boards finds him disabled and the other fails to discover any disability. These reports are so conflicting in most instances as to be valueless.

"The committee think the case is sufficiently proved without them and report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass."

Amend by inserting, after the word "pension-roll," the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM HAWKINS.

Mr. GEST called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11884) to grant a pension to William Hawkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of William Hawkins, who was a private in Capt. Alexander M. Houston's company of Mounted Volunteers in the Black Hawk war, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11884) to grant a pension to William Hawkins, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant was a private in Capt. Alexander M. Houston's company of Illinois Mounted Volunteers in the Black Hawk war, and was honorably discharged therefrom August 15, 1832.

He is now, as shown by the testimony filed, in his eighty-second year, in feeble health, and unable to work a small farm of a few acres to make subsistence for himself and his aged wife. The small rent which he gets for the land is not sufficient to maintain him. He can live but a few years at most.

Your committee believe that he should have a service pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill with a rating of $20 per month. Amend the bill by inserting the word "Illinois" before the word "Mounted" in line 6, and by changing the word "thirty" to "twenty" in line 7.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROZALIA JUNK.

Mr. HAUGEN called up for consideration the bill (S. 2310) granting a pension to Rozalia Junk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rozalia Junk, widow of John Junk, alias John Younge, late a private of Company K, Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2310) granting a pension to Rozalia Junk, submit the following report:

That they have carefully examined this case; that the facts, as stated in the Senate report hereto attached and made a part hereof, show a very strong case, justifying the action of Congress in giving the relief asked for. They therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 992, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2310) granting a pension to Rozalia Junk, have examined the same, and report:

From the report of the Adjutant-General it appears that John Junk, or Young, as the name was pronounced, the husband of the claimant, was drafted September 22, 1864. He was examined and held to service, sent to draft rendezvous, forwarded to Sixth Wisconsin Regiment, and delivered at City Point. He was mustered out with his detachment June 6, 1865, making eight months' service from the date of drafting to muster out. He died May 7, 1879, and his widow filed application for pension, claiming that his death was caused by an aggravated case of hernia incurred in the service. The claim was rejected on the ground that the claimant admitted her inability to furnish the proof required by the Pension Office, that his disability originated in the service.

Wyta Stramsky, for thirty years a resident of Kewaunee, Wis., testifies that he was acquainted with the soldier five years before he went into the Army. He was often in his employ; knows that he was a strong, healthy man. He says:

"I was with him when he went into the Army, and accompanied him to Green Bay. I was at that time assistant United States marshal, and had John Junk in charge with many others; that when he was examined I stood close beside him. He was naked, and he was pronounced by the examining surgeon to be a sound man, and I know of my own knowledge if he had a rupture at that time I should have seen it. He was my personal friend, and I knew him intimately before the war and after his return. On his return I saw him as he came off the boat in July, 1865, which was the time, as I now remember, he came home. I made inquiry about his health, and he told me he was all right except a rupture he received, as I now remember it, in the engagement at Richmond in crossing a ditch into which he fell. I know that after his return he was not able to do hard work. He always complained of his injury. I knew him intimately up to the time of his death, and I have no doubt that his injury caused his death. It was a matter of general repute at the time of his death, which was sudden, that it was caused by his rupture."

Wenzel Shimmel testifies to his intimate acquaintance with the soldier; they lived in the same town of Carlton, in Kewaunee County, and he knows he was sound before his service; that when he returned he had a rupture and wore a truss. He also heard him relate how the injury was received.

Joseph Kozel testified that he was a neighbor, fellow-countryman, and comrade of Junk. They were drafted at the same time, examined by the same surgeon, and both pronounced sound. One was sent to the Sixth, the other to the Eleventh Wisconsin Regiment. Knows that he came home with rupture; believes that he died in consequence of it.

Frank Harmacheck testifies that he knew him well before service; that he was sound; that he came home with a rupture of which he believes, and all the neighbors believe, he died. He died very suddenly. He was at his house an hour after he died. He did not see his rupture before. He saw it then, and his inwards protruded to such an extent that he could not live. The protrusion was as large as his two fists. The doctor who was sent for to attend him says he had been dead more than an hour when he arrived; that he made no examination.

The claimant says her husband was the only person in his regiment or company of his nationality; that he could not speak English, and consequently made no acquaintances; did not learn the names or living places of any of the soldiers with whom he was only for a short time associated. For this reason, and knowing that she could not obtain a pension under the general laws, she has appealed to Congress.

There appears to be no doubt as to the soundness of the man prior to his service, nor as to the incurrence of the disability, which was an aggravated and dangerous case of hernia, and finally proved fatal.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL J. MURPHY.

Mr. HAYES called up for consideration the bill (S. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Murphy, of Marengo, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Samuel J. Murphy, late a private in Company D, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, a pension at the rate of $16 per month, in lieu of that which he now receives, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Murphy, of Marengo, Iowa, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case made application for pension on account of disease of the eyes and loss of hearing. A pension was granted for the former disability, but for the latter it was denied on the ground of prior unsoundness. The record shows that the soldier was discharged after fifteen months' service for these disabilities. No mention is made of the existence of either disability at time of enlistment.

Several witnesses testify that no disability existed prior to his entering the military service. Two witnesses state that his hearing was "slightly defective" when he entered the service, but that it was much worse when he was discharged. It seems to your committee to be clearly established that his hearing was seriously affected by the service, and that claimant is clearly entitled to the increase granted by this bill, and they therefore recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, to-day, during the consideration of the bill granting a pension to the widow of General Sheridan, after I was recognized to speak in opposition of that measure, I yielded the floor with the understanding that I should have permission to extend my remarks, after which objection was made which became general and I had no opportunity to express the views which I entertained. I do not desire to occupy the valuable time of the committee this evening and only ask to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

Mr. KERR. I should like to have the same permission.

There was no objection.

JACOB S. SHUMAN.

Mr. HEARD called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12446) granting an increase of pension to Jacob S. Shuman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jacob S. Shuman, late captain of Company H, Eleventh Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $72 per month instead of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12446) granting an increase of pension to Jacob S. Shuman, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Jacob S. Shuman served as captain of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Cavalry, from June 10, 1863, to July 14, 1866, and is now a pensioner at the rate of $50 per month for injury to back and resulting paralysis. Since January 30, 1884, he requires the regular aid and attendance of another person. Had he become thus totally disabled prior to June 16, 1880, he would be entitled to $72 per month under the provisions of the act of that date and of the act of June 17, 1878.

Your committee have already reported favorably a bill proposing to amend the present law touching this class of disabilities, but it is doubtful whether the same will be reached during this Congress.

The condition of this pensioner is so pitiful that your committee feel inclined to grant relief independent of the probable success of the bill above referred to, and therefore submit the report of the board of examining surgeons at Sedalia, Mo., under date of December 31, 1864:

"The motorial inco-ordination is very marked. The power of locomotion is entirely lost unless aided, and then he has to be virtually carried. There is no power to stand alone. The extremities are wasted and cold. He is not able to swallow a fluid without danger from strangulation. The head and limbs are in constant agitation. The mind is very much impaired. The asking of questions causes great excitement, and instead of answering intelligently he has a spell of crying and loses all control of himself. He requires the regular aid and attendance of some one at all times."

The description of the disability by said surgeons seems to warrant favorable action on the accompanying bill, and the same is therefore returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

IRA WELLS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois (by Mr. ROWELL), called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12607) to grant a pension to Ira Wells.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Ira Wells, who was a private in Captain Kinney's company of Illinois Mounted Volunteers in the Black Hawk war, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12607) granting a pension to Ira Wells, have considered the same, and report:

This is another of the claims of the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832–1842, for service pension, for whom a general bill has been favorably reported to the House. This claimant was a private in Captain Kinney's company of Illinois Mounted Volunteers in the Black Hawk war of 1832. He served honorably for six months and was honorably discharged.

He is now over seventy years of age, and, as shown by the testimony of prominent citizens of Geneseo, Ill., he has for four or five years been rapidly failing in health, and is now confined to his bed for the greater part of the time. He can not, in consequence, follow his profession, that of a physician, or perform any labor. He is poor, without income of any kind, and has no one to look to for support. The testimony also shows that he was a contract surgeon during the late war of the rebellion, and his neighbors attribute his present condition of health to diseases contracted during that time.

This is shown to be a very meritorious case, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM J. MARTIN.

Mr. HERMANN called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12608) to pension William J. Martin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William J. Martin, survivor of Capt. John Sconce's company of Ray County (Missouri) Volunteers, of Lieutenant-Colonel Morgan's Spy Battalion, Brigadier-General Zachary Taylor, general commanding, Florida war, and who was severely wounded at the battle of Lake Okeechobee, December 25, 1837, and who was also the lieutenant-colonel of the Second Regiment Oregon Mounted Volunteers in the Oregon Indian war of 1855 and 1856, and that he be paid a pension of $25 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The committee report as follows on the bill (H. R. 12608) granting a pension to William J. Martin:

That Col. William J. Martin is a survivor of the Florida Indian war. He was severely wounded while charging the Indians with his company under Capt. John Sconce, in Col. Alexander Morgan's Spy Battalion, Missouri Volunteers, on December 25, 1837, in a hotly contested battle at Lake Okeechobee, where the Indians were completely routed, and all their stock and equipage captured, and, as it is shown to us, the old wounds and exposure have left their painful marks, which now in his advanced years are constantly felt.

During the Oregon and Washington Territory Indian wars of 1855-'56 he served as lieutenant-colonel of the Second Regiment Oregon Mounted Volunteers, and rendered valuable services to the frontier and nation in various active engagements. He is now in old age, and in limited means, being dependent on his own scanty labors on his homestead claim. His services are frequently referred to in the history of his State.

In the opinion of your committee he presents a most meritorious case, and in view of the facts before us we recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CATHARINE BUCHANAN.

Mr. HOLMAN (by Mr. MATSON) called up the bill (H. R. 11043) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Catharine Buchanan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore the name of Catharine Buchanan, widow of William Buchanan, late a private in Company L, Fourth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, to the pension-roll, and that she be paid a pension, subject to the provisions of the general pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11043) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Catharine Buchanan, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

The claimant herein was the widow of William Buchanan, who served as a private in Company L, Fourth Indiana Cavalry, from August 7, 1861, until July 29, 1864, when he was killed in battle at Newman, Ga. The said claimant was granted a pension at $8 per month, commencing July 29, 1864. On the 1st day of May, 1867, she remarried with Richard Buchanan, at which time her pension was stopped. Her second husband, Richard Buchanan, died October 3, 1881, leaving his widow, the claimant herein, in indigent circumstances. She now makes application to be reinstated to the pension-roll as the widow of William Buchanan, her first husband, who was killed in battle as herein stated.

It is shown by the affidavits of several of her neighbors that the said Catharine Buchanan is poor and deserving; that she has no means of support other than what she earns by her labor as a sewing-woman. Following in the line of precedents heretofore made, and believing the applicant herein to be a worthy object for Congressional action, we submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY HORNING.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York, called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11627) granting a pension to Mary Horning.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls the name of Mary Horning, widow of John F. Horning, late a private in Company B, One hundred and seventeenth Regiment New York State Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 a month.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11627) granting a pension to Mary Horning, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Mary Horning is the widow of John T. Horning, who served as private in Company I, One hundred and seventeenth Regiment New York Volunteers, from August 4, 1862, to June 8, 1865, and died May 9, 1888.

The widow's claim has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the fatal disease of lungs is not shown to be chargeable to the soldier's military service. The soldier applied for pension on account of rheumatism, results of typhoid fever, and pleurisy. This claim was likewise rejected, because in the opinion of the medical referee the evidence failed to show that soldier was disabled from the effects of typhoid fever, disease of lungs, or pleurisy, found by medical examination not being accepted as a sequence of the same and rheumatism not being shown to have existed in the service.

The records of the War Department do show the soldier under treatment during the months of December, 1862, January, 1863, and February, 1864, but fail to disclose the nature of the disability for which treated.

The claims have been specially examined, and received the favorable recommendation of the special examiner.

It is shown by officers and others, and by Assistant Surgeon Carpenter, that soldier had typhoid fever, diarrhea, and fever and ague in the service. It is also shown that he had a cough before discharge.

His complaints from date of discharge up to 1868 were diarrhea, cough, and rheumatism, as shown by the testimony of associates and neighbors. Dr. Russell testifies to treatment at intervals, from 1868 to 1875, for rheumatism, diarrhea, intermittent fever, and cough. Dr. Gibson treated soldier from 1880 to 1886 for pleuritic trouble and disease of left lung. Dr. Tourtellet also treated him more or less for the same troubles from discharge to death, and states that the last stage of consumption was apparent a month before death.

Assistant Surgeon Carpenter, who, as heretofore stated, treated Horning in the service, also testifies that he saw soldier frequently after discharge; was troubled with a cough, looked emaciated, and upon examination about a year before death found the lungs badly diseased, which, in affiant's opinion and knowledge of the case, was chargeable to his military service.

The undertaker's record shows death from pneumonia.

While pneumonia may have hastened death, yet your committee are clearly of opinion from the evidence on file that the soldier's lungs were so seriously impaired by exposure in the service that he could not have survived much longer, even had he not been stricken down with this acute disease.

The bill is therefore returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN W. SMITH.

Mr. HOWARD called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12275) to increase the pension of John W. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of John W. Smith, formerly a private of Company F, First United States Dragoons, Mexican war; also lieutenant First Indiana Calvary and private Company D, One hundred and fifty-sixth Indiana Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion, and to pay him a pension of $25 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12275) granting an increase of pension to John W. Smith, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant was a private in Company F, First United States Dragoons, Mexican war, for nearly two years. He was discharged therefrom at the city of Mexico, May 8, 1848, for disability. He also served during the late rebellion in Company I, First Indiana Cavalry, and in Company D, One hundred and fifty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

In December, 1872, he filed his claim for pension because of chronic diarrhea and rheumatism, which he alleged was contracted at Pen Yal Peak, Mexico. His claim for chronic diarrhea and piles was allowed in June, 1887, at the rate of $4 per month from May 29, 1886. The claim for rheumatism has never been adjudicated, the claimant being unable to furnish sufficient evidence of its existence during his service in Mexico.

His pension was increased in October last to $12 per month.

He now asks increase of pension to $25 per month.

The fact is well established by the evidence before your committee that Mr. Smith has been disabled by rheumatism most of the time since his discharge from the service in 1848; that he is now severely affected by rheumatism and disease of heart in addition to the diseases for which he draws pension. The certificate of disability upon which he was discharged stated that his constitution was completely undermined in the Mexican war, and that he then had chronic bronchitis.

The rating given him by the Clay City examining board of surgeons in October, 1887, for his continued disabilities amounts to $24 per month.

He is without any means of support aside from his pension, as shown by the following statement:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., January 18, 1889.

"To all whom this may concern:

"I hereby state that I am personally acquainted with John W. Smith, a resident of the city of Terre Haute, State of Indiana; that he was a soldier in the late war, a man of integrity, and is now in reduced circumstances, not having any means of support excepting the small pension that he is now receiving. He is broken down in health and unable to do manual labor.

"Very respectfully,

"A. J. KELLY,
"Chief of Division, Patent Office.
"WM. E. McLEAN,
"First Deputy Commissioner of Pensions."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES S. HAMILTON.

Mr. HUDD called up for consideration the bill (S. 3387) granting a pension to Charles S. Hamilton.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles S. Hamilton, late a major-general in the Army of the United States, and pay him a pension at the rate of $100 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3387) granting a pension to Charles S. Hamilton, submit the following report:

"That they have carefully examined the papers on file in this case, and the report of the Senate committee on this case, and they are of the opinion that the report is fully corroborated by the undisputed facts in the case; and, while the beneficiary can not establish a case that can be allowed at the Pension Office under its rules, they believe the case to be a meritorious one. They adopt the report of the Senate, and make it a part hereof, and recommend that the bill do pass, with an amendment striking out the words "one hundred," in the seventh line thereof, and inserting in place thereof the word "fifty."

[Senate Report No. 2166, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3387) granting a pension to Charles S. Hamilton, have examined the same, and report:

This is a bill to pension Charles S. Hamilton, late a major-general in the Army of the United States, at the rate of $100 per month. The Pension Office rejected his application on the ground of no record of disabilities and claimant's inability to furnish testimony showing origin in service and line of duty. The military record of General Hamilton, as shown by the report of the Adjutant-General, covers many years, and it is both interesting and creditable.

He is a graduate of West Point. As first lieutenant he joined the Fifth United States Infantry in July, 1846, served with it in Mexico in the war with that country; was severely wounded at the battle of Molino del Rey September 8, 1847; was sick in the city of Mexico from wounds until some time in November, 1847; on duty with his regiment in Mexico to close of war.

Capt. William Chapman, Fifth Infantry, commanding regiment, says:

"Lieut. C. S. Hamilton, commanding Company I, was severely wounded early in the action while urging his company on, but raised himself up with assistance and continued cheering and encouraging his men until they were beyond the reach of his voice."

He accepted command as brigadier-general of volunteers August 31, 1861, and served as such until December 4, 1862, when he accepted appointment as major-general of volunteers. He commanded Second Brigade, General Banks's division, Army of the Potomac, from August, 1861, to March, 1862; the Third Division, Third Army Corps, to May, 1862; the left wing of Army of Mississippi to August, 1862; Third Division of Mississippi to October, 1862; the District of Corinth, Department of Tennessee, to January 10, 1863; the Sixteenth Army Corps to January 15, 1863, and the District of Columbia, Jackson, Corinth, and Memphis, in Department of Tennessee, and also the left wing of the Sixteenth Army Corps to April, 1863, when he tendered his resignation.

In his statement as to the circumstances under which he incurred his disabilities, General Hamilton says when he was in command of First Brigade of General Banks's division he received orders to proceed to Alexandria and there take command of General Heintzelman's division, about to embark for the Peninsula. In endeavoring to reach his destination he rode 18 miles in a drenching rain, arriving at Harper's Ferry just in time to catch some cars going east. In his saturated clothing he rode all the way to Alexandria. Here he assumed command of the division and put it on transports for Fortress Monroe. On board the boat he had the first and only opportunity to exchange his wet for dry clothing. Arrived at Hampton Roads his voice was gone. Dr. Cuyler, medical director of General Wood's command, ordered him to relinquish his command, took him to his quarters inside the fort, and treated him. He resumed his command about three weeks after the landing, but suffered during the whole campaign from lumbago and stiff joints. He claims that his disabilities, the result of his service, are palpitation of the heart, blindness, and rheumatism.

"My present condition" he says "is that of an almost helpless invalid. I can not write except little more than to sign my name, can read but a few lines at a time, and I believe that all these troubles emanated from exposure and service during the war."

Dr. Wright, of Fond du Lac, Wis., was his family physician as early as 1853, and he knew him to be a healthy man when he entered the service. After his return from the war he complained of palpitation of the heart, which the doctor believes was brought on by his exposure, hard service, and intense excitement, and that his blindness is the immediate result of his cerebral congestion, which undoubtedly came from disease of the heart.

Dr. Fox, of Milwaukee, has treated General Hamilton for heart and brain disease, and he has no hesitancy in saying that the heart disease is of long standing, and he also believes that his brain trouble may have resulted from heart disease.

F. H. West, United States marshal, Milwaukee, has known General Hamilton eighteen years; that he had been in very poor health, caused, as is generally believed, by exposure and hardship in the service. He also certifies to his untarnished reputation.

Edward O. Wall, collector of internal revenue, Milwaukee, testifies to his broken health, and declares that General Hamilton would not, under any circumstances, ask for a pension if he was not conscious that his helpless condition was the result of his service in the Army.

George H. Paul, postmaster at Milwaukee, has known General Hamilton more than twenty-five years; pronounces him a man of incorruptible integrity; would place implicit confidence in any statement of his, under oath or otherwise; that his eminent public services entitle him, in his present physical condition, to the kindest and most generous consideration.

The examining surgeons of Milwaukee rate him for rheumatism, heart disease, blindness, and general debility.

General Hamilton is now about sixty-six years old. Besides a long period, during which he was engaged in frontier duty, he has served the country in two wars, and in both has rendered valuable and distinguished service, as his record proves.

He was a sound and well-qualified man when he joined the Army to resist the rebellion; he came out of it broken in health, and his disabilities have been progressive, until he has become blind, helpless, and a sufferer. If these are not referable to his army life the committee are at a loss to account for them. That he has earned $100 a month we are equally convinced, and with the precedents on record it would be unjust to concede him an inferior sum.

The bill is reported with an amendment, adding after the word "month," in the eighth line, "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving," with a recommendation that it do pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES H. LAWLESS.

Mr. HUNTER called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8327) for the relief of James H. Lawler.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of James H. Lawler, late private Company I, Fifth Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to all the restrictions, limitations, and provisions of the pension laws of the United States.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8327) granting a pension to James H. Lawler, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant was a private in Company I, Fifth Kentucky Cavalry, enrolled October 8, 1861, and honorably mustered out with his company and regiment May 3, 1865.

In his application before the Pension Bureau, filed in March, 1880, he alleged that in December, 1861, he contracted measles, which by the following spring (of 1862) had resulted in disease of lungs and rheumatism and piles. His claim was rejected in 1885 on the ground of no record of the alleged measles and disease of lungs, and no satisfactory evidence of their origin in service, and that rheumatism was not contracted in line of duty.

The records of the War Department show that the claimant was present with his command at the time he alleges he incurred his measles, disease of lungs, piles, and rheumatism, and it is shown by the testimony of his comrades that he was affected by said diseases in December, 1861, and the spring of 1862.

Capt. Asa C. Wells testifies that—

"Shortly after the company went into camp at or near Burksville, Ky., in the fall of 1861, the claimant contracted measles, and that subsequently during service his lungs were so affected that at times he could not speak above a whisper, and that he was also affected with rheumatism."

Six or eight soldiers of the same company testify to the same statement of facts, including Lieut. D. G. Shepherd, and it is clearly established to the satisfaction of your committee that both rheumatism and disease of lungs existed in the spring of 1862.

On May 29, 1862, the claimant left his company without authority and was not borne on the rolls thereof until in the fall of 1863. Testimony in the case shows that the causes of his absence were sickness and domestic afflictions. He was treated for rheumatism in the army hospitals at Knoxville and Nashville, Tenn., from March 26, 1864, to August 12, 1864, when he was returned to duty with his company, and remained with it in active service until the date of his honorable discharge, in May, 1865.

The testimony is ample to show that claimant has been disabled for the performance of manual labor each year since his discharge by reason of said diseases, and the examining board of surgeons at Burksville, Ky., find him disabled by rheumatism, as alleged.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, amended, however, by changing the spelling of the surname of the claimant, wherever it appears in the bill, from "Lawler" to "Lawless."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM FORD.

Mr. JACKSON called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2862) granting a pension to William Ford.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William Ford, late a private in Company H, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2862) granting a pension to William Ford, late a private in Company H, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

Pension in this case is claimed for rupture. The claimant applied to the Commissioner of Pensions for a pension on this account, and after filing of testimony and medical examination the claim was rejected on the ground that the proof as to its being incurred in the service was not considered sufficient.

We are unable to agree with the Pension Office in this conclusion, and conclude that the records of the War Department and the proof submitted abundantly sustain the following facts: That William Ford, prior to his entering the Army, was a sound, strong, hearty man. At the time of his enlistment, and for several years preceding it, he was a farm laborer, engaged at hard work, and the testimony of his employers and companions is very clear as to his soundness.

It is also undisputed that for a very considerable time after he entered the service he did duty as a soldier of the very severest kind and no evidence of disability was apparent. That even after being wounded in battle he returned to his command and did good service. That during the battle of Spottsylvania he was engaged in building breastworks of heavy logs, and in some way was injured so that immediately after his "belly" became sore so he could not wear a cartridge-belt and began to swell, showing eventually a small lump.

The claimant is an ignorant, uneducated man, and evidently did not know what this lump was at the time, nor at his discharge. He did not go to a hospital for treatment, the regimental surgeon saying that nothing could be done for him but excuse him from duty. The proof is clear and undoubted that claimant had this swelling of the belly, which the surgeons all pronounce rupture, very soon after he helped lift the logs at Spottsylvania, and it is evident that it there originated.

The medical examinations all show the actual disability of the soldier from this rupture, and there is abundant proof of its continued existence from his discharge from the service. It is proper to say that the proof of the facts as to incurrence of the injury in the service is wholly by enlisted men, and that the Pension Office seems to have rejected the claim finally because of want of testimony of a commissioned officer, although the examiner recommended that it be allowed. But a full explanation of this is that the only commissioned officer with the company was reported to have gone to Europe immediately after the war and has not since been heard of, as is testified to by different members of the company. Further, that the regimental surgeon says he can not remember the case at all.

The soldier is shown to be a worthy man, with a family, unable to earn a living on account of this injury, and is in destitute circumstances.

Your committee are satisfied that claimant sustained his injuries in the service, in line of duty, and is justly entitled to a pension, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration pension bills on the Private Calendar, under the special order of the House, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED WITHOUT AMENDMENT.

Bills of the following titles, reported favorably, were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 11663) granting a pension to M. Josie McClain;

A bill (H. R. 12604) to restore the pension of Ann G. Barker;

A bill (H. R. 3916) granting a pension to Jacob Wolf;

A bill (H. R. 8580) granting a pension to Sarah A. Harrison;
A bill (H. R. 10167) increasing the pension of Nathaniel Crain;
A bill (H. R. 12446) granting an increase of pension to Jacob S. Shuman;
A bill (H. R. 12607) granting a pension to Ira Wells;
A bill (H. R. 12608) to pension William J. Martin;
A bill (H. R. 11043) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Catharine Buchanan;
A bill (H. R. 11627) granting a pension to Mary Horning;
A bill (H. R. 12275) to increase the pension of John W. Smith; and
A bill (H. R. 2862) granting a pension to William Ford.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED WITH AMENDMENTS.

Amendments reported to bills of the following titles were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:
A bill (H. R. 12619) granting a pension to Littleberry W. Baker;
A bill (H. R. 12575) to increase the pension of James M. Barrett;
A bill (H. R. 12420) granting a pension to Lucy, widow of Muck-a-pec-wah-keu-zah, or "John," an Indian who served the United States and saved the lives of many white persons in the Indian outbreak or war of 1862 and died of effects of wounds received therein;
A bill (H. R. 8995) for the relief of Antonio Wiener; and
A bill (H. R. 11884) to grant a pension to William Hawkins.

HOUSE BILLS WITH AMENDMENTS TO BILL AND TITLE PASSED.

Amendments reported to bills of the following titles were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed, and the titles were amended to conform with the bills.
A bill (H. R. 5758) granting a pension to Lovina Wright;
A bill (H. R. 12404) granting a pension to Robert W. Andrews; and A bill (H. R. 8327) for the relief of Joseph H. Lawless.

SENATE BILLS PASSED WITHOUT AMENDMENT.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported favorably, were severally ordered to a third reading; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:
A bill (S. 2758) granting a pension to Susan P. Murdock;
A bill (S. 2334) granting a pension to Mary J. Byrd;
A bill (S. 3309) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth E. Groff;
A bill (S. 2690) granting a pension to John Gallager;
A bill (S. 3198) granting a pension to Mary Murphy;
A bill (S. 3091) granting a pension to John Corr;
A bill (S. 3762) granting a pension to Nancy Polock;
A bill (S. 3269) granting a pension to Theresia Fichter;
A bill (S. 2344) granting a pension to Minnie A. Bailey;
A bill (S. 2008) granting a pension to Cyrus Tuttle;
A bill (S. 3588) granting a pension to Ellen B. Farr;
A bill (S. 2310) granting a pension to Rosalia Junk; and
A bill (S. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Murphy, of Marengo, Iowa.

SENATE BILLS PASSED WITH AMENDMENTS.

Amendments reported to Senate bills of the following titles were severally agreed to; and the bills as amended were ordered to a third reading, and accordingly read the third time, and passed:
A bill (S. 1319) granting a pension to Anna Slater;
A bill (S. 3421) granting a pension to Mary B. McVean;
A bill (S. 2759) granting a pension to James M. Frost; and
A bill (S. 3387) granting a pension to Charles S. Hamilton.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the several votes by which the bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANN E. MUSSMAN.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from consideration of the bill (H. R. 2157) granting a pension to Ann E. Mussman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I shall object unless we can have one recognition on this side.

Mr. BYNUM. I am not making any objection to that.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Then I withdraw the objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann E. Mussman, widow of William Mussman, deceased, late a member of the Sixth Indiana Light Artillery.

Mr. BYNUM. That is just a question about the evidence, and I ask to dispense with the reading of the report.

There was no objection, and the reading of the report was dispensed with.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2157) granting a pension to Ann E. Mussman, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

Claimant is the widow of William Mussman, who enlisted September 7, 1861, as first lieutenant of the Sixth Battery Indiana Light Artillery, and served until December 10, 1862, when he was discharged from the service and returned to Indianapolis, Ind., where he died March 24, 1873, of apoplexy. Widow's claim for pension was rejected by the Pension Office "on the ground that the cause of soldier's death, apoplexy, was not a result of heart disease."

Jacob L. Bieler, who was a member of said Sixth Indiana Battery, testifies as follows:

"I was an artificer of said Sixth Indiana Battery. I know that when said Mussman entered the service in October, 1861, he was a sound, able-bodied man, being stout and healthy; that Mussman was an officer in the German army, and resigned that service only a short time before he entered the United States service. Our battery had a hard march from Calhoun, Ky., to South Carrollton, Ky., being a forced march of 30 or 40 miles. When on said march, the date not now remembered, said Mussman complained of being sick, and he looked very much fatigued, but being strictly a military man he did not associate with his men nor say much about his trouble; but it was understood that on this march, by reason of overexertion, he contracted the heart disease. I saw him treated for this trouble by Surgeon Armstrong, of the Thirty-first Indiana Volunteers, at various times. Mussman resigned the service on account of his sickness. After the war I saw him frequently up to his death, and he died of said heart disease."

Adam Frank, who was corporal of said Sixth Indiana Battery, testifies that said Mussman was a stout, robust man at the time of his enlistment, and while with the battery on a march near Moscow, Tenn., by reason of overexertion and exposure, he contracted heart disease and camp diarrhea, and was compelled to resign by reason of said disease.

William Wundran testifies that he was intimately acquainted with Mussman in Germany, and that they came to America together, and that at the time of his enlistment he (Mussman) was a stout, able-bodied man, and that when he came home from the service, about December, 1862, he was almost dead; was suffering with disease of heart and diarrhea and a severe cough. He gradually grew worse and was never able to do but little work after his return from the service. He died March 24, 1873, and the cause of death was heart disease.

This widow is now advanced in age and has no means of support.

The above facts are fully corroborated by other comrades and neighbors.

Your committee, after considering all the evidence presented, are of the opinion that this is a meritorious claim; therefore report the bill favorably with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BYNUM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH M. ALLEN.

Mr. BUTLER obtained unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 10725) to increase the pension of Elizabeth M. Allen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to increase the pension of Elizabeth M. Allen, widow of John Allen, late a private of the Forty-third Regiment United States Infantry, war of 1812, from $12 per month to $20 per month, on account of her old age and extreme poverty; that the increase be allowed from the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10725) granting increase of pension to Elizabeth M. Allen, have considered the same, and report:

The husband of the claimant, John Allen, was a private in Lieutenant Mumford's corps of artillery, Forty-third Regiment United States Infantry, in the war of 1812.

The claimant is now pensioned as his widow at the rate of $12 per month. Her claim for increase to $20 per month is supported by testimony to the effect that she is seventy-one years of age, in poor health, with no property of any kind, and no relative except a grandchild of twelve or fourteen years of age, dependent on their united efforts for support.

Your committee are of opinion that the increase asked is warranted, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then (at 10 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Massachusetts, for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. E. P. ALLEN: Petition of J. F. Welck and 35 others, citizens of Morusi, Mich., for a law restoring John S. Paul to full pension, and reimbursement of amount withheld—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARUTH: Remonstrance against the passage of the Blair educational bill—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: Papers in the claim of William H. Hawkins, of James T. Hawkins, of Andrew Millican, of Andrew Coney, of Sarah Kimball, of Sarah A. Dodson, of John B. Knowles, and of Delilah Hood, of Chattooga County, Georgia—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DUBOIS: Memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Idaho

Territory, praying for amendment of the alien act so as to exempt mines—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Memorial of the Lancaster (Pa.) Board of Trade, for the repeal of the revenue laws relating to cigars—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Reading (Pa.) Druggists' Association, in favor of free alcohol for druggists' use—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOOKER: Petition of Mary M. Jameson, widow of Wiley J. Jameson, of Hines County, Mississippi, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McRAE: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Arkansas for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. SHAW (by request): Petition of 39 citizens of Maryland for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Petition of Philip Cooper and of William A. Blackburn, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YOST: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Virginia for prohibition in the District of Columbia—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 23, 1889.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no motion to correct or amend, the Journal will stand approved as read.

TIMBER ON CHIPPEWA INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 6, 1889, certain information in regard to the cutting of timber on the Chippewa Indian reservations within the La Pointe agency during the present winter season under contracts not approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or otherwise; which the Secretary proceeded to read.

Mr. DAWES. Is it necessary to read the communication at length? It is a long document. May it not be printed without reading, and referred?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. DAWES. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. I caught very little of the document as it was being read, but as it seems to relate to an investigation which has been conducted by a committee, the chairman of which is not present, I suggest that it wait until the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is present.

Mr. PLATT. I think there is no objection to referring it, without reading, to the Select Committee on Indian Traders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the communication and the accompanying papers be referred without reading to the Select Committee on Indian Traders?

Mr. HARRIS. There can be no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a telegraphic communication from the fourth annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Texas; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

FORT WORTH, TEX., February 22, 1889.

DEAR SIR: The fourth annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Texas, assembled in this city on the birthday of the Father of our country, respectfully ask and petition the honorable body over which you preside that at least one-half of the territory now embraced in what is known as Oklahoma in the Cherokee Strip be reserved for entry and settlement by the old soldiers of the Union under such restrictions only as will enable them to secure homes at once without the settlement and cultivation required under the general homestead law.

J. C. DEGRESS,
Department Commander.

Attest:

J. M. ODELL,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,
President pro tempore United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Alfred Lindsay, a citizen of New Jersey, praying for certain revenue legislation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HISCOCK presented a petition of 619 citizens of the State of New York, praying for the passage of a national Sunday-rest law against needless Sunday work, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of 456 citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Ambrose Snow and 107 others, merchants and master mariners of Hyannis, Mass., and vicinity, praying for a survey of Hyannis Harbor, with a view to widening and deepening the harbor and its approaches; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of Horace Seaver, of Boston, Mass., and 75 others, citizens of Massachusetts and Maine, praying that no law be passed in regard to the observance of Sunday or any other religious rite, and that no amendment be made to the Constitution in regard to religion, but that the secular character of the Government be maintained and the separation of church and state complete.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER presented the petition of Division 284, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, C. N. Martin, C. E., George A. Deck, F. A. E., of Grafton, Taylor County, West Virginia, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of 453 citizens of Delaware County, Iowa, praying Congress to pass a law forbidding Sunday work in the mail and military service of the Government and in interstate commerce; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SAWYER presented a petition of 386 citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of a Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6347) for the relief of Alexander Moffitt, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7800) for the relief of John De Bree, executor of Margaret T. Higgins, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GRAY, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3904) for the relief of John R. Harrington, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2157) granting a pension to Ann E. Mussman;
A bill (H. R. 5758) granting a pension to Lovina Wright;

A bill (S. 3762) granting a pension to Nancy Polock; and

A bill (S. 3920) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation of Indians, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 3992) for the relief of Eliza Marsteller, administratrix; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INAUGURAL ADDRESSES OF PRESIDENTS, ETC.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, it was—

Ordered, That the joint resolution (S. R. 138) to print 10,000 copies of a compilation of the inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States, from George Washington to Benjamin Harrison, for the first century of Presidential inaugurations, with authenticated incidents connected therewith, biographical sketches of the Presidents from official sources, together with steel-plate portraits of the Presidents and steel-plate illustrations of the Capitol and White House be recommitted to the Committee on Printing.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business that order is closed.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which was under consideration yesterday for an investigation into election outrages.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, being in order, the Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of a resolution the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 2778, a resolution by Mr. HOAR, authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate alleged election outrages in certain States.

Mr. HARRIS. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CALL. Pending that motion I ask that the resolution may be informally laid aside——

Mr. HOAR. The regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts demands the regular order. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of the resolution he has named, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw the motion to take up the resolution at this time. At this late day of the session——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is not open to debate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was appealing to the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his motion to take up the resolution. I was not discussing its merits; I was simply stating that it must be very apparent——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Delaware proceeding?

Mr. HOAR. The regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts demands the regular order. The roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. I take the liberty of transferring that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], and I vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is necessarily absent. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BOWEN. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], or I should vote "yea."

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FARWELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to know whether the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. FARWELL. I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois withdraws his vote.

Mr. VEST. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], but I transfer it to my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL]. My colleague would vote "nay," if he were here, and the junior Senator from Kansas would vote "yea." I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Cockrell,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,	Walthall.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. HOAR February 20, as heretofore amended, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be authorized to inquire whether in any State the free and lawful expression of the will of the people in the election of members of the Fifty-first Congress and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the election of members of State Legislatures who have elected or are to elect Senators of the United States who may claim seats during said Congress, and ascertaining the result thereof, or in the choice of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States in 1888 and declaring the result thereof, has been prevented by violence, intimidation, bribery or other unlawful use of money, fraud, or other crime.

Also, whether the laws governing such elections in any States have been so framed or administered as to accomplish or permit the defeat of the will of the people in such elections.

Also, to inquire into the facts of the recent election in the State of Louisiana, held on the 17th day of April, 1888, at which there was chosen a Legislature which has since elected two United States Senators.

And said committee shall also inquire whether there were in connection with the aforesaid election illegalities, frauds, false canvasses, and false returns, so extensive and systematic in their character as to show that there existed on the part of the various State election officers a deliberate plan to apparently carry said election without regard to the votes actually cast, and to choose a governor and other State officers and a State Legislature by such illegal, false, and fraudulent means, and if so, whether said Legislature was actually and duly elected by the people of Louisiana, or was in fact substantially the creation solely of the returning and canvassing officers, and whether said State of Louisiana has a republican form of government, including a Legislature entitled to choose United States Senators, and to provide methods for the appointment of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Amendment by Mr. VOORHEES, to add:

And said committee shall also inquire into and investigate fully whether money was corruptly and unlawfully used in the control of elections in November, 1888, in any of the States, and for this purpose said committee shall have power to examine into the various sums of money raised for such purpose, by whom paid, and by whom collected, and to whom disbursed, and it shall be the duty of said committee to exercise this power.

Mr. HARRIS. There being an amendment pending, it would not be in order to offer an amendment now except to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be presented and read for information.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall move at the proper time to strike out in the fourth line of the resolution this language:

Or in the election of members of State Legislatures who have elected or are to elect Senators of the United States who may claim seats during said Congress, and ascertaining the result thereof.

I shall move, when it is in order so to do, to strike out that language from the resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Maryland will pardon me, I ask that the resolution (not to delay the action of the Senate on it) be printed in bill form so that we can see where the amendments come in.

Mr. HOAR. It has been so far printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In bill form?

Mr. HOAR. No; not in bill form.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have it printed in bill form so that those of us who pay attention to it can understand where the amendments come in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed in bill form, if there be no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to me for one moment?

Mr. GORMAN. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of a small bill on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. The regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like very much to have it considered. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the pending business may be informally laid aside to enable him to move the consideration of a bill. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Massachusetts objects?

Mr. HOAR. I will cheerfully give consent just as soon as the pending resolution is out of the way.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think that will be until about next Christmas. So I do not think we shall have much time for legislation evidently.

Mr. HOAR. The threat of the Senator from South Carolina does not promote the granting of unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not understand the Senator's remark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. GORMAN. I prefer to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, when the resolution was under consideration a day or two since I was proceeding to address the Senate. But it must be manifest to everybody that it is impossible to get speedy action upon the resolution, so I gave way very cheerfully to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to proceed with the public business. In the mean time in the discussion of the bill which he called up, the sundry civil appropriation bill, there was a matter brought specially to the attention of the Senate affecting a large class of the employés of the Government in relation to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I then stated to the Senate, and I think I had the concurrence of quite a number of Senators on the other side, that in view of the fact that the relief asked for by those people could not be provided upon an appropriation bill, and in view of the further fact that the bill which had passed the House of Representatives and come to this body affecting that question and which would determine it had been thoroughly investigated and reported to the Senate for action, it ought to be considered at this session.

With a view of taking up the bill (H. R. 9623) to provide for printing Government securities in the highest style of art, I shall move that the pending resolution, purely political in its character, one that can not accomplish any good, be postponed until Monday next, with a view of following that motion with another to proceed to the consideration of the bill which I have indicated. I therefore move that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed until Monday, on which I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves that the further consideration of the pending resolution be postponed until Monday next, upon which question he asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is necessarily absent, and withhold my vote.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]; otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN], who is absent.

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], but I transfer the pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], and vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I will announce for the day that I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. BOWEN. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] is still confined to his house by illness, and is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I shall not repeat the announcement to-day.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired generally with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] and therefore will not vote. I inadvertently voted on the last call of the yeas and nays, not noticing his absence. [A pause.] I am informed that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] is not paired. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Bate,	Daniel,	Gray,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Eustis,	Harris,	Turpie,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Butler,	George,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Call,	Gibson,	Pasco,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Gorman,	Pugh,

NAYS—26.

Allison,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt,	Teller,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Quay,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	Hoar,	Sabin,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—27.

Aldrich,	Cockrell,	Kenna,	Reagan,
Beck,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Dawes,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Blair,	Hale,	Palmer,	Spooner,
Blodgett,	Hampton,	Payne,	Vance,
Bowen,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Walthall.
Chace,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL addressed the Senate. He withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the resolution reported by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] from the Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to Congressional elections.

Mr. HOAR. I move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution in regard to the alleged election outrages in the Southern States.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution taken up during the morning hour upon which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] was speaking.

Mr. HARRIS. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], or I should vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], who has been called away on important business and may not return during the day. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and he would probably vote "yea."

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who was called away from the Chamber. If he were here I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. BROWN (when Mr. COLQUITT'S name was called). I was asked by my colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] to state that he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VEST. I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. BOWEN. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. HOAR. I was requested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to say that he is obliged to be absent from the Senate to attend the funeral of a friend, and is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. GRAY. I was requested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to announce to the Senate that he is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. MORGAN (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama withdraws his vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he transfer his pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], who is absent, I understand, without a pair.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Stanford,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Blair,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Frye,	Paddock,	Teller.
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Platt,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Quay,
Davis,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,

NAYS—21.

Bate,	Eustis,	Harris,	Reagan,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Hearst,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	George,	Jones of Arkansas,	Voorhees.
Butler,	Gibson,	Pasco,
Call,	Gorman,	Pugh,
Daniel,	Gray,	Ransom,

ABSENT—30.

Beck,	Dawes,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Palmer,	Vance,
Blodgett,	Hale,	Payne,	Vest,
Bowen,	Hampton,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Chace,	Hawley,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cockrell,	Kenna,	Sabin,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Colquitt,	Manderson,	Spooner,

So the motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 2157) granting a pension to Ann E. Mussman;
A bill (H. R. 5758) granting a pension to Lovina Wright;
A bill (H. R. 8327) for the relief of Joseph Lawless;
A bill (H. R. 8995) for the relief of Antonio Wiener;
A bill (H. R. 10725) to increase the pension of Elizabeth M. Allen;
A bill (H. R. 11884) to grant a pension to William Hawkins; and
A bill (H. R. 12404) granting a pension to Robert W. Andrews.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2862) granting a pension to William Ford;
A bill (H. R. 3916) granting a pension to Jacob Wolf;
A bill (H. R. 8580) granting a pension to Sarah A. Harrison;
A bill (H. R. 10167) increasing the pension of Nathaniel Crain;
A bill (H. R. 11043) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Catharine Buchanan;
A bill (H. R. 11627) granting a pension to Mary Horning;
A bill (H. R. 11663) granting a pension to M. Josie McClain;
A bill (H. R. 12275) to increase the pension of John W. Smith;
A bill (H. R. 12420) granting a pension to Lucy, widow of Muck-a-pec-wak-ken-zah, or "John," an Indian who served the United States and saved the lives of many white persons in the Indian outbreak or war of 1862 and died from effects of wounds received therein;
A bill (H. R. 12446) granting an increase of pension to Jacob S. Shuman;
A bill (H. R. 12575) to increase the pension of James M. Barrett;

A bill (H. R. 12607) to grant a pension to Ira Wells;
A bill (H. R. 12608) to pension William J. Martin; and
A bill (H. R. 12619) granting a pension to Littleberry W. Baker.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the settlement of the titles to the lands claimed by or under the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians in Kansas, or adversely thereto, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 8th instant, a statement showing the number of changes of railway postal clerks by quarterly periods occurring from January 1, 1885, to December 31, 1888, with reasons for such changes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH H. MADDOX.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to give notice that I do not concur in the report which was made from the Committee on Claims yesterday morning on the bill (S. 2201) for the relief of Laura E. Maddox, widow and executrix, and Robert Morrison, executor of Joseph H. Maddox, deceased, and I reserve to myself the right to file a minority report.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 2862) granting a pension to William Ford;
A bill (H. R. 3916) granting a pension to Jacob Wolf;
A bill (H. R. 8580) granting a pension to Sarah H. Harrison;
A bill (H. R. 10167) increasing the pension of Nathaniel Crain;
A bill (H. R. 11043) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Catharine Buchanan;
A bill (H. R. 11627) granting a pension to Mary Horning;
A bill (H. R. 11663) granting a pension to M. Josie McClain;
A bill (H. R. 12275) to increase the pension of John W. Smith;
A bill (H. R. 12420) granting a pension to Lucy, widow of Muck-a-pec-wak-ken-zah, or "John," an Indian who served the United States and saved the lives of many white persons in the Indian outbreak or war of 1862 and died from effects of wounds received therein;
A bill (H. R. 12446) granting an increase of pension to Jacob S. Shuman;
A bill (H. R. 12575) to increase the pension of James M. Barrett;
A bill (H. R. 12604) to restore the pension of Ann G. Barker;
A bill (H. R. 12607) to grant a pension to Ira Wells;
A bill (H. R. 12608) to pension William J. Martin; and
A bill (H. R. 12619) granting a pension to Littleberry W. Baker.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] relative to an investigation of certain alleged outrages is before the Senate.

Mr. DANIEL addressed the Senate in continuation of his speech. He withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HARRIS (at 3 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.). Will the Senator from Virginia yield to a motion to adjourn at this hour on Saturday evening?

Mr. DANIEL. If I do not lose my right to the floor I am willing to yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course it leaves the Senator on the floor.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] moves that the Senate do now adjourn, on which motion the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the negative). Is the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] recorded as voting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with him, and withdraw my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], who is necessarily called away from the Senate Chamber.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. WALTHALL. I desire again to announce my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SABIN. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], but I have transferred that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] and vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER (after having voted in the negative). Is the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] recorded as voting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. SAWYER. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with him.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. BROWN. I announce for the day that my colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Bate,	George,	Hearst,	Wilson of Md.
Berry,	Gibson,	Jones of Arkansas,
Call,	Gorman,	Ransom,
Eustis,	Hampton,	Reagan,

NAYS—21.

Allison,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Blair,	Frye,	Paddock,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hoar,	Sabin,
Dolph,	Ingalls,	Stanford,
Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Stewart,

ABSENT—42.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Daniel,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Blackburn,	Davis,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Blodgett,	Dawes,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Vance,
Butler,	Gray,	Payne,	Vest,
Cameron,	Hale,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Harris,	Pugh,	Walthall.
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Quay,
Coke,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It appearing by the roll-call that a quorum is not present, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT (when Mr. HAWLEY'S name was called). If it be proper at this time, I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is absent attending a funeral.

The roll-call was concluded; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Dawes,	Harris,	Ransom,
Bate,	Dolph,	Hearst,	Reagan,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Hiscock,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Eustis,	Hoar,	Sabin,
Brown,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Mitchell,	Stanford,
Chandler,	Frye,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Cockrell,	George,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Coke,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Teller,
Cullom,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Daniel,	Gray,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Hampton,	Platt,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senate having refused to adjourn, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. My motion to adjourn was pending. With the permission of the Senate, the yeas and nays having been ordered upon it, I will withdraw that motion, and with the leave of the Senator from Virginia I desire to make another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays were taken on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, that is true, and no quorum voted. That was a finality as far as that was concerned. I now move, if the Senator from Virginia will allow me to do so, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire if the Senator from Virginia can yield for that purpose without unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks he can. Will the Senator from Tennessee withhold the motion for a few minutes that the Chair may dispose of some business on his table?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

MARY B. M'VEAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3421) granting a pension to Mary B. McVean, which was, in line 5, to strike out the word "Major" and insert "Captain."

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

JAMES M. FROST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2759) granting a pension to James M. Frost, which was, in line 2, after the word "pension-roll," to insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

CHARLES S. HAMILTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3387) granting a pension to Charles S. Hamilton, which was, in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty."

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

ANNA SLATER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1319) granting a pension to Anna Slater, which was, in line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve."

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1459) granting a pension to Frances Courtney Cochnower;

An act (S. 2530) granting a pension to Robert Kelly;

An act (S. 2547) to increase the pension of Mrs. Matilda Wilkins Emory;

An act (S. 2924) to increase the pension of Sterne H. Fowler; and

An act (S. 3819) granting a pension to Esther Gould.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. HARRIS. I decline to make the motion for an executive session. The Senator from Virginia prefers to proceed, and I shall not interrupt him.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution, submitted by Mr. HOAR, authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate alleged election outrages in certain States.

Mr. DANIEL addressed the Senate in further continuation of his speech. He withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me now in order that I may move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, of which there is a large amount undisposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir; for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will, before making that motion, permit me to make an announcement and also a report from a committee?

Mr. HARRIS. I will yield for both purposes.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BURNES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to announce that on Monday, at 3 o'clock, my colleague and myself will call upon the Senate to consider resolutions passed by the House of Representatives in regard to the death of Hon. James N. Burnes, late a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of Missouri.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. FAULKNER and Mr. VOORHEES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Woman Suffrage on the joint resolution (S. R. 11) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women, and I ask that they may be received and printed in like number as the report of the majority of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be received and printed, if there be no objection.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave to submit at this time the conference report on the pension appropriation bill. It will take but a few minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report of the committee of conference? The Chair hears none, and the report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 to the bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "And provided further, That a check or checks drawn by a pension agent in payment of pension due, and mailed by him to the address of the pensioner, shall constitute payment within the meaning of section 4765, Revised Statutes, in the event of the death of a pensioner subsequent to the mailing and before the receipt of said check, and the amount which may have accrued on the pension of any pensioner subsequent to the last quarterly payment on account thereof and prior to the death of such pensioner shall, in the case of a husband, be paid to his widow, or if there be no widow, to his surviving minor children or the guardian thereof, and in the case of a widow to her minor children: Provided further, That hereafter whenever a pension certificate shall have been issued and the pensioner mentioned therein dies before payment shall have been made, leaving no widow and no surviving minor children, the accrued pension due on said certificate to the date of death of such pensioner may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be paid to the legal representatives of said pensioner."

And the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
M. A. FORAN,
EDWARD J. GAY,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

CARD INDEX RECORD OF VOLUNTEER REGIMENT.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the adoption of an order. I will explain that this is a muster card index record of the One hundred and sixty-second New York Regiment, which has been submitted to the Senate in obedience to a resolution, and under the general order to print there will be 1,500 copies printed. There is no necessity for printing 1,500 copies, and I simply ask a modification of the order so as to print 600 copies of it, and place them in charge of the Secretary of the Senate in order that Senators can see them and realize what they are. I hope the order will be agreed to, which will save the printing of 900 useless documents.

The order was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the order heretofore made for printing the letter of the Secretary of War, dated February 15, 1889, transmitting the index of the One hundred and sixty-second New York Volunteer Infantry, be rescinded, and in lieu thereof that there be printed for the use of the Senate 600 copies of the same, to be delivered to the Secretary of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting the report required by the act of March 3, 1887, of judgments and decrees which have been rendered; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose my motion now comes up.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia, who has occupied the floor for some four or five hours, whether the motion to adjourn or go into executive session grows out of the fact that he does not desire to proceed further to-night?

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, if it would be any accommodation to the Senate I could speak for an hour or so longer this evening, but I beg leave to inform my friend from Massachusetts that I expect to make a very long and prosy speech.

Mr. HOAR. That is the only statement the Senator can make that I should withhold my belief from.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me to observe that the Senator from Virginia has spoken four hours, almost the entire afternoon, and by the rules of courtesy that obtain in the body we ought to adjourn on his account if on no other. It is now nearly 6 o'clock, and we ought to adjourn for other reasons.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator will allow me to get the answer to my question. I desire to be informed whether the motion to adjourn or to go into executive session rests upon the ground that the Senator from Virginia desires it?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Virginia yielded to me. I asked him to yield in order that I might move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, of which, as the Senator from Massachusetts knows as well as I know, there is a very large amount not yet considered or disposed of by the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Now, if I may be permitted a word, if the motion is put upon the ground that the Senator from Tennessee or any other Senator thinks we ought to be spending the time of the Senate in executive business instead of listening to the Senator from Virginia, I shall vote one way. If the motion is put upon the usual ground, to which the Senator from Indiana has alluded, that the Senator from Virginia has spoken so long that he feels fatigued and does not desire to go on further to-night, I shall vote another way. I should like to know which is the case.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me. If a motion shall be made to adjourn upon the ground that the Senator from Virginia does not care to proceed further this evening, then the Senator from Massachusetts can take into consideration that question. Now, the question is, shall we proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. TELLER. That is not the question.

Mr. HARRIS. It will be as soon as I can make the motion, and I now make it.

Mr. HOAR. Understanding from the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who sits close to the Senator from Virginia, that he thinks the Senator from Virginia ought not to be asked to proceed longer to-night, he having spoken several hours, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 25, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 23, 1889.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, on the 12th day of October last, on one of the Fridays when private business was being considered, I was recognized under some arrangement under which bills were being considered by unanimous consent, and I then called up a bill in which one of my constituents is deeply interested (H. R. 506). The bill and report were both read, but the consideration of the bill was then objected to on account of the lateness of the hour, or on account of some objection which did not relate to the merits of the bill, and an adjournment was soon thereafter made. This is the only time that my name was ever reached under any arrangement on special bill day. I do not refer, of course, to special pension nights. As my name is toward the end of the alphabetical list, it is seldom reached under any of these arrangements for the passage of special acts. The bill to which I refer, which was partly considered, only seeks to refer a matter to the Court of Claims, to which there can be no possible objection, and as my name will not likely be reached under this call, and as I have not heretofore availed myself of the passage of any bills by unanimous consent, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The order made yesterday prohibits the Chair from entertaining a request for unanimous consent except during the call of the names in alphabetical order; but the Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he will probably find no difficulty in getting some other member whose name is higher on the list to call up the matter.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. My name is near the end, and has never yet been reached under any arrangement that has been made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt that the gentleman will succeed in attaining his object by acting upon the suggestion just made. If not, the Chair will endeavor to secure it for him in some way; but under the order made yesterday the Chair is prohibited from entertaining his request at this time.

ARIZONA, WYOMING, AND IDAHO.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a request. I discovered yesterday for the first time that the chairman of the Committee on Territories has reported in favor of the admission of the Territories of Arizona, Wyoming, and Idaho, and has also made a separate report in favor of the admission of New Mexico. I was not aware until yesterday that these reports had been made, and I now ask unanimous consent that the minority of the committee may have leave to file their views, to be printed with those reports.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing in the order prohibiting the Chair from entertaining that request, and the gentleman will have the leave that he desires if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SEMINOLE LANDS, INDIAN TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Congress of the United States:

I herewith submit for your consideration a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a proposition made on behalf of the Seminole Nation of Indians for the relinquishment to the Government of the United States of their rights to certain lands in the Indian Territory.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 21, 1889.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that message be retained on the Speaker's table until the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], arrives.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that will be done.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print remarks in the RECORD on the bill to pension Mrs. Irene Rucker Sheridan.

Mr. MCCLAMMY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print remarks in relation to the repeal of the tax on unmanufactured tobacco.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to inquire whether or not, under the special order made yesterday, it is proper to lay before the House executive documents or anything else in this hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. ROGERS. Will Senate bills be laid before the House in this hour?

The SPEAKER. The order expressly provides that requests for unanimous consent to consider Senate bills which may be laid before the House by the Chair shall be entertained.

Mr. ROGERS. I construed the order otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on and after to-day the House sessions shall begin at 10 a. m., and after the reading of the Journal up to 11 a. m. the names of members shall be called in their alphabetical order for the consideration of matters by unanimous consent; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for unanimous consent at any other time except to concur or non-concur in Senate amendments to House bills, or to consider Senate bills when presented to the House by the Speaker.

Mr. ROGERS. I am perfectly willing that the rule shall be construed as suggested by the Chair, but I was under the impression that the provision to which the Chair calls attention might apply to Senate bills laid before the House at another time.

The SPEAKER. It has reference, of course, to the rule which requires the Chair to lay Senate bills before the House. Under this order the Chair will now proceed until 11 o'clock to call the names of members alphabetically for request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I stated yesterday that I thought it was an unseemly and unjust proceeding to set aside one hour daily for private bills when there was a contested-election case undisposed of, and I now move that the House take a recess for half an hour.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this order is not confined to private bills, but applies to all bills. The Chair desires also to state in this connection, before putting the question upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], that, as the order omits to make any provision for the Delegates from the Territories, the Chair has taken the liberty of inserting the names of the Delegates in the list in their proper places alphabetically, and they will be retained there, if there be no objection.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], that the House take a recess until half past 10 o'clock.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Speaker, is that motion in order pending the execution of the special order of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND, and there were—ayes 6, noes 59.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move a call of the House.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and a call of the House was ordered—ayes 36, noes 17.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which a call of the House was ordered.

The question was taken on the motion to reconsider, and it was adopted—ayes 63, noes 12.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is agreed to, and the question now is on the motion to order a call of the House.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that the House take a recess for thirty minutes. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 1.

Mr. SAYERS (at 10.30 o'clock). Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the business for this hour be dispensed with and that we proceed to the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object. If the sacrifice is to be made let us have all the ceremonies.

The tellers resumed their places and continued the count.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I just now remember that there is another special order for to-day at 2 o'clock, the eulogies on the late Representative Burnes, which will consume the day, and I therefore withdraw my objection.

Several MEMBERS. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to ask unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to ask unanimous consent when the gentleman's name is reached.

Mr. BURROWS. But not on any other proposition?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, as the Chair construes the order of the House, to ask unanimous consent to consider bills otherwise than as provided in the order. The Chair thinks that the order must be construed in view of its full contents, and that it does not preclude requests for unanimous consent or leave for the minority of a committee to present its views, for leave to print remarks in the RECORD, for leave of absence, or other matters of that sort, but only regulates requests for the consideration of bills.

Mr. BURROWS. I want to ask unanimous consent to modify the order made yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be in order.

Mr. BURROWS. It is perfectly apparent that this hour will be good for nothing. Members whose names appear at the end of the list or well down will not attend at 10 o'clock, knowing that they will not be called, and the consequence will be that we shall always be without a quorum. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the order be so modified that it shall read as follows:

That on and after to-day the House sessions shall begin at 10 o'clock a. m.

Mr. BLAND. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. It is perfectly clear that we can not do any business under this order in this hour, and it is so framed that we can not ask unanimous consent in any other hour. [Laughter.]

The tellers continued the count for some time, without making any final report.

The SPEAKER (at 11 o'clock a. m.). The time assigned by order of the House for entertaining requests for unanimous consent has expired. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] withdraw the motion for a recess?

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw it for the present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour be dispensed with, and that committees have the privilege of filing their reports at the Clerk's desk——

The SPEAKER. Including the views of minorities of committees?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to dispense with the morning hour for the presentation of reports, and that all gentlemen having reports to make from committees be allowed to present them at the Clerk's desk for reference under the direction of the Speaker; and that minorities of committees have the usual leave to file their views. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

SALMON FISHERIES OF ALASKA.

Mr. DUNN, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported a bill (H. R. 12637) to provide for the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ST. LOUIS AND SAN FRANCISCO RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1697) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, for the purpose of constructing a railway, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. MAISH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 799) to donate condemned cast-iron cannon to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Waterville, Me.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAISH also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6120) granting cannon to General Lander Post, of Lynn, Mass.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAISH also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2107) granting condemned cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes to John A. Platter Post No. 82, Grand Army of the Republic, Indiana; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAISH also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3588) granting a condemned cannon and carriage to Abernethy Post No. 48, Grand Army of the Republic, West Union, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAISH also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 3515) to donate condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-shot to the St. Boniface Union Soldiers and Sailors' Memorial Association, of Lake View, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MAISH also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were laid upon the table:

A bill (H. R. 2212) granting a condemned cannon to the Grand Army post at Montezuma, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 2143) donating four condemed cannon to the Sol. Meredith Grand Army Post of Richmond, Ind.;

A bill (H. R. 2252) granting condemned cannon, carriage, and cannon-balls to U. S. Grant Post, Kansas;

A bill (H. R. 9426) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the town of Methuen, Mass., one condemned gun-carriage and cannon, to be used for monumental purposes;

JOHN W. COMBS.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2363) for the relief of John W. Combs; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PRODUCTION OF PRECIOUS METALS.

Mr. RICHARDSON presented the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of precious metals in the United States for the calendar year 1888 be printed, and that 9,000 extra copies be printed, 4,000 copies for use of the House, 2 000 copies for use of the Sena'e, and 3,000 copies for use of the Director of the Mint.

AGREEMENT WITH MUSCOGEE (OR CREEK) NATION OF INDIANS.

Mr. PEEL. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 3920) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation of Indians, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. On this bill the committee was granted leave to report at any time. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be dispensed with, and that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it is provided by section 8 of the act of March 3, 1885, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," "that the President is hereby authorized to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead laws the unassigned lands in said Indian Territory ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 19, 1866; and for that purpose the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; his action hereunder to be reported to Congress;" and

Whereas William F. Vilas, Secretary of the Interior, by and under the direction of the President of the United States, on the part of the United States, and the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation of Indians, represented by Pleasant Porter, David M. Hodge, and Esparhecher, delegates and representatives thereto duly authorized and empowered by the principal chief and national council of the said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation, did, on the 19th day of January, A. D. 1889, enter into and conclude articles of cession and agreement, which said cession and agreement is in words as follows:

Articles of cession and agreement made and concluded at the city of Washington on the 19th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1889, by and between the United States of America, represented by William F. Vilas, Secretary of the Interior, by and under direction of the President of the United States, and the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation of Indians, represented by Pleasant Porter, David M. Hodge, and Esparhecher, delegates and representatives thereunto duly authorized and empowered by the principal chief and national council of the said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation.

Whereas by a treaty of cession made and concluded by and between the said parties on the 14th day of June, 1866, the said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation, in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, ceded and conveyed to the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States might choose to settle thereon, the west half of their entire domain, to be divided by a line running north and south, which should be surveyed as provided in the eighth article of the said treaty; the eastern half of the lands of the said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation to be retained by them as a home; and

Whereas but a portion of said lands so ceded for such use has been sold to Indians or assigned to their use, and the United States now desire that all of said ceded lands may be entirely freed from any limitation in respect to the use and enjoyment thereof, and all claims of the said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation to such lands may be surrendered and extinguished, as well as all other claims of whatsoever nature to any territory except the aforesaid eastern half of their domain:

Now, therefore, these articles of cession and agreement, by and between the said contracting parties, witness:

I. The said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation, in consideration of the sum of money hereinafter mentioned, hereby absolutely cedes and grants to the United States, without reservation or condition, full and complete title to the entire western half of the domain of the said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation lying west of the division line surveyed and established under the said treaty of 1866, and also grants and releases to the United States all and every claim, estate, right, or interest of any and every description in or to any and all land and territory whatever, except so much of the said former domain of the said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation as lies east of the said line of division, surveyed and established as aforesaid, and is now held and occupied as the home of said nation.

II. In consideration whereof, and of the covenant herein otherwise contained, the United States agree to pay to the said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation the sum of $2,280,857.10, whereof $280,857.10 shall be paid to the national treasurer of said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation, or to such other person as shall be duly authorized to receive the same, at such times and in such sums after the due ratification of this agreement (as hereinafter provided) as shall be directed and required by the national council of said nation, and the remaining sum of $2,000,000 shall be set apart and remain in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said nation, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from and after the 1st day of July, 1889, to be paid to the treasurer of said nation, and to be judiciously applied under the direction of the legislative council thereof, to the support of their government, the maintenance of schools and educational establishments, and such other objects as may be designed to promote the welfare and happiness of the people of the said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation, subject to the discretionary direction of the Congress of the United States: Provided, That the Congress of the United States may at any time pay over to the said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation the whole, or, from time to time, any part of said principal sum, or of any principal sum belonging to said nation held in the Treasury of the United States, and thereupon terminate the obligation of the United States in respect thereto and in respect to any further interest upon so much of said principal as shall be so paid and discharged.

III. It is stipulated and agreed that henceforth especial effort shall be made by the Creek Nation to promote the education of the youth thereof and extend their useful knowledge and skill in the arts of civilization; and the said nation agrees that it will devote not less than $50,000, annually, of its income, derived hereunder, to the establishment and maintenance of schools and other means calculated to advance the end; and of this annual sum at least $10,000 shall be applied to the education of orphan children of said nation.

IV. These articles of cession and agreement shall be of no force or obligation upon either party until they shall be ratified and confirmed, first, by act of the national council of said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation, and secondly, by the Congress of the United States, nor unless such ratification shall be on both sides made and completed before the 1st day of July, A. D. 1889.

V. No treaty or agreement heretofore made and now subsisting is hereby affected, except so far as the provisions hereof supersede and control the same.

In testimony whereof we, the said William F. Vilas, Secretary of the Interior, on the part of the United States, and the said Pleasant Porter, David M. Hodge, and Esparhecher, delegates of the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation, have hereunto set our hands and seals, at the place and on the day first above written, in duplicate.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM F. VILAS,
Secretary of the Interior.
[SEAL.] PLEASANT PORTER.
[SEAL.] DAVID M. HODGE.
[SEAL.] ESPARHECHER, his x mark.

In presence of—
JOHN P. HUME.
ROBERT V. BELT.

Whereas the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation of Indians has accepted, ratified, and confirmed said articles of cession and agreement by act of its national council, approved by the principal chief of said nation on January 31, A. D. 1889, wherein it is provided that the grant and cession of land and territory therein made shall take effect when the same shall be ratified and confirmed by the Congress of the United States of America: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That said articles of cession and agreement are hereby accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

SEC. 2. That the lands acquired by the United States under said agreement shall be a part of the public domain, but they shall only be disposed of in accordance with the laws regulating homestead entries, and to the persons qualified to make such homestead entries, not exceeding 160 acres to one qualified claimant. And the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to any lands acquired under said agreement. Any person who may enter upon any part of said lands in said agreement mentioned prior to the time that the same are opened to settlement by act of Congress shall not be permitted to occupy or to make entry of such lands or lay any claim thereto.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the terms of said articles of cession and agreement the sum of $2,280,857.10 is hereby appropriated.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the appropriation hereby made, the sum of $280,857.10, to the national treasurer of said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation, or to such person as shall be duly authorized to receive the same, at such time and in such sums as shall be directed and required by the national council of said nation, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby further authorized and directed to place the remaining sum of $2,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Muscogee (or Creek) Nation of Indians, to be held for, and as provided in said articles of cession and agreement, and to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, from and after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1889; said interest to be paid to the treasurer of said nation annually.

Mr. PETERS (during the reading of the bill). I desire to offer an amendment to section 3.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the bill will first be concluded.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PEEL. I ask for the previous question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] yield for a question?

Mr. PEEL. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is this the instance in which an agreement was put on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior by which these people agreed to pay in the event of the passage of this bill a percentage upon the amount to a former governor of the State of Kansas, that agreement having been approved by Secretary Lamar; and if so, is that agreement still on file uncanceled?

Mr. PEEL. I will state to the gentleman from New Jersey that the agreement to which he refers was surrendered long since; and I have a statement of the Secretary of the Interior to that effect. In fact I was present when the surrender was made.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. PEEL. I say that the agreement has been surrendered; that I was present when it was surrendered; and I have here a statement of the Secretary of the Interior that it has been surrendered. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] also has a statement to the same effect.

Mr. PETERS. I had desired to offer an amendment requiring that 40 acres of each 160 be broken and plowed, so as to make this bill conform to the amendment which was placed on the Oklahoma bill; but I understand that the offering of such an amendment at this time would perhaps jeopardize the passage of the bill, and that there will be opportunity on a subsequent bill for the presentation of an amendment which will cover all these cases. Therefore I will not insist on the amendment at this time.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the preamble will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CENSUS.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of privilege. Leave was given to the Select Committee on the Eleventh Census to report back at any time the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 1659, providing for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses. The committee recommend concurrence in the Senate amendments. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Select Committee on the Eleventh Census to which was referred the House bill No. 1659 with Senate amendments (with leave to report at any time) beg to report:

That most of the Senate amendments are verbal and technical, and are intended to perfect the text of the bill. They should be concurred in.

The principal amendments refer to the schedule of inquiries in the seventeenth section, and consist of—

First. An addition to the special schedule as to soldiers and sailors and their surviving widows, etc. This subject was intended by the House to be referred to the Senate whose Census Committee was preparing and receiving data, so as to furnish good reasons for the additional inquiry as to "organizations and length of service."

Second. Another Senate amendment provides that the population schedule shall include an inquiry as to the number of negroes, mulattoes, quadroons, and octoroons. This seems to be an inexpensive inquiry, to be accomplished by a check-mark in the schedule, and is desired by scientists.

Third. As to another and principal amendment of the Senate, to "ascertain the recorded indebtedness of private corporations and individuals," your committee ask concurrence, notwithstanding it involves considerable expense. Col. Carroll D. Wright's letter is referred to and made a part hereof. It vindicates this inquiry.

The other amendments are vindicated in the paper marked "A," being a series of communications printed by the Senate to explain the amendments proposed by that body.

Mr. COX. I ask the previous question on concurring in the amendments of the Senate.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that the communications, etc., accompanying this bill as returned from the Senate be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The documents are as follows:

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED BY COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS, UNITED STATES SENATE.

SUGGESTIONS RELATIVE TO CHANGES MADE IN HOUSE BILL FROM ACT OF MARCH 3, 1879.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., July 26, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with our interview of yesterday, I have the honor to submit herewith certain points and suggestions relative to House bill 1659, being a bill to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses. These points relate mainly to the changes which have been made in this bill as from the act of March 3, 1879, and for convenience' sake I will take the pending bill by sections, remarking in a general way that, so far as principles are concerned, the bill is substantially the act of 1879, the changes embodied being those indicated by experience in taking the Tenth Census.

Sections 1 and 2 need no remark.

Section 3. The first change from the act of 1879 is in making the salary of the Superintendent $6,000 per annum, instead of $5,000. Any one conversant with the labors of census-taking will at once see the necessity of making this change. This section also provides for an organization, whereas the act of 1879 provided for only a partial organization. The pending bill provides for ten chiefs of division, a disbursing clerk, and two stenographers, at $2,000 each per year. With the exception of the disbursing clerk, all these officers were actually employed in the Tenth Census, but they had to be created out of the list of experts, etc., and as a rule at a much larger expense than that incurred by the bill. The organization provided in House bill 1659 seems to be absolutely essential for the perfect working of the Census Office. This section also provides for minor employés—watchmen, messengers, etc.—in order that there shall be no question in regard to the compensation of such, or any opportunity for a double interpretation of the provisions of the bill. I would suggest, however, that the salary of the disbursing clerk be made $2,500, instead of $2,000, as the work of disbursing $6,000,000, or whatever the census may cost, is something enormous compared with the salary provided in the bill.

Section 4 provides for supervisors, the maximum number being 175, instead of 150 as in 1880. The increase of population demands this increase of supervisors.

Section 5 relates to the duties of supervisors, and makes no material change from the old law.

Section 6 concerns the compensation of supervisors. In the law of 1879 each supervisor was paid the fixed sum of $500, without regard to the size of his enumeration district. This worked very unjustly, and caused a great deal of complaint and many attempts on the part of Congress to harmonize or readjust the compensation already paid. It was found, however, fraught with so many difficulties that nothing was ever done about it. This section provides that each supervisor shall receive a fixed sum of $125, without regard to the size of his district, and in addition thereto, in thickly settled districts, $1 for each thousand or majority fraction of a thousand of the population enumerated, and in sparsely settled districts, $1.40 for each thousand, etc. Under the act of 1879 the 150 supervisors, receiving $500 each, cost $75,000. Under this section the compensation of 175 supervisors would amount to about $100,000, as follows:

One hundred and seventy-five supervisors, at $125 each, fixed	$21,875
One hundred supervisors, to cover 40,000,000 people, at $1 per thousand	40,000
Seventy-five supervisors, to cover 20,000,000 people, at $1.40 per thousand	28,000
Odd majorities and contingencies	10,125
Total	100,000

Practically an increase in the expense of salaries of supervisors of $25,000; no more than would naturally be expected through the increase of population.

Section 7, practically the law of 1879.

Section 8, practically the law of 1879.

Section 9, practically the law of 1879.

Section 10, practically the law of 1879.

Section 11 relates to the compensation of enumerators. So far as the enumeration of the population is concerned there is no change in this bill from the act of 1879, but some of the ambiguities of that act are removed, so that there can be no misinterpretation, as occurred in 1880, as to the compensation of enumerators; but in regard to farms and manufacturing establishments there is a change. By the act of 1879 the compensation was 10 cents for enumerating each farm, and 15 cents for enumerating each establishment of productive industry. This bill adds 5 cents to each of these, making it 15 cents for each farm, and 20 cents for each establishment of productive industry. This increase seems to be an absolute necessity. In 1880 experience taught that the compensation was too small in regard to farms and manufacturing establishments. No particular complaint was made in regard to the compensation for enumerating population. In Massachusetts, the largest supervisor's district in the country, having 903 enumeration districts, after the whole number of enumerators had been appointed and accepted their appointments, there was more than one hundred resignations when they learned the compensation, and great trouble arose accordingly. The same was true in many other supervising districts. It seems to be quite impossible to make even a fair day's pay at enumerating farms at 10 cents and manufacturing establishments at 15 cents. Any one conversant with census-taking knows that the enumerator must do the principal part of the work in such cases. The increased expense to the whole census under this increased compensation for farms and manufacturing establishments is as follows:

There were, in 1880, 4,008,907 farms. The cost of enumeration, at 10 cents, was $400,890. Should there be 5,000,000 farms, which is a very large estimate, consolidation, rather than disintegration, being the rule, the expense in 1890, at 15 cents, would be $750,000, while for manufacturing the figures are as follows: In 1880 there were 253,852 manufacturing establishments. To enumerate these, at 15 cents (the compensation in 1880), cost $38,077. On the estimate of 255,000 establishments in 1890, at 20 cents each, the cost would be $51,000. I am fully convinced that these increased rates would bring greater accuracy and more thorough completeness in the farm and manufacturing statistics than it was possible to secure under the rates of 1880. The enumeration of farms individually, as in all past Federal censuses, was not satisfactory, and the dissatisfaction arises, in my opinion, almost entirely from the lack of compensation to the enumerator for making a thorough report of each farm and each manufacturing establishment.

Section 12 makes no change.

Section 13 makes no change, except to bring into actual legal relations the fines and penalties.

Section 14 does the same for the fines therein treated.

Section 15 only perfects the question of fines.

Section 16 is practically the same as the law of 1879, except that it perfects the matter of action.

Section 17 avoids the more distinct enumeration of inquiries, and leaves the Secretary of the Interior full discretion over the schedules. This is a very wise provision, it seems to me, because if the act undertook to specify, as it did in 1879, exactly what should be contained in each and every schedule, much trouble would arise and expense be incurred that might be avoided through the preparations, which should be made prior to the actual enumeration. This section also contains a special provision never introduced in a Federal census before for securing facts relative to survivors of the war of the rebellion, and that is, all soldiers that may be living at the time of the enumeration. This, as provided for in the section, adds but little to the expense of the census. All that is necessary is to insert one column in the schedule, very narrow at that, in which the letters "A," "N," or "M," signifying "Army," "Navy," or "Marine," would be inserted after the name of each person who survived the war. If it should be desirable to add the duration of services, all that would be necessary would be to add figures representing months after the initial letters "A," "N," and "M," as, for instance, if a man served two and a half years, "30" would be written after the letter "A," if he served in the Army. This might be well to add to the bill, in which case, in line 15, page 13, add the words "and length of service."

I would also earnestly urge upon your committee the propriety of reinstating an amendment made by the House committee, but which was rejected by the House, relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people. I would suggest the following amendment to cover this point: After the word "census," in line 31, page 14, of the bill as it passed the House, add the words—

"He shall also at the time of the general enumeration herein provided for or prior thereto, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, collect the statistics of and relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people in such localities in the various States as shall be fairly representative of general conditions in this respect, and make report thereon to Congress."

The wording of this amendment is a little different from that reported by the House committee, the change being in order to limit the work to representative localities. This amendment is in accordance with the last section of a letter which I wrote in response to an inquiry from Mr. COX. This letter is printed on pages 6709 and 6710 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, No. 168. A still further amendment should then be made in the bill; on page 14, line 36, after the word "public," add the words "and private."

Section 18 is practically the same as the law of 1879; but should the amendment just suggested, relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people, be made, there should be an amendment after the words "special agents," in line 18, page 15, as follows: Add the words "to collect the statistics of and relating to indebtedness, as provided in the foregoing section, and."

Section 19 is substantially the same as the act of 1879.

Section 20 fixes the cost of the census at $6,000,000. The cost of the Tenth Census, including printing, was $5,862,750.24, or, exclusive of printing, about $5,000,000. This was for, in round numbers, 50,000,000 people. The expense per capita was about 9½ cents. If we have, in 1890, 62,000,000 people, the expense would be $5,890,000. If we have 64,000,000, as it is estimated by some we shall have, at 9½ cents per capita the cost of the Eleventh Census would be $6,080,000. It is, therefore, unsafe to fix a sum less than $5,000,000. The experience in several censuses teaches that 9½ cents is as small a per capita expense as can be compatible with efficient service. To carry on the census on the same basis as that of 1880, the census of 1890 would cost in the vicinity of $7,000,000; but the limitation in section 17 of the volumes which shall be published in connection with the census avoids much of the expense of the Tenth Census.

Section 21 was a provision in the act of 1879.

Section 22 was a provision in the act of 1879.

Section 23 makes a change in this respect: By the act of 1879 enumerators were obliged to make a duplicate of the names, with age, sex, and color, of all persons enumerated within their territory, and deposit the same with the clerk of the county court. This was simply an additional expense, without a particle of benefit. There was no value in this duplicate whatever. In order to be valuable the duplicate should be furnished to the municipal authorities, and should include birthplace, as well as age, sex, and color. This section 23, therefore, provides for the making of a copy of the names, with age, sex, birthplace, and color, of all persons enumerated in the territory of an enumerator, to be supplied to the municipal government, for which that municipal government, should it request the copy, shall pay at the rate of 25 cents for each 100 names. In 1880 the price was 10 cents per 100 names, and would hardly, in many instances, pay the expense of the visitation to the county court-house required in the act. This section, if carried out, will result in great benefit, the copies being of infinite value in many instances.

Section 24 simply provides for the incidental expenses of the census, the language in section 24 being absolutely essential for the auditing of accounts.

Section 25 is simply the ordinary section making proper repeals.

A general change in this bill over that of 1879 is that under the latter act provision was made for States taking interdecennial censuses on the mean of the Federal census. This old provision can hardly be well carried out. The States of Colorado, Florida, and Nebraska, and the Territories of Dakota and New Mexico took advantage of the old provisions; but so far as all estimates or calculations can be made, no great benefit was derived from it, and it is utterly impossible physically to carry out the provisions of the act of 1879 to any satisfactory conclusion. The provision does not, therefore, appear in House bill 1659.

It may be well for you to have before you the dates relating to the legislation for the census of 1880. The first bill, which was practically drawn by Mr. Garfield, was introduced May 20, 1878. It did not pass, however, until March 3, 1879, a date altogether too late for ample preparation for the census. A bill making amendments to the main act, and vital ones, necessary, actually, to the taking of the census, did not pass until April 20, 1880, a month and ten days prior to the actual enumeration, while the bill making appropriations for taking the census, so far as the main expense was concerned, was not approved until June 16, 1880, more than two weeks after the actual enumeration began. I respectfully submit that this state of affairs, so far as legislation is concerned, had much to do with the delay in taking the census of 1880. If ample time be given for preparation—and two years is none too long a time—the census can move smoothly and harmoniously and the office be relieved from the snowed-under conditions which followed the work of 1880. I therefore most respectfully urge upon you and your committee the necessity of promptly passing a bill relating to the Eleventh Census.

If I can in any way be of further service to you, please command me.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT.

SUGGESTIONS RELATING TO AMENDMENTS TO HOUSE BILL 1659.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., December 29, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 27th instant.

So far as any amendments to the pending census bill (H. R. 1659), as reported in the Senate July 14, 1888, are concerned, I believe I have nothing to suggest in addition to the matters to which I called your attention in my communication of July 26. There are some points, however, which it seems to me it might be well to thoroughly canvass; but these matters relate more particularly to the administration of the Census Office than to legislation, except in a negative way. Pardon me, therefore, if I take up three or four points to which I have brought considerable thought.

Statistics of recorded indebtedness.—First, let me urge the committee to consider most carefully, and favorably, too, the proposition to collect statistics relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people. The amendment of the House committee, which was rejected by the House, provided for the appropriation of $250,000, in addition to the general appropriation for the census, for collecting such statistics. Since the action of the House the results of practical experience in the direction named have been secured. The Michigan bureau of labor and industrial statistics has carried out a successful investigation and published the results relating to the mortgage indebtedness of farms, but I am not able to state at what expense this investigation was made. In Illinois, however, under the direction of the efficient secretary of the bureau of labor statistics, Col. John S. Lord, a very complete investigation has been made and the results now partially given to the public. From correspondence with Colonel Lord relative to the expense of collecting the statistics of indebtedness, I am satisfied that with the $250,000, should the Senate see fit to insert the amendment in the form which I suggested in my letter of July 26, the indebtedness of the whole people, as recorded in all the States, can be secured on a basis which will approximately show the actual debt condition for this class; that is, mortgages upon real property; and the amount named would also enable the Superintendent of the Census to collect a large amount of information relative to other forms of recorded indebtedness, like judgments, chattel mortgages, etc. I think I can assure the committee, therefore, that for the amount named, $250,000, Congress can secure the full results sought.

Statistics of surviving soldiers.—House bill 1659 provides that the next census shall comprehend information as to survivors of the Army and Navy and Marine Corps of the United States in the war of the rebellion, and the widows of soldiers, sailors, or marines. The suggestion is made that the service of all such survivors be included in the schedule, that is, that such inquiries be incorporated as will show the company and regiment in which the survivors served, and also the length of time. This would be exceedingly important information, but it is information that adds very greatly to the cost of enumeration. The simple statement as to the names and number of survivors and of the widows of soldiers, sailors, and marines would not materially add to the cost of enumeration, because the names of all parties are taken in the census without regard to information relating to the persons involved. To ascertain, then, whether a man is a survivor of the war simply requires a check-mark in a proper column in the schedule; so, if the person be a widow of a soldier, sailor, or marine, the information can be easily obtained and readily inserted.

It should be remembered that the enumerator, in a large number of cases, sees some of the women of the family, from whom he gets his information, and so long as the inquiries can be answered by yes or no or by a positive statement like the answers to "age," "birthplace," "occupation," the answer being practically yes or no, no great difficulty is encountered; but when a record has to be referred to, or a matter has to be considered and comparative data examined, the enumerator can not succeed in securing information in a very large majority of cases. If such inquiries, involving search of records and consultation with other parties before the information sought for can be given, are required, the enumerator should be allowed compensation equivalent to the time taken. Two cents per capita, with such information in the schedule, would result in a failure of the census. The only way in which such information could be secured with integrity would be to adjust a special rate of compensation for every person involved in the special inquiry. I call your attention to this because of the practical difficulties in census-taking as compared with the sentiment which calls for information that can only be secured by more or less research; that is to say, information which belongs in the category of enumeration means that information which can be secured by a direct answer, positive and short. All other information belongs to special investigation. When the features of a special investigation are united with those of an enumeration the compensation of the enumerator should be adjusted accordingly or failure is sure to follow.

Statistics relating to the negro race.—Comprehensive information relating to the negro race is absolutely demanded by the present condition of affairs. There is no difficulty in ascertaining the statistics relating to mulattoes, quadroons, and octoroons which are obtained for all other classes of population. The schedule used in previous censuses calls for the number of each race, but so far as negroes are concerned, it is limited to black, white, and mulattoes. To secure the information relative to quadroons and octoroons would simply require another check-mark on the schedule, and this information would not result in any appreciable increase in the expense of the census. These remarks apply equally as well to half-breeds of different races, should it be desired to secure the number of such. The very greatest care should be exercised in the Eleventh Census to secure accurate information—as full as possible with the limitations of an enumeration—regarding the negro race. So many questions are arising that can only be answered by statistical information that this becomes a necessity. Whether the mulattoes, quadroons, and octoroons are disappearing and the race becoming more purely negro, is a question which can not be settled by observation. It must be settled by statistics, and the sooner such statistics are collected the better.

The census of 1890 can be the starting-point for a series of comparisons through subsequent decades. The ordinary statistics of the census will show, of course, whether the negroes are concentrating in certain localities or not, but in all these matters there needs to be no specific legislation, as the securing of the information is simply a matter of administration, and no Superintendent who has the best interests of his country at heart would neglect to provide the proper means for securing information upon such points. The census already secures the statistics of births and deaths for the census year, and the death-rate and birth-rate among pure whites, among negroes, and all the segregations can be ascertained through the processes of tabulation.

Wages, earnings, employment, etc.—You have very kindly sent me a copy of a memorial, which you presented December 17, 1888, of distinguished persons, who pray that in taking the Eleventh Census preparations may be made for a thorough examination of the condition of the industries of the country, of the employment and idleness of the people, of the tenures and amounts of the holdings of the lands of the nation by individuals, etc. Other memorialists will urge, I presume, that the census also take cognizance of the earnings and expenses of the people.

The schedules relating to the production of manufactures and of all productions exhibit, of course, the general condition of the industries of the country; but what is sought by the suggestions under consideration is to insert in the population schedule—that is, schedule No. 1 of the census—inquiries which shall develop the facts relating to the employment and the idleness of the people, their earnings and expenses, and kindred matters. In the census of 1880 the law required that this schedule should contain an inquiry as to whether the people were employed or unemployed, and if unemployed, during what portion of the year. This inquiry was incorporated in schedule No. 1 of the Tenth Census. So far as I know the attempt to secure the information called for was a failure, and no facts have ever been tabulated. In the census of 1885 for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts a like inquiry was incorporated, and the attempt to secure the information was fully successful. The difficulty in the matter lies in the feature of census-taking already alluded to relative to surviving soldiers, that the enumerator, in a large majority of cases, does not see the parties concerned. The addition of this one question adds a good deal to the labor of the enumerator.

I am satisfied that success could be secured if the enumerator could be induced to spend time enough, but with the large number of inquiries on schedule No. 1 concerning each individual of the population, he could not secure very complete information under this special question relating to the unemployed with his compensation left at 2 cents per capita, and it would be almost impossible for him, at any reasonable compensation, to secure the earnings and expenses of the people, because to secure such information the wife or daughter or other female member of the family, would be obliged to adjourn the interview until the information could be secured from the head of the family, and even then, as experience amply shows, it is almost impossible to secure the information as to earnings and expenses. The only way, in all the investigations, which have been made in this country for the past twenty years, that expenses and earnings could be secured was by special investigation, taking a long time with each individual, and oftentimes by securing bills of expenses, from which items could be obtained. Simple as it may seem, it is one of the most difficult features of statistical inquiry. It was attempted in my own State in 1875, and with only partial success, so far as census methods were concerned. To place an inquiry relating to earnings and expenses in schedule No. 1 would be to handicap the census in the start to such an extent as almost to insure failure. If any inquiry relating to the industrial condition of the people is to be inserted in schedule No. 1, it should be limited to the question as to employment, and even in this case some concession in the way of compensation should be made, if success is to be secured.

A census involving ramified information can be taken, and with success, if money enough is provided with which to carry it out, but to provide arbitrarily for the total expense of a census, and then to double the labor involved, is a process which will surely secure a failure in any census undertaking. The people demand extensive information at the present day, and properly, it seems to me, but this information, to be accurate and of any value whatever, should be practically complete in its elements, and to secure this completeness requires immense labor on the part of the parties to whom the task is committed. The enumerator is apt to be forgotten, and when his compensation is established at a per capita rate, it seems to be overlooked that every additional inquiry is made at the expense of the enumerator and not of the Government. Two cents per capita, with the inquiries already involved in schedule No. 1, is poor enough pay, and it is very difficult—and I speak from practical experience—to secure a good class of enumerators at this compensation. If, therefore, the duty is doubled, or even an increase of 10 per cent. in the duty involved, the possibility of securing faithful enumerators is decreased just so much.

The enumerator has the hardest time in census work, and it is only just that if his duties are to be increased 10 or 50 per cent. he should not be required to contribute this increase out of his poor pay, but that his compensation should be increased pro tanto. I remember in the census of 1880 that after having secured and appointed over 900 enumerators in the district which I had the honor to supervise, more than 100 promptly resigned on receiving their instructions; that is, as soon as they became aware of the immense amount of detail involved in their work, they declined to serve for the compensation provided.

Referring to your letter of the 27th and to your suggestion at its close, allow me to say that if there is anything in my experience which can be made available in adjusting the practical bearing of questions which may be suggested by experts in various relations to the requirements of actual enumeration, or in any direction, I shall be most happy to serve you.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT,
Commissioner.

HON. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on the Eleventh Census,
United States Senate.

AN INDUSTRIAL CENSUS THE GREAT NECESSITY.

The general election just closed having resulted in a national verdict in favor of protection, and the restoration of the Republican party to power after four years of Democratic administration, the old party of freedom is again placed in the position that calls for the exercise of the greatest wisdom in the protection of the free labor and industries of the people, and the promotion of national prosperity.

Though the Democratic party utterly failed in all its efforts to change the policy that had been pursued by Republican administrations during an unbroken period of twenty-four years (being the longest continuous term of any industrial policy under our Government), the developments under that policy challenge the scrutiny of the thoughtful and investigation by Government.

More than a hundred years ago Adam Smith, the father of modern economic science, declared that—

"It was not by gold, nor by silver, but by labor, that all the wealth of the world was originally created."

The fundamental condition of man's existence, as fixed by the Creator, is that he shall, all the days of his life, eat bread in the sweat of his face. And upon the tables of stone, graven by the finger of the Almighty, stands the command to labor as the first commandment concerning the material life. Hence it appears to be clear that a full knowledge of the conditions of the labor of the people is of the utmost importance.

In all ages of the world, as man has advanced from the savage to the civilized condition, labor has coincidently grown into practical recognition as the great factor in the production and development of all that gives man subsistence, comfort, wealth, and power.

And in the political discussion just closed the principle was broadly and sharply declared "that the question of labor underlies the whole subject; that it was in fact the entire question" then before the American people; but there was not the least attempt made to learn the actual condition of labor—whether the labor of the country was employed or idle, whether it was in prosperity or adversity, or dead or alive.

The great effort appeared to be to show that labor in our country was apparently better paid, in dollars and cents, than in Europe or Asia—to prove which endless comparisons were made. In doing this the condition and wages of those who were employed at exceptional rates, under the protection of trades unions and labor organizations, were taken for the time of their actual employment only—taking no account of the loss of time, whether of weeks or months, in which no labor was done or wages paid—and comparing the wages thus obtained with the wages paid to slaves and paupers of other lands. Such comparisons are worse than useless. They show nothing of the real condition of our workers—whether it be prosperous or miserable—only that a portion of the working men and women in the United States are less miserable than Asiatic and European workers in similar employments, and leaving the impression upon the general mind that nothing more can be desired.

The wages paid in foreign lands—whether high or low, or more or less than are paid in our own country—do not affect the welfare of our people except as they are brought into competition with them. A hungry man in the United States is not made less hungry by learning that in England there are workmen much nearer the point of starvation. No man's condition is made better by the discovery that multitudes in other lands are perishing for want of the barest necessaries of life.

It is the actual condition of our own people that we have to do with, irrespective of the condition of all others. It is the want of reliable official data of this matter, and its related interests, that makes any satisfactory determination of the labor problem so difficult; that divides the people on protection, and that lies at the root of all the industrial disturbances that agitate the country.

It was a keen appreciation of the necessities of the situation, ten years ago, that impelled me to prepare a memorial to Congress, praying that honorable body to make provision in the census bill, then under consideration, for an examination into the condition of the people, whether they are employed or unemployed, and of the amount of their employment or idleness. The memorial was presented to the Senate by the late honorable Senator David Davis, of Illinois, on the 28th of February, 1879. In presenting it the Senator said in part:

"These memorialists represent that multitudes of our people, popularly estimated by millions, are unemployed, and that this state of things demoralizes all our industrial interests, and calls upon Congress to ascertain the cause of the evil and its remedy. * * *

"They do not believe, nor do I, that the problem can be solved by any theory based on data not known to be reliable. What they want is authoritative information obtained by the Government to inform the people of their real condition, and on which to predicate wise legislation. Such information can be taken as a safe basis for reasoning on this important subject, and without it there can be no correct reasoning at all. * * *

"This memorial, I am informed, has three thousand one hundred and ninety-two names attached to it, representing sixteen States, from Massachusetts to Texas. * * * Then follows a long list of some of the best names in Massachusetts. Among these are the governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, treasurer, auditor, chief of the labor bureau, secretary of State charities, the mayors of Boston, Cambridge, Lynn, Lawrence, and Salem; ex-Governor Gaston, Judge Abbott, and Wendell Phillips; Professor Pierce, of Harvard College, and its librarian; the editors of all the daily and religious press of Boston, eminent clergymen of the city, the collector of the port, and representatives of more than one hundred of the mercantile, manufacturing, and commercial houses of Boston.

"It also bears the names of Smith Ely, the late mayor of New York, and George William Curtis, of that city; Mr. Corcoran and other distinguished citizens of Washington; the mayors of Baltimore, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Trenton, and business firms throughout the country. It is also signed by a large number of citizens, mechanics, and laboring men. Mr. Moody, in handing it to me for presentation in the Senate, happily observed that it was the joint prayer of culture, wealth, and labor.

"Whatever differences of opinion there may be, Mr. President, as to the cause of our labor difficulties, it is quite evident that the way out of them can not be found without the statistical information asked for, and that the requests contained in the petition are reasonable and entitled to the careful consideration of Congress. And I am happy to say that the Special Committee on the Census have taken action on some of the subjects embraced in the memorial."

Senator HOAR, of Massachusetts, also commended the objects of the memorialists in strong language, saying, as he closed his short address:

"I trust the honorable Senator from Illinois will be successful in getting the favorable attention of the Senate to a proposition which has failed to receive it heretofore."

The "action taken by the Special Committee on the Census," referred to by Senator Davis, was the incorporation into the seventh section of the census bill of a provision requiring that schedule No. I shall contain inquiries as to each person enumerated, "whether employed or unemployed, and if unemployed, during what portion of the year." The bill so amended became the law under which the census was taken; but the provision requiring the industrial enumeration was wholly disregarded in the Census Office, the schedule not being prepared with the requisite inquiries, and the reports of the office, so far as can be discovered, in no place giving the reason for the failure of the enumeration or referring to the matter in any way. When inquiries were made in the Census Office in 1884 for reports upon this matter, the officers in charge stated that no reports had been or would be made, and that it never was the intention of the Census Office to do so.

Thus a special law of Congress and the General Government was treated with contempt and altogether disregarded by the officials of a minor though important office. The memorialists, who were respectfully listened to and their prayer granted without a dissenting voice in either House, and approved by the President, were contemptuously denied what the Government had unanimously conceded, and the people were practically informed that their condition should not be inquired into and made known if the Census Office could prevent it.

The result is that the multitudes of unemployed tramps found in every city, town, and hamlet of our country, and upon every road, street, and by-way of the land, have never been enumerated. No attempt has been made to reach even an approximation of their number, and the census utterly fails to give any idea of the real number of our population or condition of the people.

Yet, notwithstanding the evident determination in the Census Office to exclude from the census returns all data bearing upon this all-important matter, page 703 of Population discloses the fact that 3,837,112 persons were occupied in manufactures and mining (being the industries that pay the highest wages and give the most constant employment), whilst pages 3 and 5 of Manufactures disclose the two additional facts that the total wages paid in those industries amounted to $947,953,795, and that the average number actually occupied amounted to only 2,732,595 persons.

With these facts before us we quickly discover that there was then an actual average idleness in those industries of more than 1,104,000 persons, "embracing, as they do, artisans of every class out of employment, temporarily disabled, or for some other reason not included in the actual return of any establishment," and that the average wages paid in those industries were 80 cents a day.

These disclosures reveal conditions that one would think were abundant reason for putting all the enginery of Government upon inquiry. But in place of inquiry, in the recent popular discussions it was fallaciously claimed by leading Republican journals that the average wages in those employments were nearly three times 80 cents a day for the whole number.

But for the thirteen and one-half millions engaged in other occupations there is not a particle of evidence as to their condition, but the false assumption of constant employment for all is everywhere apparent, notwithstanding the statement of there being "hundreds of thousands of persons out of health or out of employment."

Why is it that the people are denied a full knowledge of the simple facts in these most vital matters?

The census reports give 3,323,876 persons as being employed as agricultural laborers. The Republican papers in the late Presidential canvass everywhere assumed that these laborers were in constant employment and received an average of $16 a month. But my investigations compel the belief that their time of employment falls a long way inside of six months out of the twelve and their average wages far below $16 a month, or $96 per annum. And so the assumption runs through all industries. As a useful authority in these matters—an authority that may be relied on in an investigation of these great problems—the census reports, as they stand, are worse than useless.

Idleness and distress are everywhere. Hundreds and thousands of cotton and woolen mills, of iron and steel furnaces and rolling-mills, and producing establishments of silk, leather, rubber, of furniture and wooden ware, and every other industry, both great and small, that give employment to man, are standing idle, eaten by moth and rust and decaying for want of use, whilst the hundreds of thousands who not long since there found ample employment and remunerative wages are now idle, tramping, begging, or stealing the means of life.

The number of idle in the city of New York alone can not at any time fall below 100,000, and the mortality of destitution in that city, caused by these conditions, exceeds 25,000 per annum.

Surg. John S. Billings, in his report on the mortality and vital statistics of the United States, Census Reports, 1880, Vol. II, p. 19, says that—

"The agencies to which great differences in mortality between different locations are chiefly due are: (1) Poverty; (2) age distribution of the living population; (3) density of population; (4) race; (5) meteorological conditions; (6) epidemics."

Yet notwithstanding that poverty stands at the head of the causes of "great differences in mortality between different localities," it is nowhere by him considered in any of its relations, whilst all the minor and secondary causes are fully treated. In no other place can I find it even mentioned.

Why should the census of the United States fail to give the data here wanting to enable one to determine the comparative and absolute influence of both poverty and plenty upon human life? Authentic information on this point outweighs all other considerations.

The industrial evils found in the city of New York exist, to a perilous extent, in every city and town in our country, and it is from the industrial evils of society that all other evils are recruited.

If we go to the farms of the country we find great numbers, believed to be fully one-half of those known as small farms, mortgaged beyond hope of redemption, and their reputed owners afflicted by all the miseries accompanying hopeless debt, and within fifteen years after the close of the war more than one million of tenant farms were developed where, within the past ten years, are being enacted the tragedies of evictions and misery that have so long cursed Ireland.

But the evictions in our towns and cities far exceed in number those of the country. In New York City alone, during the year 1886, more than twenty thousand families were compelled to leave their homes, mainly because of the lack of work, sickness, and death, many of whom had their little and miserable belongings set out upon the street, not counting the two thousand who saw they had to go and left without force. Who can fathom the depths of misery, wretchedness, and desolation wrapped in this terrible record?

Do not these conditions cry aloud for investigation, and with a voice filled with menace? Yet they have been wholly the growth of the last quarter of a century and under Republican administrations, beginning with 1865, when the people of the North had just come out of the war, as Secretary McCulloch truly said, out of debt, and commenced a new era of industrial activity.

If the reasons for investigation had not one-tenth the magnitude here shown, they would still challenge the closest examination of the party under which they had developed.

The Republican party has won a great victory in the Presidential campaign just closed, solely because of the hope in the minds of the people that the difficulties and distresses of our industrial situation would be removed and the labor of the country be restored to the condition of prosperity formerly enjoyed. How can that be done if we persistently neglect and refuse to learn the facts of the situation?

A thoroughly industrial census is now of the utmost importance. The employment and idleness of the people must be inquired into; the condition of the farms and farmers must be examined, especially the small holdings; the nature of the holdings, their size, tenures, and liabilities; and the employment and condition of all producing establishments of every nature during the census year, and whatever is necessary to a full understanding of our industrial situation. But essays, whether technological or speculative, do not appear to be necessary to the inquiry.

The investigation, to be of value, must be national, and can be thoroughly made only through the agencies and machinery of the census, of which it properly forms a part. The cost of the census, including the investigation required, would not be 10 per cent. greater than it would be without it, but its value would be inestimably increased.

The census, as heretofore taken, gives few or no data upon which to base a national policy, and contains much that may be well omitted. But the facts required, if impartially and honestly obtained and presented, would be of greater value than dollars and cents can express.

Shall not the desire of the people, as voiced by the memorialists of ten years ago, and now re-enforced, be granted?

WM. GODWIN MOODY.

THE CHIEF ELEMENT OF THE "CONDITION WHICH CONFRONTS US"

Is the enormous amount of labor of which our wage-earners are robbed, and which is given to workers in other lands. The total amount that is paid to foreign producers for foreign products—products which we might and should produce at home—taking into account the undervaluation so notoriously common, can not be less than $600,000,000 per annum.

Every $200 of that amount represents at least one man or woman in Europe or Asia—or the total amount represents at least three million workers in foreign lands—who are in constant employment at their highest average rates of wages, and to whom we annually pay these $600,000,000 for their products; and also represents three million operatives in the United States who, by reason of that foreign employment, have been forced into idleness—not solely from the special occupations that appear to give the competing labor abroad, but from any and all related employments—and who are constantly without work and suffering all the miseries of the extremest poverty, with pauper graves at the close.

When the related fact is taken into consideration that every adult laborer, whether employed or idle, in the order of nature has, on an average, at least two dependent upon him or her for subsistence, it is seen that a total of nearly ten millions of our own people are thus made destitute by the monstrous iniquity and conspiracy against humanity by which the ends of free trade are sought, and the horrible tragedies that wait upon its consummation begin to be only too apparent.

The wrecks of thousands of idle and half employed mills, factories, furnaces, and producing establishments of every nature with which the face of our country is strewn, and the rapid and continued development of the ills here pointed out, are also elements in the condition of the greatest moment and inseparable from the case.

To feed the millions of foreign workers who labor for us abroad we are constantly sending vast amounts of provisions, and in great variety. Ships are daily freighted with wheat and corn and flour and meat in the greatest abundance, that are snatched from the mouths of our idle millions at home and sent to other lands that the foreigner may have plenty, whilst our own unemployed are left to fight their battles with gaunt hunger as best they can.

The literal fact is that fully four-fifths of our entire exports are for the support of the cheap labor and machinery we employ in foreign lands, and for the benefit of the slaveholders and capitalists who control both.

These are the simple elements of the present condition stripped of the garnishments that have hidden these monstrous wrongs from the scale-covered eyes of the people. Must we wait for a social earthquake to shatter these scales and open our eyes? No amount of sophistry or equivocation can change the facts or the logic of their results.

The simple and inevitable deductions from these facts are, that when we do at home the labor that is done for us abroad, millions of those who are now but half employed, or wholly idle, will find werk. The now silent wrecks of half-employed and idle producing establishments will become active and musical with the hum of life. The $600,000,000 now paid for foreign labor, together with the, $300,000,000 paid for duties, transportation, and other expenses—a total of at least $900,000,000 per annum—will be paid to our home industries and the people therein employed, and the ship-loads of goods now stolen from our idle and hungry workers to feed to the slaves and paupers of other lands will be kept at home, and our own people will be made glad with the possession of abundance.

The old conspiracy of the rebel slave power and British pirates of twenty-five years ago for the destruction of our merchant marine, in which they succeeded only too well, and which is again active in the cause of "free trade" and "labor reform," which means the wiping out of our domestic industries and home trade, for the special benefit of foreign producers and foreign trade, will be finally broken, and the annual domestic record of tens of thousands of business failures will again become a record of hundreds only, as they were during the last three years of the first Republican administration.

How can these great wrongs be remedied if we persistently neglect and refuse to take their measure and accurately ascertain their weight, that all may see the facts and understand their relations? The decennial census now close upon us affords the desired opportunity and machinery to gain all the required data, and they can be gathered in no other way.

Shall not the opportunity be embraced?

WM. GODWIN MOODY.

EDUCATIONAL STATISTICS.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE, New York, March 15, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to your request I take pleasure in submitting herewith a detailed schedule of the questions which, in my judgment, should be covered by the educational portion of the Eleventh Census. I have made the schedule as compact and yet as comprehensive as possible. The questions asked are those which it is absolutely necessary to answer in order that our educational condition may be compared with that of the various European countries. France and Germany have long had an elaborate system of educational statistics, and while the inquiries proposed on my schedule are not so voluminous as those made abroad, yet they will answer all practical purposes. I shall be very glad to offer any explanations of the schedule that may seem to you necessary, as well as to afford you and the committee all the assistance in my power in their task of arriving at a suitable form of educational schedule. If it should be necessary at any time to appear before the committee I should be glad to do that also.

I am, with great respect, very truly, yours,

NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Detailed schedule of questions.

I.—ENUMERATION OF SCHOOLS (PUBLIC).

III.—BUILDINGS AND SITTINGS.

a. Number of public school buildings.
b. Number of public school sittings.
c. Number of private school buildings.
d. Number of private school sittings.

IV.—VALUATION OF SCHOOL PROPERTY.

a. Public.
b. Private.

V.—RECEIPTS (PUBLIC).

a. From State and county funds.
b. From city and township funds.
c. From all other sources.

VI.—EXPENDITURES.

a. For teachers' salaries.
b. For buildings and grounds (during census year).
c. For maintenance.
d. For all other purposes.

VII.—TEACHERS.

a. Total number.
b. Male, white.
c. Female, white.
d. Colored, male.
e. Colored, female.
f. Having normal or professional training.

VIII.—SALARIES OF TEACHERS.

a. Total.
b. Average monthly for males.
c. Average monthly for females.

IX.—NORMAL SCHOOLS.

a. Total.
b. Number of teachers employed in.
c. Number of students in:
   - Male.
   - Female.

a. Total number between 6 and 14 years inclusive:
   1. Male.
   2. Female.

X.—PUPILS.

b. Total enrolled during census year:
   1. White, male.
   2. White, female.
   3. Colored, male.
   4. Colored, female.

c. Average attendance during census year.

XI.—ILLITERACY.

a. Number of persons over ten years of age.
b. Number of persons over ten years of age unable to read.
c. Number of persons over ten years of age unable to write.
d. Number of persons over ten years of age unable either to read or write.
e. Number of foreign born over ten unable to read, write, or read and write.
f. Number of colored over ten unable to read, write, or read and write.

ENUMERATION OF SURVIVING VETERANS OF THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER,
Washington, D. C., July 26, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to ask your attention to a motion recently made by Mr. ATKINSON in the House of Representatives, looking to the enumeration of those who served in the war of the rebellion. Mr. ATKINSON has called upon me in regard thereto and desires that I shall submit the matter to you.

The point made by Mr. ATKINSON is that it would be very desirable if in the enumeration of the population of the country the company and regiment, date of muster-in and term of service of each surviving soldier and sailor who bore arms for the United States during any of our recent wars should be taken.

I have a division in this bureau whose chief work is to gather statistical information of this description for the purpose of proving or disproving claims presented in this office. The doing of this work in the Census Office would obviate the necessity for the existence of a division of the present size as that of the Army and Navy survivors' division, for that work, and would be of manifest benefit to the service of the Bureau of Pensions.

Mr. ATKINSON says that objection was made on account of the additional cost. The preparation of blanks would cost something additional, but I see no reason why any further cost need attach to the work until it shall reach the Census Bureau; and then only for the clerical labor involved in the compilation of the information to be furnished. Properly prepared blanks would enable the census enumerator to, in every case, register whether a man had been in the service, and, if so, when, and in what organization, and for how long.

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
United States Senate.

[Senate Mis. Doc. No. 26, Fiftieth Congress, second session.]

Memorial of Henry Hall, of New York, urging legislation that shall incorporate in the next census provisions for taking a complete enumeration of the surviving veterans of the war of the rebellion, including names, age, residence, length of service, and the commands in which they served.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE, New York, December 24, 1888.

SIR: In compliance with your request, a few suggestions are herewith submitted concerning a census of Union veterans in 1890. The proposition is that the enumeration shall record name, age, residence, length of service, and command in which the veteran served in each case.

1. This census is desirable, in the first place, because it will supply the material for computing the cost of a service-pension. There is a widespread feeling among veterans, and among many civilians who sympathize with them and know their needs and sacrifices, that the Government should grant a service-pension to every Union veteran. A long discussion has taken place at public meetings and encampments of the Grand Army of the Republic, and in the public newspapers, and various plans for a service-pension have been proposed and debated at great length. Several of the plans aim to grade the pension according to length of service. Others look to the payment of a specified sum per month, and others to the payment of a pension to all veterans on arriving at a certain age.

There has been an utter lack of material for calculating closely the cost of any of the different plans. Various estimates have been made, but none of them are accurate enough to guide either the veterans and their friends in formulating their appeals or the law-making power in responding to them. You will see that no safe comparison of plans can be made without knowing the total number of surviving veterans and the age and length of service of each.

2. Name, residence, and regiments or command in which they served are necessary for the perfection of a complete directory of all surviving Union veterans. Every one who has had anything to do with pensions under existing laws knows how comrades have lost sight of each other since the war. In a vast number of cases neither even knows if his comrade is living. Those who are applying for a disability, parent's, or widow's pension experience the greatest difficulty in finding the addresses of comrades whose testimony is necessary to the establishment of their claims. Probably more than 250,000 claims have been rejected or are lingering unadjudicated in the Pension Office because of the lack of testimony of witnesses who are living but can not be found. To meet this difficulty the Pension Office has been striving for years, with much labor and expense, to collect the addresses of all living veterans. The office has succeeded only in part. In no other way than by an enumeration as proposed can that list be perfected. The census can complete this work, and by so doing lighten the labor of adjudicating a pension claim and shorten the long and weary waiting of applicants.

3. The facts, when collected, will have great scientific value. There are many reasons for believing that every Union soldier came out of the war with vitality seriously impaired. Some of the soldiers, on their return from the field, believed that they had been benefited and invigorated by the service. But in the majority of cases, especially among the long-service men, the veterans appear to be more liable to disease, less able to work, and obliged to retire earlier from business than men of the same age who staid a home. The census can not go into the question of greater liability to disease, but by ascertaining present age and length of service of survivors, conclusions can be reached as to the effect of army service on length of life. Should the census prove that life is not shortened unless the man contracts wounds or specific disease, the Government will in future wars obtain volunteers easier than it can now, with incorrect ideas on this subject prevalent among the people. Should the contrary be proved, the obligations of the Government to its veterans will be placed in a clearer light.

4. So far as a census of Confederate veterans is concerned, the facts, when obtained, would be as interesting to students of biology and historians as those relating to Union veterans. They would have no other practical value.

The expense of the special enumeration here proposed is a trifling matter compared with the importance of the information sought.

The enumeration would form a basis for future comparisons. It is presumed that in 1900 a similar census would be desirable.

The proposed census in 1890 meets with the hearty approval of every veteran in the country. No reason is known why it should not be heartily commended by the public at large. Inquiries have been made by a number of officials of the Grand Army of the Republic and by myself, and there is no doubt that the enumeration will meet a public want, provided it is done thoroughly and accurately. The inquiry should be broad enough in its scope to answer all the objects in view; and imperative instructions should be given to the enumerators to obtain full and correct information on every point. Half-way work would be a waste of money.

Yours, very respectfully,

HENRY HALL,
Business Superintendent.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Census, United States Senate.

NATIONAL HOTEL, May 2, 1888.

DEAR SIR: As a member of the executive council of the State of New Hampshire, I have had to do with a matter which I desire to call to the attention of the committee having charge of the bill to regulate the taking of the Eleventh Census.

Many of the States have undertaken the revision and correction of the record of their soldiers and sailors in the war of the rebellion, which, in the hurry and confusion of the time, became very inaccurate and incomplete in the State archives. Several of the States, acting on plans quite various in method and scope, have also undertaken to supplement these published records, with statements of the present residences of surviving soldiers and sailors.

The State of New Hampshire with its revision of the official records has attempted to ascertain and give (1) the present residence or post-office address of every veteran of New Hampshire service, and (2) the date and place of decease of every one dying since the war.

Two considerations naturally arise: (1) The fragmentary character of such a work by an individual State, even if it could be made measurably complete as to the men of that State, and (2) the impossibility of approximating a perfect work by local effort in this direction, owing to the scattering of the men all over the Union in twenty-five years' time, and the impracticability of extraterritorial work by State officials; and these difficulties have been found insuperable in an actual trial by my own State, whose contribution of men—about 33,000—was small in number as compared with most of the other States.

The value of such a work, however, when made national in extent, for historical and statistical purposes, is apparent, and does not call for argument in this communication.

The War Department, the Pension Bureau, and the adjutant-generals of States are subject to incessant calls for this information, and they are, except in isolated cases, unable to furnish it.

This class of information is of special value to all who are engaged in the compilation of war history, and particularly to those who have undertaken to prepare the histories of towns, counties, regiments, and similar organizations into which personal data largely enter; and it will be of manifest aid in dealing with questions of a social nature, which have arisen out of the changed conditions of population, caused by the war.

It may be added that there are many thousand cases now pending in the Pension Bureau which are at a stand-still because the location of witnesses, supposed to have evidentiary information, can not be ascertained by the methods now available. It is a matter of importance both to the Government and to the claimant that all reasonable means be employed and facilities provided to clear this enormous docket.

In view of the fact that the work proposed can not be done economically, uniformly, or with any satisfactroy degree of completeness or efficiency by the States, acting separately, and of its importance and value, and of the necessity for its early and comprehensive prosecution, in order to avoid the inevitable losses of material resulting from delay, I suggest that the census enumerators be required by the law to ascertain and record the name of every survivor of the military or naval service, both volunteers and regulars, and the date and place of death of those deceased since the war, by inquiry of every party from whom information is sought in the primary enumeration.

I see no reason why the same information should not be gathered as to those engaged in the Confederate service.

In the work of enumeration the expense of the proposed feature would be trifling.

The subsequent arrangement of the materials so gathered, with reference to States or to regimental and similar organizations or otherwise and its thorough indexing and publication in a separate volume, would of course give rise to items of expense to be considered in comparison with the value of the work.

I have written a similar communication to the chairman of the House committee, and I respectfully ask such consideration of the subject as you may fairly give it in connection with other features of the next census.

Very respectfully, yours,

A. S. BATCHELLOR, Littleton, N. H.

Chairman Committee on Census, United States Senate.

THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
QUARTERMASTER'S-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Concord, N. H., May 28, 1888.

DEAR SIR: At the suggestion of the Hon. A. S. Batchellor, of the governor's executive council, I have the honor to inclose copies of the several laws in relation to correcting and publishing the record of soldiers and sailors for the State of New Hampshire, and to respectfully call your attention to the requirements of the same.

You will notice the adjutant-general is required by the act of July 23, 1885, to give the present residences of the living veterans and the dates and places of death of those who have died since the war. By enforcing the provisions of the act of August 28, 1885, it is hoped that we shall get the residences of most of the soldiers who now reside in this State, but a large percentage of New Hampshire soldiers have left the State since the close of the war and are scattered over the entire Union, and it is a formidable undertaking to attempt to get the required information concerning them.

I can see no way to get the information and to locate the surviving veterans except by the aid of such legislation as I am informed is proposed as a feature of the census. I hope to get some valuable data of this character outside the State through volunteer aid, but am well aware that much is beyond the reach of State effort, however well directed it may be, and whatever success might be attained by a single State would only serve to show the value of a comprehensive effort by national authority on a national plan.

My own personal experience for the past eight years has shown me the importance of the information, which can only be obtained in the way proposed. I am constantly receiving applications from veterans, their wives or relatives; and from historians of companies, regiments, or towns, for information which is vital to the success of their claims or their histories, and which under present conditions it is simply impossible to furnish.

With the hope that the plan proposed by Counselor Bachellor may meet with your approval and may become a law, I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. D. AYLING, Adjutant-General.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

An act to provide for the publication of a record of New Hampshire soldiers and sailors in the war of the rebellion.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives in general court convened:

SECTION 1. That the adjutant-general shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, under the direction of the governor and council, prepare and publish a record of all soldiers and sailors who served in the war of the rebellion from the State of New Hampshire, such record to contain the name, residence, date of enlistment, to what city or town assigned, date of muster in, rank, promotions, wounds received, date of discharge, muster out, or death, date, and place of death since discharge, or present residence, and such other facts as shall make the same as far as practicable a complete and concise military record of each soldier or sailor so serving; and for this purpose the adjutant-general is authorized to employ such clerical assistance as may be necessary.

SEC. 2. Two thousand copies of said record shall be printed by the State printer and distributed as follows, namely: One copy to each city and town in the State, one copy to each public library in the State, one copy to each post of the Grand Army of the Republic in the State, fifty copies to the New Hampshire Historical Society, and the remainder to be placed in the custody of the trustees of the State library, who are hereby authorized to exchange the same for similar publications by other States, and to dispose of the same at cost of paper, printing, and binding.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act a sum not exceeding $1,200 is hereby appropriated annually for two years, commencing September 1, 1885, to be expended under the direction of the governor and council, and the governor is hereby authorized to draw his warrant on the State treasurer for the said amount.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

Approved July 23, 1885.

An act in aid of an act to provide for the publication of a record of New Hampshire soldiers and sailors in the war of the rebellion.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives in general court convened:

SECTION 1. The selectmen or assessors of each town and city shall, at the same time they distribute the blank inventories for the assessment of taxes for the year 1886, also distribute such blanks as may be seasonably provided by the adjutant-general for the purpose of collecting the information required by the provisions of the act to provide for the publication of a record of New Hampshire soldiers and sailors in the war of the rebellion, approved July 23, 1885, and every person having such information shall make answer in writing, so far as possible, to such questions as may be in such blanks, and the same shall be returned and delivered to said selectmen or assessors before the 15th day of April, or as provided by law for the return of inventories of taxable property. The papers returned to the selectmen or assessors under the provisions of this act shall be returned to the office of the adjutant-general by them within thirty days after said 15th day of April.

SEC. 2. Any officer or person violating the provisions of this act shall be subject to a fine of $50 for each offense, to be recovered in an action of debt by the adjutant-general, and all sums of money so recovered shall be applied in carrying out the provisions of said act of July 23, 1885.

Approved August 18, 1885.

An act in aid of chapters 12 and 75 of the session laws of 1885, to provide for a record of the New Hampshire soldiers and sailors in the war of the rebellion.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives in general court convened:

SECTION 1. The record of the soldiers and sailors of this State, to be compiled under the authority of said acts by the adjutant-general, shall contain a statement of the number of men required and the number furnished for the war of the rebellion by each town in the State under each call; and said record shall also contain the names of all men recruited under the first call in 1861 for three months, whether they were organized into the first regiment of volunteers, mustered out of service without being sent out of the State, or were re-enlisted for a longer term of service. Selectmen of towns and the mayors of cities shall cause such information concerning soldiers and sailors who are or have been residents of their respective towns and cities, as may be required for the purposes of this act, and of the acts of which this is an amendment, to be collected and forwarded to the adjutant-general, subject to such penalties for default as are provided in said chapter 75 of the laws of 1885.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of the continuation of the work required by said acts a sum not exceeding $1,500 is hereby appropriated annually for two years, commencing September 1, 1887, to be expended under the direction of the governor and council, and the governor is hereby authorized to draw his warrant on the State treasurer for the said amount.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

Approved August 24, 1887.

HEADQUARTERS NEW HAMPSHIRE VETERANS' ASSOCIATION,
Weirs, N. H., July 30, 1888.

Hon. EUGENE HALE, United States Senate:

As president of our veterans' association and deeply interested in the cause of my comrades, living or dead, I address you in behalf of a matter which, I understand, has been placed before each of the Congressional committees on the next census, and ask for it your careful consideration and, if possible, your valuable aid.

It is a proposition that in the taking of the next census the enumerators be required by the law to ascertain and record the name and post-office address of every survivor of the military or naval service, both volunteers and regulars, and the date and place of death of those deceased since the war, by inquiry of every family, and in the same manner in which the other important information is obtained in the primary enumeration. Several of the States are seeking to do this; but it is difficult work, and if it can be made general, as now proposed, it would not only be most valuable to every State, but of special value and assistance in the War Department and the Pension Office, where this information is constantly being sought. Can there be any better way to obtain and preserve this important information, and at comparatively no extra expense?

Most respectfully, yours,

A. S. TWITCHELL, President.

STATISTICS OF RECORDED INDEBTEDNESS.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., May 9, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your verbal request as to methods which might be adopted in the Eleventh Census for the collection of the statistics of indebtedness of record other than public indebtedness, I have the honor to submit the following statement.

The statistics of the indebtedness of individuals, whether the same be in the form of mortgages or debts otherwise secured or general indebtedness through notes and bills payable, would constitute one of the most valuable lines of information that could possibly be collected.

There are three methods which naturally suggest themselves to one's mind for the collection of such data.

First. Through the population schedules of the census, by an inquiry directed to the head of every family or individual, responsible for any business transaction. This would include all farmers, business men, and others owning houses or having the care of families, or in any way individualy responsible to the public. The addition of the proper inquiries to secure this information to the population schedule would involve great expense, probably increasing the cost of the enumeration proper from one-third to one-half; that is, adding from $800,000 to $1,000,000 to the expense of the enumeration.

On the other hand, the addition of proper inquiries to the population schedule would antagonize the census, so far as the enumeration is concerned, before it commenced, and the enumerators would be handicapped from the start. The success of any enumeration depends very largely upon the good-will of the public and the willingness of persons to comply with the reasonable request of the Government for information concerning their affairs. All inquiries, however, regarding the financial condition of the people have heretofore been met with great opposition, and undoubtedly would be again, although should such inquiries be added to the population schedule it is safe to say that from 10 to 15 per cent., judging from past experience in such matters, would comply with the request of the Government and furnish the information relative to their indebtedness. Of course this indebtedness should be in connection with the value of the property owned by the individuals furnishing information. Such a canvass, therefore, would have for its result partial success in certain directions, at great expense, and a damaging influence upon the whole census enumerations, both as to population and manufacturers, as well as agriculture.

Considering the expense and the general injury to the work of the census, this method hardly seems advisable.

Second. The collection of the facts relating to recorded indebtedness, meaning thereby all chattel and real estate mortgages, which are the subjects of record from the records themselves. Chattel mortgages are usually recorded in municipal records, while real-estate mortgages are usually extended on the records kept at county seats. If real-estate mortgages only were to be considered, the registers of deeds in all the counties of the United States would have to be visited and the records thoroughly compiled. There are, in round numbers, 2,700 counties in the United States. To collect the information regarding mortgages recorded in these counties could not cost less than $40 per county, or a total of $108,000. I think it would be quite impossible to do it for this sum, because, in order to secure any information that would be of value and which would lead to any just conclusions, the records would have to be searched for a series of years, and all mortgages minuted with reference to the assessed valuation of the towns or townships or of the whole county in each case.

The proper sum of estimate for this work, confined entirely to county records, would be $200,000. It would be quite impossible to collect the information from the municipal records, so far as chattel mortgages are concerned, without either visiting every municipal government in the United States, or corresponding with the proper officer in each municipal government, to secure the information, in which latter case compensation would have to be given. It is safe to assume that the expense in securing the indebtedness under chattel mortgages by this method would be far greater than by securing it through the population enumeration. Even if the expense of securing the information relating to indebtedness through records was not objectionable on account of expense, there are obstacles in the way which render such a method unadvisable. The records of mortgages would, in all cases, give the amount of the original mortgage debt; but, as a rule, payments on the original mortgage debt are not made matters of record. So, where a man had given a mortgage on his place of $10,000, and had paid, say, $9,000 in part liquidation thereof, the indebtedness would still stand on record at $10,000; so the facts, or rather the results of any collection of data from records, would lead to vicious conclusions.

This second method, however, would relieve the census of all antagonism through the inquiry into the financial affairs of individuals.

Third. The employment of specially qualified experts to collect the information desired from representative communities; such collection to be made subsequent to and independent of the enumeration of the people in general. This method is free from objection in every direction except that of expense. It would not antagonize the public in any way, but it would lead to the most valuable results; that is, it would give the valuation and indebtedness thereon to such extent as the appropriation made for it might warrant. It would not give the facts for every farm and every property-holder in the United States, but it would give the facts for representative towns or counties, and by selecting counties the information might be collected so as to show the property value of each holding, and the indebtedness thereon, as originally made and shown through the registry of deeds, further information being sought as to the payments in part liquidation of the recorded debt.

This method seems the most feasible and the most desirable, taking all things into consideration. With an appropriation of $200,000 or $250,000 a very general idea of the indebtedness of the country might be gained; certainly it would be approximately correct so far as it went. If Congress saw fit to carry the matter still further it would be merely a question of money; but to make any reasonable correction, on which any fair or just conclusions could be based, the sum named should be appropriated in addition to that named in your bill for the general purposes of the census. That is to say, if Congress desires to have the facts for representative districts or localities regarding recorded indebtedness collected, it should make an extra appropriation for census purposes of at least $250,000.

Trusting I have covered the points named by you,

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT,
Commissioner.

NATIONAL BOARD OF TRADE, Scranton, Pa., July 23, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to inclose a circular to which I hope you will receive responses. I find that I do not misjudge or misrepresent a general sentiment when I express my belief that the House committee report of the rejected clause was acceptable and desired. I have had some familiarity with this sentiment for years past, and I am thoroughly convinced that the sentiment is deeper and stronger than will be credited on sight, because expression on the subject is tardy.

By all means reinsert the claim, and I believe the House may also reconsider when it goes back to them.

Very truly,

J. A. PRICE, Chairman.

Hon. EUGENE HALE, Washington.

NATIONAL BOARD OF TRADE, Scranton, Pa., July 19, 1888.

GENTLEMEN: The following clause in the proposed enactment for the incorporation of the Eleventh Census, now before Congress, in reference to the "recorded indebtedness of the people," was favorably reported by the Census Committee of the House of Representatives (Hon. S. S. Cox, New York, chairman) and rejected:

"He shall also, at the time of the general enumeration herein provided for, or prior thereto, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, collect the statistics of and relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people, and make report thereon to Congress; but the amount expended for the collection of such statistics of indebtedness shall not exceed the sum of $250,000, which is hereby appropriated, and shall be immediately available in addition to the $6,000,000 appropriated in section 20 of this act."

The bill as amended will now go to the Senate. The clause stricken out by the House ought to be reinserted. Hon. EUGENE HALE is the chairman of the Senate Census Committee, and if you approve the reinsertion of so important a clause as that rejected in reference to a knowledge of private indebtedness, please communicate at once with the honorable Senator, and with every member with whom you may be acquainted, either in the Senate or the House, urging the reinstatement.

Too much importance can not be placed upon this measure. It is a vital topic of the day. The people need information and have a right to expect it. No one can reasonably oppose this measure except those who are interested in swelling indebtedness and debilitating our institutions.

It is only objected that there are difficulties in the way of collecting the statistics. This is to be expected, yet the approximate information that we shall obtain is vastly better than none. It will lead to a knowledge that is becoming absolutely essential, if we are ever to escape the threatening conditions induced by overindulgence in credit.

Whatever favor you can extend is forcibly demanded by the urgent situation, and immediate action only will avail at the present time. Let your communications go forward without delay.

Hastily and respectfully,

J. A. PRICE,
Chairman National Board of Trade Committee on the Credit System.

MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE OF ST. LOUIS, St. Louis, July 30, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In response to the accompanying circular [referring to the circular of the National Board of Trade, signed by J. A. Price, chairman of committee on credit system], the board of directors of this exchange this day approved the reinsertion in the census bill of the clause in reference to collecting the statistics relating to the indebtedness of the people, and respectfully request you to lay this petition before your committee.

Yours, respectfully,

GEORGE H. MORGAN, Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Senate Census Committee.

MANKATO BOARD OF TRADE, Mankato, Minn., July 23, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was unanimously adopted by this board: "Resolved (as the sense of this board of trade), That the clause providing for taking the recorded indebtedness of the people, which was stricken from the bill pending in Congress for taking the Eleventh Census, ought to be reinstated, as we deem such information of great public value."

Yours, truly,

CHARLES A. CHARMAN, Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Senate Census Committee.

CINCINNATI, July 30, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The House of Representatives rejected a clause in the census bill which provided "for the collection of statistics of and relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people."

The clause is regarded as a very important one. It originated with a committee of the National Board of Trade, to which was referred questions pertaining to indebtedness.

It is desired that the Senate restore the rejected clause, at least in substance, and I take the liberty of asking your kind attention to the matter, and, if you are not opposed to the clause, that you favor the committee with your aid to that end. I am sure you will find that the undertakings of the committee of the National Board of Trade in this matter are of much consequence, and the results of its labor likely to be not only useful but interesting to a student of political economy.

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. GANO.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION, Albany, N. Y., July 25, 1888.

DEAR SIR: As secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of the State of New York and in behalf of that organization I make as strong a plea as possible that the clause stricken out by the House in the bill for the Eleventh Census be reinserted by the Senate.

If I had the time and could spare the funds I would ask for a hearing before your committee. No one in this State has more practical knowledge as to the indebtedness of people to the retail merchants of this State than I have. Every month thousands upon thousands of dollars in the shape of debts pass before me, and the total is amazing.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON DEXTER,
General Manager.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,

CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION OF CHICAGO, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
August 1, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The executive committee of this association have directed us to communicate to you their approval of the reinsertion in the Eleventh Census bill of the clause rejected by the House of Representatives in words as follows: "He shall also, at the time of the general enumeration herein provided for, or prior thereto, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, collect the statistics of and relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people, and make report thereon to Congress; but the amount expended for the collection of such statistics of indebtedness shall not exceed the sum of $250,000, which is hereby appropriated, and shall be immediately available, in addition to the $6,000,000 appropriated in section 20 of this act."

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STOVE MANUFACTURERS,
Chicago, Ill., July 26, 1888.

DEAR SIR: When the bill providing for the Eleventh Census was reported to the House of Representatives by its Census Committee it contained the following clause:

"He shall also, at the time of the general enumeration herein provided for, or prior thereto, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, collect the statistics of and relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people and make report thereon to Congress; but the amount expended for the collection of such statistics of indebtedness shall not exceed the sum of $250,000, which is hereby appropriated, and shall be immediately available, in addition to the $6,000,000 appropriated in section 20 of this act."

But the House rejected this and passed the bill without it. Deeming it of great importance that the indebtedness of the country shall be ascertained and published, at all events as nearly as possible, and believing that statistics upon this point will be of much more than sufficient value to warrant the expenditure of both the time and money necessary to procure them, on behalf of the stove manufacturers of the United States, representing commerce to the extent of $50,000,000 annually, I respectfully urge that you, as chairman of the Senate Census Committee, use your powerful influence to have the clause reinstated and enacted by the Senate, and finally incorporated in the bill.

Yours, respectfully,

D. M. THOMAS,
General Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Census Committee, United States Senate.

BUREAU OF LABOR AND INDUSTRIAL STATISTICS,
Madison, Wis., August 3, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: The following clause in the proposed enactment for the incorporation of the Eleventh Census now before Congress, in reference to the "recorded indebtedness of people," was favorably reported by the Census Committee of the House of Representatives (Hon. S. S. COX, of New York, chairman) and rejected:

"He shall also, at the time of the general enumeration herein provided for, or prior thereto, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, collect of and relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people, and make report therein to Congress; but the amount expended for the collection of statistics of such indebtedness shall not exceed the sum of $250,000, which is hereby appropriated, and shall be immediately available, in addition to the six millions in section 20 of this act."

The bill as amended will now go to Senate. The clause stricken out by the House ought to be reinserted.

Very respectfully, yours,

FRANK A. FLOWER.

Hon. EUGENE HALE, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR,
Lansing, Mich., July 25, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to trespass upon your valuable time for the purpose of calling your attention to a clause in the proposed measure for the incorporation of the Eleventh Census, which was favorably reported by the Census Committee of the House (Hon. S. S. COX, New York, chairman) and rejected, which provided for the collecting of statistics of the recorded indebtedness of the people of the several States.

As this measure now goes to the Senate and will be referred to the committee of which you are chairman, I have the honor to request that your committee re-insert the clause stricken out by the House, and make provision for obtaining the information therein provided for. The question is one in which the people are taking a deep interest. They want that information, and there is no doubt it would result in great good, inasmuch as it would tend to show to what extent the present tendency to speculation and overindulgence in credit is carried.

Such an item of information will be widely appreciated, and is becoming highly necessary to the stability of investments and commercial transactions.

Trusting that you and the Census Committee of the Senate will give this matter a favorable consideration,

I am, very respectfully,

A. H. HEATH.

Hon. EUGENE HALE, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF BOSTON FISH BUREAU, Boston, July 23, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I am instructed by our association to say that we approve the reinsertion of the clause that has been rejected in the proposed enactment for the incorporation of the Eleventh Census, now before Congress, in reference to a knowledge of private indebtedness.

Such an important clause ought to be re-inserted.

Very truly, yours,

F. F. DIMICK, Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE, Washington, D. C.

JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY, Baltimore, Md., July 30, 1888.

DEAR SIR: It seems to me important that an effort should be made to ascertain the recorded indebtedness of the people of the United States, and I wish to urge the reinstatement of the clause in reference thereto which was dropped from the census bill by the House of Representatives.

Yours, truly,

RICHARD T. ELY,
Associate Professor of Political Economy,
Member of the International Statistical Institute.

Hon. EUGENE HALE.

BOSTON MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION, Boston, July 21, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to express the hope that you will be able in the Senate to restore that clause in the proposed bill for the Eleventh Census which provides for the collection of statistics relating to the recorded indebtedness of our people, and which the House rejected. At this stage of affairs in our country it would seem as if information of this sort would be exceedingly valuable. The "credit system" has done wonderful things to develop the growth and promote the general good of this great sisterhood of States; but the time has come when we need to know more of the real and present and relative worth of the States, and if any of them are pursuing a reckless course either as Commonwealths or as peoples. Publicity will prove a wholesome restraint and a wise safeguard.

It is, of course, a new departure for the Census Bureau to make, but that is just what Mr. Wright is equal to and would no doubt heartily approve and enjoy

With great respect, your servant,

JNO. A. LANE,
President of the Boston Merchants' Association and Member of the Committee on the Credit System of the National Board of Trade.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Census Committee, United States Senate.

DEFECTIVE CLASSES.

1336 NINETEENTH STREET, WASHINGTON, D. C., December 28, 1888.

DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with your recommendation, I beg to submit a few suggestions relating to the Eleventh Census of the United States, and relating specially to the enumeration of the defective classes.

Yours, very respectfully,

ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL.

Senator EUGENE HALE,
Chairman of Census Committee of the United States Senate.

SUGGESTIONS RELATING TO THE ELEVENTH CENSUS OF THE UNITED STATES, 1890—INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

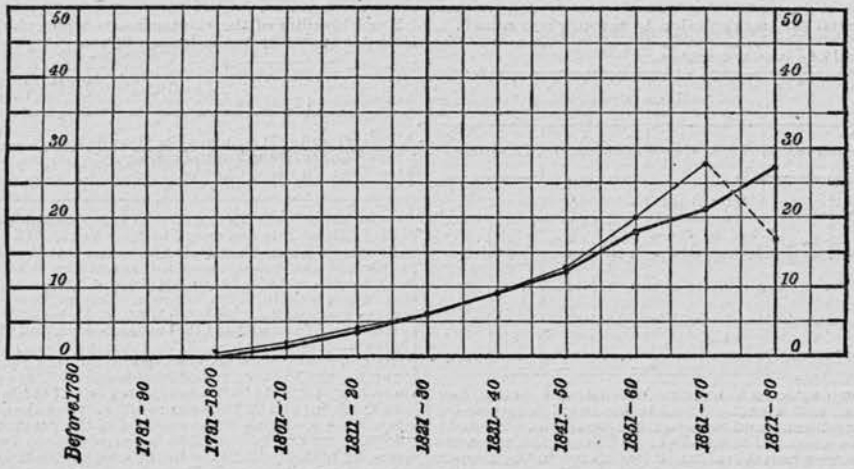
1. According to the census returns, the defective classes have increased 400 per cent. in thirty years, while the general population of the country has simply doubled.

The following table shows the relative figures at each census since 1850:

Years.	Total population of the United States.	Total blind population.	Total deaf and dumb population.	Total idiotic population.	Total insane population.
1850	23,191,876	9,794	9,803	15,787	15,610
1860	31,443,321	12,658	12,821	18,930	24,042
1870	38,558,371	20,320	16,205	24,527	37,432
1880	50,155,783	48,928	33,878	76,895	91,997

2. I have examined with care the statistics of the Tenth Census relating to the deaf and dumb, and find internal evidence to show that in their case there has been a real increase greater than the increase of the general population, and not simply an apparent increase due to greater accuracy of enumeration. For when the whole population of the United States are classified according to their age in 1880, the proportion of deaf-mutes among the younger persons is seen to be greater than among the older; indeed, it is proportionally greater as the age is younger until quite young children are reached.

3. The following are the number of the deaf and dumb returned in the Tenth Census:



Period when deafness occurred.	Number of deaf-mutes.
At or before birth	12,155
After birth	10,318
Not stated	11,405
Total	33,878

4. Classification of these cases according to their age in 1880 shows that there has been an enormous increase of recent years in the numbers of the non-congenitally deaf, but this need hardly be considered as a permanent condition, for it appears to be due to an epidemic of cerebro-spinal meningitis, which will probably die away as former epidemics have done.

5. The following table shows the percentage of the whole population of the United States born at each decade, and also the percentage of the congenitally deaf population:

Period of birth.	Total population living in 1880.	Congenital deaf-mutes living in 1880.	Percentage of the whole population living in 1880.	Percentage of congenitally deaf population living in 1880.
Before 1780	4,016	.....	0.0080	.....
1781–'90	20,863	9	0.0416	0.074
1791–1800	196,197	63	0.3912	0.518
1801–'10	776,507	241	1.5482	1.983
1811–'20	1,830,095	472	3.6488	3.883
1821–'30	3,111,317	751	6.2033	6.179
183.–'40	4,558,256	1,078	9.0882	8.870
1841–'50	6,369,362	1,614	12.6992	13.280
1851–'60	9,168,393	2,460	18.2798	20.240
1861–'70	10,726,601	3,398	21.3866	27.958
1871–'80	13,394,176	2,068	26.7051	17.015
Total	50,155,783	12,154	100.0000	100.000

6. These are shown in graphical form in the following diagram. The continuous line indicates the percentage of the general population, and the broken line that of the congenitally deaf population born at each decade:

7. The indications are that the congenital deaf-mutes of the country are increasing at a greater rate than the general population.

8. The great and sudden decrease in the numbers of deaf children born in the last decade (1871–1880) is probably due to imperfect returns of deaf-mutes under ten years of age. For though 54 per cent. of all the deaf and dumb were deaf from birth, only 30 deaf infants were reported in the census of 1880, and only 49 between the ages of one and two, out of a total deaf-mute population of 33,878.

9. Statistics in my possession show that in the year 1819 deaf-mutes began to marry partners who were themselves deaf and dumb.

10. The percentage of intermarriages has continuously increased until now not less than 90 per cent. of all deaf-mutes who marry marry partners who are themselves deaf and dumb.

11. The latest statistics collected by me include 1,443 cases of marriage.

Of these 1,443 deaf-mutes I find that 71, or 5 per cent., had married hearing persons, and 1,372, or 95 per cent., had intermarried among themselves.

12. In 1828 a deaf-mute child was born of a deaf-mute father and mother, and now such cases can be numbered by the hundred. My statistics are based upon a list of 528 deaf-mutes, mostly young, who have one or both parents deaf.

13. Some of these children have already married deaf husbands or wives, and deaf offspring have appeared in the third generation.

14. I can cite families in which the deafness has been handed down through four generations; and can give in minute detail particulars relating to a family in Maine in which congenital deaf-mutes have appeared for five successive generations in increasing numbers and in which the younger deaf-mutes are marrying deaf-mutes.

15. My list of deaf children of deaf parents (all, excepting one, born before 1880) comprises 528 cases (mostly young), 91.6 of whom were deaf from birth.

16. Upon the assumption that 528 such cases were living when the Tenth Census was taken, we obtain the following results:

a. One person in every 1,480 of the general population was deaf and dumb; and one person in every 64 of the deaf-mute population was a child of deaf-mute parents.

b. One person in every 2,736 of the general population was deaf from birth, and one person in every 38 of the congenitally deaf population was a child of deaf-mute parents.

17. The laws of heredity indicate that if these deaf children should marry congenitally deaf husbands or wives, an increased proportion of deaf offspring will appear in the next generation; and that the continuous intermarriage of congenital deaf-mutes from generation to generation may ultimately result in the formation of a deaf variety of the human race in America, in which all or most of the children will be born deaf.

18. In these conclusions I am supported by the following American men of science, all members of the National Academy of Sciences, and most of these experts on the subject of heredity. These gentlemen are Prof. Edward D. Cope, editor of the American Naturalist; Prof. Alpheus Hyatt, of Harvard University; Prof. William H. Brewer, of Yale University; Dr. Bowditch, of Harvard University; Prof. Simon Newcomb, of Washington, D. C., and Prof. W. K. Brooks, of Johns Hopkins University.

19. I would, therefore, urge upon the United States the importance of examining in the next census the marital relations of defective persons and the extent to which their defects have been inherited by their offspring.

THE ENUMERATION OF THE DEFECTIVE CLASSES.

20. The enumeration of the defective classes is always found to be itself defective.

21. However perfect the classification may be, the returns of these classes will always be incomplete, on account of a natural objection to expose the defects of relatives, especially when these are very young.

22. Accuracy of enumeration will be promoted by eliminating from the census schedules (as far as may be possible) every question that could wound the feelings of parents or friends of afflicted persons. For example, if the enumerator approached the subject of defects by asking whether the persons enumerated were perfect in sight, hearing, mind, and body, he would be more likely to secure the information desired than if he asked a fond mother whether her child was "blind, deaf and dumb, idiotic, insane, maimed, crippled, bedridden, or otherwise disabled."

23. There are degrees in every defect, and the lesser forms are more capable of amelioration than the graver. Classification under the graver forms tends to the exclusion of the lesser from the returns; but classification under the lesser forms would include the graver and be less objectionable to friends, so that evasions would be fewer and the returns more accurate and complete.

For example: The blind, deaf and dumb, idiotic, insane, maimed, crippled, bedridden, and otherwise disabled would all be returned under the head of defects in sight, hearing, mind, or body, but the converse would not necessarily be true.

24. The returns should include all persons laboring under disabilities of sight, hearing, mind, or body of sufficient magnitude to prevent education in ordinary schools, lessen wealth-producing power, and incapacitate for military service.

25. The deaf and the blind should be grouped into a subclass by themselves and separated as much as possible from the other defective classes, because they are enumerated chiefly for educational purposes, whereas the others need eleemosynary care or restraint.

26. Public establishments for purely educational purposes should be classed as "schools," and not as asylums. They should be included in statistics relating to the general education of the people, and excluded from those relating to charitable institutions.

27. Many children who can not profitably attend ordinary public schools on account of disabilities are allowed to grow up without instruction, because parents object to sending them to "asylums" or institutions governed by State boards of charity.

28. The statistics of the Tenth Census show the following figures relating to defective children of school age:

Defective children of school age (six years and under twenty-one).

Condition.	Total in the United States.	Total in special schools.
Blind	7,768	1,534
Deaf and dumb	15,059	4,893
Idiotic	29,373	1,942
Insane	3,184	.....

29. The term "deaf and dumb" is not only objectionable in itself, but is incorrect, because it classifies those who belong to this class as laboring under a double disability instead of a single one.

30. Deaf-mutes are simply persons who are deaf from childhood; and dumbness or muteness is the result of the natural defect, and not a defect in itself. The vocal organs are not defective.

31. Many of the so-called deaf and dumb can speak. Some had acquired the art before hearing was lost and others acquired it by instruction in school.

32. In the census of 1880 all persons who lost hearing before they reached the age of sixteen years are classified as "deaf and dumb," whether they can speak or not.

33. This incorrect and very objectionable classification leads to evasion and inaccurate returns.

34. Dumbness by itself is not a defect calling for enumeration in the census (unless, indeed, for statistical purposes and the determination of causes), for defective speech alone is not a disability that prevents instruction in ordinary schools. It does not materially lessen wealth-producing power, nor does it incapacitate the person for military service.

35. Persons who have not studied the subject generally fail to realize that deaf-mutes should be classified among the deaf and not among the dumb, and enumerators, therefore, can hardly be expected to follow the classification.

36. For the sake of accuracy in the returns, therefore, it would be well to make defective speech a subject of inquiry in the primary schedule relating to population. The dumb who are deaf and the dumb who are idiotic will appear on supplementary schedules relating to the deaf or the feeble-minded; and the dumb who are neither deficient in mind nor hearing need have no special schedule of inquiry.

37. Special schedules relating to all the defective classes (except the dumb) should be prepared with the assistance of experts, of two kinds, namely: Specialists who have studied the causes of the defects and teachers who are familiar with the special methods of instruction necessary.

38. The gravity of the disabilities resulting from deafness can be ascertained from two elements: (1) The age or period of life at which the defect occurred; and (2) the amount of deafness (whether total or partial). The former element is the more important of the two, for a slight defect of hearing in an infant results in graver disabilities than total deafness occurring in adult life.

For example, in the case of the deaf infant, the defect interferes with the acquisition of language through the ear and the child remains dumb. His thoughts are carried on without words, so that a mental condition exists which is abnormal.

His ignorance is so great as to be appalling; for his mind is deprived of everything that other people have ever heard of or read about that is not derived directly from their own observation. Without special instruction such children grow to adult life with all the passions of men and women, but without the restraining influences that spring from a cultivated understanding.

39. Persons who become deaf in adult life have no greater disability than the defect itself, but where deafness occurs in childhood incidental disabilities arise which are greater than the natural defect; but because they are incidental and not natural, they are capable of amelioration and even complete removal by suitable instruction in special schools. Hence the very great importance of a correct enumeration of the young deaf children.

FORM OF INQUIRY.

40. In the primary schedule relating to population the defective classes should be grouped together under the head of "physical and mental condition," instead of under "health," as was done in 1880.

The following form is suggested for incorporation in the primary schedule relating to population:

Physical and mental condition.

Is the person (on the day of the enumerator's visit) sick or temporarily disabled so as to be unable to attend to ordinary business or duties? If so, what is the sickness or disability?	Condition of—
	The senses.		Speech (of persons of five or more years of age).	The mind.		The body.
	Sight.	Hearing.		Mental development.	Mental health.	Bodily condition.	Bodily health.

41. The enumerator should be instructed to ask: (a) Whether the person has perfectly normal sight, hearing, and speech; whether the mind is normally developed and in a healthy condition; and whether the bodily condition is normal and the general health good. If the answer is "yes," the enumerator should indicate the reply by a horizontal mark (—) placed in the proper column; if "no," by a mark sloping from right to left (/), and if the question is not answered in a satisfactory and reliable manner the column should be left blank. (b) If the physical or mental condition is reported as "not perfectly normal" (/), the enumerator should then inquire whether the disability is sufficiently great to prevent instruction in an ordinary school, to interfere with the acquisition of a suitable means of livelihood, and to incapacitate for military service. If the answer is "yes," he should change the negative mark (/) into a cross (X), and proceed to put the interrogatories contained in the supplementary schedule relating to the special class of defect noted.

42. As the supplementary schedules should be prepared with the assistance of specialists it may perhaps not be advisable for me at the present time to refer to the details, excepting so far as to say that inquiries should be instituted relating to the causes of defects and their inheritance by offspring. The marital relations of defective persons should be noted and the results tabulated. The total number of children born to them should be recorded and the number who died young. The record should also note the number of defective and normal offspring.

NATIVITY AND PARENTAGE.

In examining the ancestry of deaf-mutes I have had occasion to consult the original population schedule of former censuses, which are preserved in the Department of the Interior, and I have found little difficulty in tracing the families backward from census to census in the male line of ascent. If the name of the father had been given in former censuses, it might now be possible for genealogical experts to trace from these records the American ancestry of every person now living in the United States in every branch, for the name of the father would give the maiden name of females. I therefore suggest that in the census of 1890 the father's name should be noted in that part of the schedule that relates to the nativity of the parents, so that the people of the United States may leave to their descendants genealogical records from which their full ancestry may at any future time be ascertained.

Yours, respectfully,

ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL.

Senator EUGENE HALE,
Chairman of the Census Committee of the Senate.

ENUMERATION OF ANIMALS.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST, New York, March 14, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Please find inclosed the proof of an article which will appear in the April number of the American Agriculturist. The subject treated of is of considerable importance, and I beg leave to call your attention to it as chairman of the Senate Committee on Census. A very large proportion of the number and value of horses, milch cows, and swine "not on farms" has been heretofore omitted from the census and together they form so large a portion of the aggregate animal wealth of the country that it would seem as if this omission should be hereafter repaired. Very little alteration in the census schedules will be required, and the result will be a more complete enumeration than has heretofore been made.

Trusting that this matter will attract some share of your attention, I am,

Respectfully, yours,

C. P. DEWEY.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

[American Agriculturist, April, 1888.]

FAULTS OF THE CENSUS.—MILLIONS OF VALUABLE ANIMALS NOT ENUMERATED.

In the American Agriculturist for November, 1885, attention was called to the deficiency of the census in regard to the record of animals not on farms and which in the aggregate amount to a large number and possess a large value. These returns have never been called for by any census law, and the default has grown into a custom "more honored in the breach than in the observance." The matter is eminently worthy of correction, and we appeal to the press generally, and the agricultural press in particular, and to all horse-owners and stock-raisers, to write or speak to their Congressman and urge his attention in this matter. The chairman of the Committee on the Census in the House of Representatives is the Hon. S. S. Cox, an able, learned, and progressive member, who you may be sure will look after the interest of the poor creatures who can not speak for themselves, and who have been contemptuously overlooked by the census-takers of former decades. Not only are the horses "not on farms" omitted from the census, but the milch cows and swine of cities, towns, villages, hamlets, and even on stock farms. The horse of the parson and the doctor is left out of the census, as well as the costly "coaches" of the millionaire and the scrawny "horse frame" of the junk collector. Taken together there is an immense value in these animals, and their owners have just cause of complaint that they are not enumerated. The returns of horses for three decades and for 1887 are:

Year.	On farms.	Not on farms.
1860	6,249,174	1,185,514
1870	7,145,370	1,547,379
1880	10,357,488	*2,071,497
1887	*12,496,744	*2,499,349

*Estimated.

The absurdity of the returns made when city and town horses are not included is shown by the following figures:

Locality.	1860.	1870.	1880.
Suffolk County, Massachusetts (Boston)	135	190	232
Kings County, New York (Brooklyn)	1,543	1,241	1,623
New York City and County	441	323	207

As to mules, only 2 are given in three decades to Boston, only 98 (an average of 33) to Brooklyn, and only 5 to New York. The large number, comparatively, of horses in Kings County is due to the fact that Brooklyn City occupies only a portion of the county, and the remainder is farm land. Why, as a matter of fact, one can see at a single glance out of the window more horses and mules than are given in these returns. Boston, Brooklyn, and New York together possess not less than 300,000 horses, and probably nearer 400,000. To these add in the count from all the other cities, towns, and villages, and the amount of deficiency may be imagined. The same deficiency appears in the record of milch cows and swine, as will be shown in another part of this article. The reasons given for the curious conditions referred to are explained in the following résumé of statements in the census reports of the last three decades:

In the compend of the census of 1860 the superintendent says that as all live-stock "not on farms" was omitted in the previous census, "we have in all our comparisons and calculations ignored it, because, being omitted in those censuses, its introduction into the figures at this time would interfere with the apparent rate of increase. These horses make a vast increase in the number returned in the agricultural schedule. This addition to all varieties of live-stock is a matter of no inconsiderable importance." In the compend of 1870 he says that the returns include the enumeration only of live-stock found on farms. Consequently the large number of horses and yoke oxen and milch cows found in cities, towns, and villages, as well as those belonging to persons following commercial, mechanical, or professional pursuits in agricultural regions, are not reported. No effort was made in the census of 1870 to return these animals. But the superintendent, by procuring data from the State censuses, local assessments, the police in cities, and by comparisons and inferences as to the condition of settlement, society, and occupation in each State, made as intelligent an estimate as possible to correct "the defect noted in the census law."

In the agricultural volume for 1880 the Superintendent, referring to this subject, says that "as regards the horses owned by persons not occupying or cultivating farms, no attempt was made to form an estimate of numbers." Yet in numbers they are one-fifth of the whole, and in value hold a much higher proportion. The number of milch cows not on farms is very great, as the known condition of cities, towns, and villages show. The horses owned by men of wealth and leisure, the racing studs, those on stock farms, those employed in trade and transportation, on street railroads, on railroad contracts, in city and town improvements, those owned by professional men or by livery-stable keepers—these are very numerous, at least 3,000,000, and are of higher value than the average horse of the farm. The number of swine not on farms is also very large, and is about one-tenth of the entire swine population of the country.

A very important consideration in regard to the horse is his use in war, for cavalry, artillery, and transportation, and this consideration enters into the calculation of the continental nations when war material and war preparations are discussed. We give the returns from a few leading countries, which measure their "horse power" as follows:

All Europe	35,057,065	Germany	3,522,500
Great Britain	1,927,527	Russia in Europe	20,016,000
France	2,911,000	Austria	3,541,810

No sooner does war break out in Europe than the United States are invaded by horse-dealers, who come to purchase our surplus stock to put them into the mêlée, whether on the Rhine or the Danube, the Seine or the Po. The Sultan of Turkey has a standing decree against the exportation of horses from his dominions, as Senator PALMER, of Michigan, recently discovered when he attempted to procure Arabian stallions from Syria to mate with the Percherons he obtained in France. In the war of the rebellion some curious results appear as regards the effects of war on the horse and mule population, as shown by the censuses of 1860 and 1870. These animals increased in the Union States and decreased in the Confederate, and in those that for convenience we may call the "semi-war States," as Maryland, Tennessee, and Kentucky. In these three States the horses and mules in the two decades appear as follows:

Horses:		Mules:
1860	749,992	1860	253,808
1870	653,984	1870	212,043

In the ten States, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, the returns are as follows:

Horses:		Mules:
1860	1,453,535	1860	704,650
1870	1,122,000	1870	516,700

In the twenty States, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Wisconsin, the following results appear:

Horses:		Mules:
1860	3,994,639	1860	187,637
1870	4,065,903	1870	357,113

By the year 1880 the disparity was in a great measure repaired, and at the present time those ravages of war are made up and new sources of wealth and prosperity have been opened. The three States first above named, which had, in 1860, 749,992 horses, now have 810,266, by the estimates of the Agricultural Department, and the ten States that had, in 1860, 1,453,535 horses, have now 2,169,723, this great increase being mainly caused by the enormous advance in Texas from 325,698 in 1860 to 1,038,816 in 1887. Yet if Texas be excluded in both years, the increase in the nine States is from 1,127,837 in 1860 to 1,130,907 in 1880.

By the census of 1860 it appeared that while the total number of cattle on farms was 18,288,000, those not on farms numbered 3,304,000, or one-sixth. In 1870 the cattle on farms numbered 24,000,000, and those not on farms a little over 4,000,000, again one-sixth. Applying the same rule of proportion to 1880, the cattle not on farms would number nearly 6,000,000, or one-sixth of the total of 35,000,000. The swine on farms in 1860 numbered 30,351,213, and those not on farms were 3,469,000, or more than one-tenth.

In 1880 the swine are enumerated at 47,682,000, and taking one-tenth for the number "not on farms," we have nearly 5,000,000. These are the "family pigs" of the villager and cottager. Their value is proportionately greater than that of the average farm hog, and they and their product should be counted. So also should the poultry "not on farms" be enumerated and a return made of their egg product. The village, town, and city fowls would make an immense addition to the recorded wealth of the country. And why should the milk produced by cows "not on farms" and sold to the neighbors, and the butter produced and consumed or sold, not be counted? These are all important increments to the wealth of the country. In the English and Irish census the fowls and pigs are followed up more closely, and the business done around the cottage home is ascertained and reported.

In the agricultural report of the census of 1860, Superintendent Kennedy discussed the effect of railroads upon horses. It was assumed at the time that railroads came into use that the number of horses and wagoners would decrease. The result, however, proved precisely the contrary. Horses, says the superintendent, have multiplied more rapidly since the introduction of locomotives than they did before. Three-fourths of all the railroads have been made since 1850, and during the ten years from that time up to 1860 the increase of horses has been the greatest. He adds that if inquiries are pursued further it will be found that horses have increased most in those States in which the greatest extent of railroad has been made since 1850. Taking Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin as an illustration, between 1850 and 1860 about 9,000 miles of railroad were constructed in those States, and in the same period the number of horses increased 106 per cent.; that is, from 1,155,000 to 2,384,000. Following out this line of reasoning, it appears that the railroad mileage of 1860, which was 30,635, had increased in 1880 to 93,349, and in 1887 to about 150,000 miles. The horses numbered in 1860, 7,434,688; in 1880, 12,428,985; and in February, 1888, about 13,000,000. The increase has been steady and large, but not in proportion to that of the railroad mileage.

Precisely as the census shows a gradual, steady, and determined advance in the numbers of the urban population as compared with the total number of inhabitants, so the census returns of the large cities will continue to show an increase in the number of horses employed for pleasure or traffic therein. The establishment of parks in the cities enlarges the disposition to pleasure riding and driving, and supplies a place for the meeting of the well-to-do classes and for the display of their equipages. These people want horses, and good horses. They are ready to pay any price. In this way the ostentation and the business necessities of the cities and towns tend to the advantage and enrichment of the farmers, and encourage in them the ambition to raise the best horses possible to meet the exacting demands and capricious moods of those who find and follow a "latest fashion" in horses quite as much as they do in their garments. It will be a simple thing for the census committee to modify the schedules of the census of 1890, so that the vast number of horses, milch cows, and swine, for so many years omitted in the returns, may be tabulated and their number and value expressed in figures.

To sum up the whole matter, we have shown that very large and valuable interests have been omitted from the census in former years, and the mere statement of the fact and pointing out how the wrong of former administrations may be repaired should be sufficient to set this matter right now and for the future.

HEARINGS BY THE COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS, UNITED STATES SENATE.

STATEMENT OF HON. CARROLL D. WRIGHT.

JANUARY 11, 1889.

The chairman of the committee, Senator HALE, requested Hon. Carroll D. Wright to make any statement he might desire in relation to the bill under consideration (H. R. 1659).

Mr. WRIGHT. I have very carefully studied, in all its bearings, the bill as it is now before the committee. This was done at the invitation of the chairman of the Census Committee of the House of Representatives about a year ago. I know that it was drawn, not only after careful study of the act of 1879, but with the experience of the census of 1880 under the same.

Many difficulties were encountered under the act of 1879 in regard to interpretation by auditing officers, and also in relation to administration under its provisions by enumerators, and in various other ways. All these difficulties have been eliminated in this bill, though it is practically the law of 1879, adapted to the actual administration of the Census Office for the taking of the Eleventh Census.

The bill before the committee includes just those things which are necessary to be carried out in a general way. My experience in the Tenth Census convinces me that there will be no difficulty in carrying out the instructions of Congress should this bill become a law. I see no difficulty in any direction.

There are two general features which I might call to your attention now. The act of 1879 provided for the taking of a census in any State, the United States to pay for one-half of the expenses, provided any State should elect so to do. Several States undertook to compile this census, but so far as accomplishing the object sought by Congress was concerned the work was a failure. That provision has been stricken out of this bill. States, however, should be induced to take a census, though it can not be done on the basis adopted in the act of 1879.

If Congress desires the States to assist in taking a census, it should be done by inducing the States to take their own census and furnish a certain class of information to Congress for which Congress will remunerate the States. In the last census very few States took interest enough in the matter to carry out instructions properly. Information came in behindhand, and the law was stretched in order to pay the bills accruing for the work.

We took our census of 1885 in Massachusetts in our own way. Congress, however, could lay down a course for all the States to pursue, and could pay for the information collected by the States and used by the United States. The Government would then obtain information as to the population and the number of voters in each State, etc. If this was done every five years the United States would have no trouble in collecting the information. This is a practical plan.

Another feature in the act of 1879 was that the enumerators should make copies of name, age, color, and one or two other points, and deposit the copies with the clerk of the court of the county in which they lived. The making of these copies was paid for at the rate of 10 cents for 100 names. This was a hardship to enumerators, because each name carried with it a variety of information, and 10 cents a hundred words is the usual rate for copying; but to copy the census-rolls involved a large amount of work for which the enumerators received no pay.

In addition to this they were required to deposit their copies at the places above mentioned, with a view to making corrections should any one appear for that purpose. The records were obliged to remain at the county court-house for three days. No value has ever been received from this feature of the law of 1879. The present bill eliminates this old provision and establishes a rule that a municipal government desiring copies of the census, with the information designated, should make request of the superintendent, who should furnish the copies to such government, and the municipal government is to pay therefor. This will be a valuable feature in the coming census and will enable municipal governments to obtain copies, if they wish, but it would not force such copies upon them.

The other features of this bill which differ from the act of 1879 are informal and administrative, and will come up for consideration by the committee section by section.

STATEMENT OF HON. WILLIAM WARNER.

JANUARY 12, 1889.

Mr. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: As to the details of this matter, I have given it but little thought. Dr. ATKINSON, who is here, has taken considerable interest in the subject and I know is much more familiar with it than I am. My only purpose in coming here this morning is to impress upon the committee, if possible, the importance of taking some action in the taking of the next census to ascertain the number of old soldiers and sailors in the country.

My views are expressed in this small memorial which I hold in my hand, addressed to the chairman of the committee and signed by Henry Hall, business manager of the Tribune.

I do not, of course, speak officially for the Grand Army of the Republic. That body has taken, to my knowledge, no united action on this question, but I do know, from conversation with members of that organization throughout the country, and with different department commanders (and I have visited many of them in the last few months) that there is a general feeling that in the near future at least the pension question is to be solved by a service pension. How soon that may be is a question; the sooner the better.

In order that legislators may act intelligently and have some reliable estimates upon which to base their action, it will be necessary to have the information included in the census taken by the General Government. I apprehend that the only reliable information which is had now in the Pension Office is that which has been furnished through the Grand Army posts of the country to the Commissioner of Pensions.

When we estimate the survivors of the war of the rebellion outside of those who belong to the Grand Army posts of the country we are just as much at sea as when we attempt to estimate the entire number. If this census should be taken, showing the name, the command, the age of the survivor, it would certainly furnish very valuable information upon the pension question.

The collecting of this statistical information would of course cause additional work and expense, but I see no difficulty in the way of securing precise and accurate information upon the question. In regard to embodying in the census the regiment, the length of service, and the company, my idea is this: The census should contain the record of the soldier, his name occurring in alphabetical order, and should embody the regimental organization; or, if artillery, then the battery; or if a war ship, then the ship. In the case of regiments, I would not think it necessary to take the company.

The record thus made would contain the correct number of the survivors of the war. I apprehend that no man to-day has ever figured out the number of troops who were actually engaged in the Union Army. I know that is the impression of General Sherman. I have a letter from him on this subject (but have been unable to find it this morning) showing that the number engaged in the Union Army was largely exaggerated by reason of re-enlistments, the same men appearing in different organizations. These names have never been separated in such a way as to get the exact numbers.

On the question of service pensions it seems to me that it would be unnecessary to give the regimental organization, though I would have that information for other purposes. I think it is the duty of this Government to furnish to the men who are entitled to pensions every reasonable facility for obtaining the evidence to enable them to secure their pensions. All of us know that we lose sight of comrades who were with us in our regiments or companies. If this census was taken so as to furnish the requisite information as to regimental organizations, battery, war ship, etc., a claimant for a pension could turn at once to this record to ascertain the residence of a comrade. I think this information would be of incalculable service to those who are entitled to a pension. It would also be valuable data for the Commissioner of Pensions, if he is anxious to discharge his duty faithfully, not only to the Government but to claimants for pensions.

I have said in a general way about all that I care to say. I know the importance to you of minutes to the committee at this portion of the session. Action by you in this, in my judgment, would meet the approval certainly of the survivors of the war, and I believe of the people generally.

I have not consulted with any experts of the census upon the points involved in my remarks. I am not on the Census Committee, and as you gentlemen understand, a member of the House has other matters to engage his attention, so that I have not given this matter special consideration. My friend Dr. ATKINSON, who is present, has. I have simply come here to express my ideas in a general way without going into details.

STATEMENT OF HON. LOUIS E. ATKINSON.

JANUARY 12, 1889.

Mr. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: I shall with pleasure accept the invitation of the chairman to express my views upon the question now under consideration by the committee. First of all I wish to say that most of the reasons for taking the census with these contemplated changes are very well stated in the memorial of Mr. Hall, addressed to the chairman of this committee, and which was printed at his instance by the Senate.

There is another reason for taking the census with the additions mentioned, and that is that I believe it will save money to the United States. An attempt was made in the House of Representatives to secure the amendments we desire, but the effort was unsuccessful there, and on that account we appear here. The House, however, provided for the taking of the names of the survivors of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

My idea of the matter is that the census should contain the name, residence, age, period of service, and the company and regiment of every soldier who served during the war, and the ship or organization in which a sailor or marine served. I think this information will save money to the United States. There is in the Pension Office a division known, I believe, as the Army and Navy survivors' division, which employs forty clerks. The expense of maintaining this division is $60,000 a year.

Estimates of the number of survivors of the Army vary very much indeed. The War Department estimates that there are from 800,000 to 900,000 soldiers living. The Commissioner of Pensions, in an interview I had with him, stated that there were 1,300,000 soldiers living, which includes only Union soldiers, sailors, and marines. So that there is a difference of 400,000 or 500,000 men. That is a very wide difference. It is impossible to base any intelligent legislation upon any estimate that can be made of the survivors of the war.

This division in the Pension Office which I have mentioned undertakes now to secure just exactly what I desire to have secured by the next census; that is, the name, residence, age, company and regiment, and date of service of every survivor of the Union forces, for the purpose of procuring evidence. I would have the record embrace the several organizations in which each man served, including the company, for the purpose of enabling applicants before the Pension Office to secure the testimony of their comrades.

In regard to the question of the difficulties to be encountered in the practical work of the enumerators, I think it would be as difficult for a man to forget the day of his marriage as to forget the company and regiment in which he served. In fact, it is impossible for a man to forget that. You will observe that the bill before the committee provides that a "previous schedule" shall be made out. This, as I understand it, will be a paper containing certain inquiries to be filled in by the head of the family. The military record of soldiers in the family can be embraced in it.

The Pension Office now is endeavoring to make up skeleton lists of regiments, but they are necessarily incomplete. Most of the information in the possession of the Pension Office has been obtained from the Grand Army posts, but many veterans live distant from any army posts, and information in regard to them has not been gathered.

As to the expense of collecting the information sought by us, the maximum compensation paid to the enumerator, as provided in the bill, will be 3 cents for each person named. If there are a million soldiers living, and 3 cents additional is paid for each soldier sailor and marine, it will make just $30,000 for the enumeration of that million.

The cost of the division of the Army and Navy survivors in the Pension Office is about $60,000 a year. There are forty clerks there. Half that number of clerks could be dispensed with in a year after the information that will be obtained by the census is furnished. There will be an absolute saving to the Government of the United States by reducing the number of clerks employed in this division if the census is taken as we desire it to be taken. Besides that, it will be of inestimable value not merely for historical reasons, but for scientific reasons.

It is not now known how many persons served in the Union nor in the Confederate armies. Estimates differ very widely on the subject. One estimate (the Provost-Marshal-General's report) gives the number of men who died in the military service of the United States as 279,000. A communication from the Quartermaster-General, dated only a few days ago, states that 325,000 men are buried in the national cemeteries alone. Nine thousand of these are Confederates. These statements show what a wide discrepancy exists in the figures furnished by what ought to be reliable authorities.

The number of burials in the national cemeteries probably represents only one-half of the entire number who lost their lives in the war.

The law now provides for taking a census of idiots, lunatics, and, I believe, criminals. I do not know of any good reason why we should not have a census of the men who served in the war, and who now survive. If this information had been obtained twenty years ago, with the comparisons that could have been made since, we could furnish accurate information now to our statistical experts upon the subject. The effect of military service upon the longevity of men would be a valuable contribution to science, and we would have something by which to make the proper comparisons.

I can unite with General WARNER in saying that every soldier with whom I have spoken upon the subject is exceedingly anxious to have this information carefully procured by the United States.

I thank you for your attention.

COMMUNICATION FROM HON. ROBERT P. PORTER.

THE PRESS, 26 AND 28 NORTH WILLIAM STREET,
New York, January 11, 1889.

MY DEAR SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of January 7, I have read the proposed Senate bill, and beg leave to say that in my opinion it is upon the whole a wise and satisfactory bill as it now stands. The bill in fact bears the same relation to the act of 1879 as the census of 1890 should to that of 1880. By this I mean that the bill seems to strengthen and improve the act of 1879 without branching out into unknown and untried regions, and this same principle should be strictly applied to the taking of the Eleventh Census.

The conception of the census of 1880 was a splendid one and reflects great credit upon those directly responsible for the framing of the act and upon General Walker, who had the courage to undertake it upon an absurdly low appropriation. And yet it was impossible to accurately estimate its cost. This will be equally true of the Eleventh Census, unless it is kept within the scope of the act which you have sent me. I take the liberty to inclose as part of this letter an article from the New York Press, which contains my general views on the subject of the next census.

Accuracy and promptness are so important in census work that all the attempts to enlarge the scope of the work, excepting in the particular case relating to the survivors of the war of the rebellion, should be abandoned. The mistakes of 1880 and the failures will enable the superintendent of the Eleventh Census to steer clear of many pitfalls if he is only wise enough to keep the work well in hand and not try to do too much. In glancing over sundry recommendations which the committee has received in relation to this matter, you will find several suggestions which, if carried out, have a tendency to steer the census craft of 1890 on the same rock that proved so disastrous in 1880, and a deficit and delayed publication would surely follow.

The practical thing to do is to take the census as near as possible in accordance with the excellent bill your committee has perfected, without branching out, and to do it as rapidly as possible. This will give the country a census embracing all the good features of the Tenth Census and avoid the mistakes, many of which were unavoidable, in 1880. The points made by Mr. Wright, of the Labor Bureau, in regard to overloading the schedules with questions, and in relation to the small pay of the enumerators, are all true. Schedule No. 1 is literally loaded down now, when the compensation is taken into consideration.

In the special investigations in 1880, the amount of work which was done by the people without compensation was nothing short of appalling, and it is doubtful if they will calmly stand such another violation of special agents and special investigations unless some adequate compensation is offered them. I am strongly in favor of a statistical census and a skillfully summarized census as against a historical census and a census multitudinous and cumbersome.

It is hardly likely that these thoughts will be of any service to your committee, but if any specific questions occur to you I shall be glad to answer them if I can.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect,

ROBERT P. PORTER,
Editor of the Press.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman of Committee on the Census of the United States Senate.

P. S.—In the details of the bill the salaries of the chief clerk and disbursing clerk are, I think, both too low; the former should be $3,000, and the latter $2,500.

HINTS FOR THE NEXT CENSUS.

Nothing pays like good book-keeping, and good book-keeping in national affairs is essential to our progress, health, and welfare as a nation. We do not refer to that vast system of accounts by which the financial transactions of the Government are kept, for time and experience have perfected these methods until they are well-nigh perfect. Hundreds of millions of dollars pass through the myraid Departments and branches of the Government annually, and the percentage of loss is phenomenally small and mistakes rare. We do refer to the method provided by the Constitution, the details of which are from time to time arranged by act of Congress, for making inventory of our national possessions, for ascertaining the growth of population, the race, sex, age, nativity, and occupation of the people, and taking account of illiteracy, of the proportion attending the public schools, and of those unfortunates who troop under the dismal alliteration "dependent, defective, and delinquent classes."

Next in importance in this decennial book-keeping come what are called the mortality and vital statistics, or the records of the life and health of the people. Until Dr. John S. Billings produced his two remarkable volumes, which form a part of the Tenth Census, we had no records of the kind worth mentioning. These statistics, really the most important after the population volume, were delayed for various causes, but finally appeared, with excellent diagrams and maps, a nucleus or foundation for this branch of inquiry for all time to come. Here we have the relations of age, sex, color, race, locality, etc., to death; the causes of death, the ages of the living population, and a variety of important information touching the most vital subject, namely, the life and health of the people. Money spent on accurate vital statistics is never wasted.

The next Superintendent of the Census should, above and beyond all else, lay his plans so as to secure the most accurate enumeration of the population and the most complete mortality and vital statistics ever obtained in this country. Feeling secure on these points, the next most important matters to cover in the order of importance, are as follows: Agricultural statistics; statistics of manufacturing and mining; statistics of wealth, taxation, and public indebtedness, other than national, and a volume on transportation, including statistics of railroads, both fiscal and physical characteristics, steam navigation, canals, telegraphs, and telephones. These are essentials of a census, and all the powers and all the means of the Census Bureau should be concentrated upon these investigations in order to make them comprehensive and thorough.

The census should be as near plain, clear, concise, simple book-keeping as possible. History may not be altogether out of place in some cases, but it is not necessary, while discussion as to results reached is entirely irrelevant and under no circumstances should be tolerated. Facts only are wanted, and they should be furnished as rapidly as possible. The value of some of the investigations made by the experts of the Tenth Census was undoubtedly great, but hardly within the scope of the census. Take for example the "Social Statistics of Cities," by Col. George E. Waring; the "Mining Industries of the United States," by Raphael Pumpelly; "Mining Laws," and "Statistics and Technology of the Precious Metals," by Clarence King; "Newspapers and Publications," by S. N. D. North; "Water Powers of the United States," by Professor W. P. Trowbridge; "Wage Tables," by Josiah D. Weeks; "Factory Laws," by Carroll D. Wright; "Technology and Uses of Petroleum," by S. F. Peckham; "Forests of North America," by Charles S. Sargent; "Cotton Production," by Eugene W. Hilgard; "Tobacco Culture," by Professor Killibrew; "Building Stone of the United States," and a score of other reports by equally able and scientific men.

All this work was important, and most of it was ably done. Still it is not strictly statistical work. The statistics in every one of the above reports, if the next superintendent is a practical man, can be taken from these weighty and scientific volumes, and with comparatively small expense brought down to 1890. The rest of the matter will stand for all time to come, or until Congress orders a special investigation of any one of the subjects. The wage-tables and factory reports, mining laws, and so forth, should now be turned over to the Labor Bureau, and can no longer be regarded as a necessary part of the census work. The Eleventh Census, therefore, should be crystallized to six or seven important volumes, and the work for those important branches of inquiry should be done well. And above all it should be simplified. But how?

The most effective way of simplifying the work is to reduce all schedules to the simplest form possible and leave off all but essential questions. Many of the important investigations failed in 1880 because the experts, in spite of the advice of more experienced and practical statisticians like General Walker, sent forth small volumes in the shape of schedules containing hundreds of irrelevant questions. The statistics as to the number of persons employed in the various industries should be included on the enumerator's schedule in the same way as the statistics of occupations. It is doubtful if the value of capital invested in given industries and the amount of wages paid can be obtained with any degree of accuracy. It has been abandoned in England because the results have been unsatisfactory and misleading. No branch of the census will require more care than the gathering of these statistics of manufacturing industries. The statistics of wealth, taxation, and public indebtedness, transportation, and some other important investigations, with the basis we now have to work upon, can be carried on successfully as separate investigations.

In conclusion, the Press feels it important to say that the next census must be confined to proper limits and be thorough in all vital points. Less historical and more statistical, less scientific and more practical, less cumbersome and more easy of access, less of an encyclopedia and more of an inventory of the nation's possessions and report of its progress. And, lastly, it should be completed before the dawn of the year of our Lord 1900.

The question being taken on concurring in the amendments of the Senate, they were concurred in.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12571) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HERBERT. Under the heading "Naval Establishment," Mr. Chairman, on page 26 of the bill, and after line 3, I move the insertion of the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Construction and Repair: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for construction and repair of vessels, $150,000.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand there is no objection to the amendment on the part of the committee, and it is necessary that this sum should be provided.

The amendment was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ROGERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles, namely:

A bill (S. 172) establishing a customs collection district in Florida, to be known as the collection district of Tampa, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 2816) to authorize the construction of a bridge for railway purposes across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, to be located north of and in the vicinity of the city of Alma, Wis.; and

A bill (S. 3285) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tensas River at or near Kirk's Ferry, Louisiana.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill the title of which has just been stated, if there be no objection, will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the amendments of the Senate ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not see the gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in his seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that both the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] desire that this should be done.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well.

There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the amendments of the Senate ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For steam machinery, Bureau of Steam Engineering, 1886 and prior years, $103,046.

Mr. SAYERS. On page 30, at the end of line 12, I move the insertion of the words "and thirteen cents," so that the amount will read: "$103,046.13."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Relief of James E. Jouett: To relieve Rear-Admiral James E. Jouett, United States Navy, from accountability for the sum of $400 paid to him March 6, 1885, by Pay Inspector John H. Stevenson, United States Navy, upon a voucher for that amount approved February 28, 1885, by the Secretary of the Navy, authority is hereby granted to the proper accounting officers to credit the account of Rear-Admiral Jouett with the said amount expended by him, $400.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in after line 14 on page 33.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse Mrs. Almira R. Hancock for expenses incurred by her husband, Maj. Gen. W. S. Hancock, in the entertainment of the official visitors at the Yorktown Centennial, $2,100, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed on vouchers to be approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SAYERS. In reference to that amendment I will say that the clause which has just been read provides for the relief of Rear-Admiral James E. Jouett, and inasmuch as the committee have permitted that to be inserted in the bill I do not feel authorized to raise the point of order upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I desire, however, that he shall make a statement to the committee as to the amendment before the vote is taken upon it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state, in response to the gentleman from Texas, that General Hancock was directed by the Secretary of War to take charge of the military display at the celebration of the centennial at Yorktown; that in that display a considerable amount of his personal funds were necessarily expended, and expended in connection with his duties as commander-in-chief of the military forces. For these expenditures vouchers were obtained, but have never been paid; and this amendment is simply to provide that they may be submitted to the Secretary of War, both Mr. Lincoln, then Secretary of War, and Mr. Bayard, now Secretary of State, approving the suggestion of the amendment.

Mr. CHEADLE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if any of the bills to which he refers were incurred for the purchase of wine and liquors used on that occasion?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman that I know nothing of the details. They will be submitted, the same as every other voucher in connection with the centennial at Yorktown, to the Secretary of War, and I know nothing whatever of the expenditures.

Mr. CHEADLE. I would like to insert a proviso that no part of the money there shall be paid for wines or liquors. I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope that amendment will be promptly voted down.

Mr. CHEADLE. And I hope it will be just as promptly adopted. I am opposed to taxing the people of the country who pay these enormous bills for the wines and liquors used in such entertainments.

The question being taken on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 73.

So the amendment of Mr. CHEADLE was rejected.

The amendment of Mr. BINGHAM was then adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

To compensate the owners of the schooner E. C. Allen for injuries sustained by that vessel in a collision with United States ship Constellation in the harbor of Portsmouth, N. H., on the night of October 1, 1888, $84.

Mr. BOWDEN. I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the Potomac Steamboat Company the sum of $5,390 for damages, in addition to the appropriation heretofore made, growing out of the sinking of the steamer Excelsior by the United States steam-tug Fortune, said sum being the amount paid by said company under a decree of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, which decree was affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Mr. SAYERS. I raise the point of order that there is no law authorizing this appropriation; therefore the amendment has no place upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Virginia suggest any law by which this appropriation is authorized?

Mr. BOWDEN. By the act approved March 3, 1883, making an appropriation of a similar character for this vessel.

Mr. SAYERS. There was an appropriation of $19,000 made for payment to the owners of this vessel for damages sustained at the time the gentleman suggests; but since then there has been no law authorizing the payment of these other damages.

Mr. BOWDEN. It is a fact that in the law there was a reservation that it was to be considered in full satisfaction of all claims now due; but as a part of the same casualty, and as a part of the same transaction, a suit was brought against that company for salvage, and the United States court for the eastern district of Virginia rendered judgment against this company for $5,600. That company appealed to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court has affirmed that decision. It is a part of the same casualty, and making up a deficiency that the Government has already admitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia that in view of the statement he has just made, and without any further investigation, it would, in the opinion of the Chair, require additional legislation to make this appropriation in order under the rules.

Mr. BOWDEN. Why, the decision of the Supreme Court is law of itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt of the point of order being well taken and must sustain it. There is no legislation at the present authorizing this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Surveying the public lands: To pay amount found due by the accounting officers on account of surveying the public lands for the fiscal year 1887 to Myron Willsie for services and expenses in examination of surveys in Dakota, $335.50.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to offer an amendment, after line 8, page 36, by adding: "Office of the surveyor-general, Washington Territory, for salaries of clerks in his office, $500."

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to make an explanation of it. As a rule I usually follow the Committee on Appropriations, and have not this session, I believe, offered an amendment to any appropriation bill brought in by that committee. The members of the committee are prudent and wise, and usually have good judgment, but I think this amendment should be adopted. It provides for the payment of the small sum of $500 to be used by the surveyor-general in the Territory of Washington to pay an extra clerk. I have here a letter written by General Breckinridge, surveyor-general of Washington Territory, in which he at considerable length details the necessity for additional clerical force.

Mr. SAYERS. How much is it that you ask?

Mr. McCREARY. Only $500.

Mr. SAYERS. Cut it down to $200.

Mr. McCREARY. He has been at work three months.

Mr. SAYERS. Put it at $250 and I will accept the amendment.

Mr. McCREARY. Very well; put it at $250.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Compensation to clerks in post-offices: Benjamin M. Welch, postmaster, New Martinsville, W. Va.

For clerk-hire undercredited in—

First quarter, 1887, $9.

Second quarter, 1887, $9.

Mr. RICE. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 38, after line 20, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay upon the order of the Postmaster-General to the American Grocers' Association of the city of New York the sum of $486, or so much thereof as may be found equitably due, for postage erroneously paid by said association pursuant to an act 'for the relief of the American Grocers' Association of the city of New York,' approved October 12, 1888."

Mr. SAYERS. The committee have investigated that matter, and the gentleman from Minnesota is authorized to offer the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Foreign mail transportation: Oregon Railway and Navigation Company: For transportation of the United States mails from Port Townsend, Wash., and Victoria, British Columbia, during the quarter ended June 30, 1888, $54.23.

The foregoing sums for the postal service shall be payable from the postal revenues of the respective years to which they are properly chargeable.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to know the ground of this last clause read.

The foregoing sums for the postal service shall be payable from the postal revenues of the respective years to which they are properly chargeable.

I had supposed that there were no postal revenues for any recent years that have not been used up.

Mr. SAYERS. That language is used for the simple reason that the law requires it to be used.

Mr. ADAMS. But if it is true for several years a sum has to be appropriated out of the Treasury to make good a deficiency for postal revenues, how can it be paid out of the postal revenues for that year?

Mr. SAYERS. Because it is an indefinite appropriation; and this clause in the bill merely follows the language of the statute.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is merely a system of accounts.

Mr. ADAMS. Very well; I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Postmaster-General to pay to the employés and late employés of the Post-Office Department additional compensation for services rendered by such employés as were embraced in orders of the Postmaster-General dated April 11 and June 18, 1885, requiring extra hours of labor, said additional compensation to be regulated by the extra time said employés were actually engaged in rendering service under said orders, $13,089.

Mr. ROGERS. Before submitting the observations which I intend to make, I want to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] in charge of this bill whether or not this item beginning on line 6 and closing with line 14 on the thirty-ninth page of the bill is found in the estimate, and if so, when first it is so found.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, pending the reply of the gentleman from Texas I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] for that purpose.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to offer an amendment to include the clerk in the office of the general superintendent of the railway mail service for the same period. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

Mr. SAYERS. We do not know how much the amount is.

Mr. DOCKERY. The amendment is offered to cover the same time and exactly similar services.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to the gentleman that these items of appropriation are all specifically fixed by the Department, and we can not tell from this amendment, or from the information that we have, whether the total amount is sufficient or not.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will withdraw the amendment for the present, in view of the fact that I can not now specify the amount.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I renew my question to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] whether or not there are regular estimates for these sums.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Arkansas, that a bill was introduced in the House on the 17th day of December, 1888, which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and was by that committee returned to the House with a report asking that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROGERS. But are there any estimates at all from the Department for such items prior to that time?

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will turn to pages 14 and 15 of the report accompanying this bill he will find a full account of the matter.

Mr. ROGERS. But what I want to get at is this: The information that we get in that report was sent to Congress on the 2d day of January, 1889, whereas these appropriations go back to orders made by the Postmaster-General in 1885. Now, I want to know whether or not any estimates were made by the Department and sent to Congress between 1885 and 1889 asking for these appropriations.

Mr. SAYERS. There has been no estimate at all; but I will state to the gentleman from Arkansas that the committee in recommending this appropriation have followed the policy adopted by Congress at the last session, when an appropriation was made to pay employés of the War Department for extra service. Wherever the eight-hour law applied and employés were compelled to labor more than eight hours per day, Congress at its last session authorized payment for the extra labor, and this clause in the pending bill does nothing more than follow the policy which was settled in the last Congress in reference to those employés in the War Department.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I find no fault with the action of the Appropriations Committee in inserting this provision in the deficiency bill. Indeed, I think they did right in inserting it, otherwise I should have interposed a point of order, which I think the Chair would have been compelled to sustain. But I avail myself of this opportunity to invite the attention of the House to a practice which has grown up in the Departments, but which I think is more honored in the breach than in the observance. I read from paragraph 7, of section 9, of Article I, of the Constitution, as furnishing the basis for the criticism which I propose to make. It provides that—

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

The manifest purpose of this provision of the Constitution is to keep the purse-strings of the nation in the hands of Congress. It is to prohibit either the Departments or other persons from entering into contracts or engagements of any description which shall become a claim or charge upon the Treasury in the absence of any provision by Congress authorizing the expenditure. Now, to illustrate this, if any one chooses to examine section 3738 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, it will be found to provide that "eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics who may be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States." It is true, Mr. Chairman, that the Supreme Court, in the construction of this act of Congress, have said that it is not to be construed so as to prohibit any Department or executive officer from entering into contracts with citizens for a greater term of service than eight hours, but the manifest purpose of the law is to limit the work in the Department to eight hours a day. In the report of the Committee on Appropriations accompanying this bill, I find a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting to Congress certain orders as the basis of this claim against the Government of the United States, and I send to the Clerk's desk to be read the orders found upon page 14 of this report.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYÉS.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., January 2, 1889.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 19th ultimo, inclosing H. R. 11819, entitled "A bill for the relief of employés and late employés of the Post-Office Department," and requesting me to furnish you with a statement showing the number of employés contemplated by the bill, the time required of them in excess of the regular official hours per day, the amount of wages paid to each during the period that the orders of the Postmaster-General of April 11, 1885, and June 18, 1885, were in force, and such other information as, in my opinion, would aid the committee in the proper consideration of said bill.

In reply I beg to hand you herewith copies of the orders above referred to, together with the record of said employés, containing all the information requested.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. C. L. ANDERSON, M. C.,
Chairman Subcommittee of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads, House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 11, 1885.

Order No. 102.—Until further ordered the clerks in the appointment division, in the bond division, and such as may be required in the free-delivery and correspondence and salary and allowance divisions of the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, are required to attend from 6.30 until 9 o'clock in the evening for the purpose of facilitating the dispatch of applications and preparation of papers for action.

Mr. Fowler, acting personally for the First Assistant Postmaster-General, will personally direct the execution of this order.

WM. F. VILAS, Postmaster-General.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 18, 1885.

Order No. 130.—Until further ordered the clerks of the several divisions of the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, including all detailed temporarily for work therein, are required to attend from 9 a. m. to 5.30 p. m. of each day; and the First Assistant Postmaster-General will assign to the appointment division such of the clerks in other divisions and during such hours as he shall deem most convenient.

Order No. 102, of April 11, is abrogated.

WM. F. VILAS, Postmaster-General.

Mr. ROGERS. It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that this service was performed under positive orders made by the Postmaster-General; and on the opposite page of this report are the names of the parties who performed this service, the number of hours that they worked, and the amounts due them under the ordinary operation of law for the extra service thus performed. It will likewise be observed that this claim upon the Government—for it is properly not a deficiency, I take it, strictly speaking—this claim upon the Government which has arisen in pursuance of these orders issued in 1885, has been kept away from Congress until the present time; that is, until January of the present year. As to why these claims were kept away no explanation is given. But it will be found by examining section 3679 of the Revised Statutes that—

No Department of the Government shall expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

So that here was a direct and specific provision of the statutes (not the only one, either) prohibiting any executive officer of the Government from spending a dollar in excess of appropriations previously made; and as I before remarked and now reiterate, that provision of the statutes conforms to the spirit of the Constitution, which prohibits any expenditure of money from the Treasury until appropriations therefor have been made. So that it was impossible without violation of the provisions of this statute for any executive officer to expend money in excess of the appropriations made for the purpose.

This practice of compelling employés to work more than eight hours presents, therefore, a method of avoiding the operation of this statute by creating a claim against the Government, and that, too, in violation of another enactment of law which provides that eight hours per day shall be the ordinary time of service for employés of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. ROGERS. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for his courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, the observations I have made are sufficient to invite the attention of the House and the country to the fact that this custom growing up in the Departments, of avoiding the provisions of the statute and creating claims against the Government without authority of law, is in express violation of the spirit of the Constitution of our country, which prohibits the expenditure of public money until appropriations have been made therefor. But this, perhaps, is not, as I said before, such a violation, because in its present status it is a mere claim against the Government—a claim that the Department had no right to create, arising in pursuance of an order, without authority of law. I say "without authority of law," because I have given the statutes a pretty careful examination, and I can find no law modifying these acts of Congress which I have just cited. I repeat that this practice, growing up, perhaps, under this as well as other administrations, brought this Congress to the consideration of a bill, going back and undertaking to adjust salaries over a period of twenty years, involving the Government in enormous expenditures, probably in great suits in the courts, and other difficulties of the kind which I have mentioned.

Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as these claims were created under the present Administration I am glad they have been brought to the attention of the present Administration, so that each administration shall at least clean up and clear up whatever may have been done wrong under it, if anything has been done wrong.

I desire also to call attention to a provision found in the act of May 1, 1884, volume 23, Statutes at Large, page 17, as follows:

* * * And hereafter no Department or officer of the United States shall accept voluntary service for the Government or employ personal service in excess of that authorized by law, except in cases of sudden emergency involving the loss of human life or the destruction of property.

I also desire to print the following tables as illustrating what has been done in this regard:

Record of employés, with estimated additional compensation, etc.

[Record of employés embraced in orders of the Postmaster-General dated, respectively, April 11 and June 18, 1885, requiring extra hours of duty in the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, from said April 11, over a period extending to the 18th day of November, 1885, covering one hundred and eighty-nine working days, or three hundred and forty-three and one-half hours, with estimated additional compensation computed upon a basis of 60 cents per hour for the extra time shown, with copies of the official orders of the Postmaster-General appended.]

§ Removed October 19, 1885.
‖ Appointed August 28, 1885.

¶ F. A. Springer, clerk of class 1, performed extra service in the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General for two and one-half hours from April 11, 1885, to June 1, 1885. No record having been kept, I can not tell exactly the number of hours Mr. Springer worked, but with few exceptions he was present during the time noted.—JAS. R. ASH.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not understand that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] objects to the payment of these claims.

Mr. ROGERS. I expressly said that I did not; I think the claims are just and ought to be paid.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman's criticism goes rather to the conduct of the Postmaster-General in creating these claims. Now, the gentleman as well as this committee will remember that there are at times great emergencies thrust upon administrations. I find that these claims arose almost entirely in the appointment and salary divisions. In April, May, and June, 1885, there was an emergency cast upon the "civil-service reform" administration of President Cleveland; that is to say, the hasty removal of officials throughout the country and the substitution of new and untried men. This necessitated the working of these clerks in the appointment division during extra hours; and as these tried officials were removed it became necessary to adjust their accounts; and it was a matter of mercy to them that these extra services were rendered and the accounts adjusted, for even with this additional amount of work performed during these extra hours, some of these accounts, to my personal knowledge, remained for over two years untouched, even in instances where the amounts were small.

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], who the other day objected to an item of precisely similar character which I offered by way of amendment to this bill, will allow me to call his attention to the character of this paragraph. It is a provision for the payment to employés of money honestly earned by them when acting under the command of their superior officer, a precisely similar case to that which I presented the other day, and to which the gentleman was swift to raise a point of order. I have some objection, sir, to points of order being confined entirely to the Committee on Appropriations. I think that they who invoke the law so earnestly and so often ought at least to keep within speaking distance of the law themselves.

I also want to call the gentleman's attention to another gross infraction of the parliamentary law which he invoked against me the other day. I want to call his attention to two items in this bill on page 8, where he makes appropriations for two public buildings in Texas, not only without authority of law, but expressly against the statute law, the language of the bill being "for completion in excess of the limit," etc.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, when those items were put upon the appropriation bill I distinctly stated to the committee that I did not insist upon them; that if they were contrary to law and any member thought it his duty to raise a point of order upon them, he could do so.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Ah! But the gentleman himself did not raise the point of order that they were in violation of statute law.

Mr. RANDALL. But the report states the fact.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I only ask that fair dealing all round be followed in this matter. That is all I ask; and that I do insist upon.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of having section 4 of the act approved March 3, 1883, read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several Executive Departments, in the interest of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employés of whatever grade or class in their respective Departments not less than seven hours of labor each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or executive order: Provided, That the heads of the Departments may, by special order stating the reason, further extend or limit the hours of service of any clerk or employé in their Departments, respectively, but in case of an extension it shall be without additional compensation; and all absence from the Departments on the part of said clerks or other employés in excess of such leave of absence as may be granted by the heads thereof, which shall not exceed thirty days in any one year, except in case of sickness, shall be without pay.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say under the terms of that provision the time of service may be extended from seven to ten or twelve or any other number of hours, but it is expressly provided that it shall be without additional compensation.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the date of that act?

Mr. CANNON. March 3, 1883. It has been the practice of Congress on several occasions, notwithstanding the terms of that law, where it has been found necessary to extend the hours of labor in any Department, to pay for the extra hours' work—notably in the Treasury Department during the refunding period, and in the War Department, in the Adjutant-General's Office, where the number of hours was extended. We have those precedents and that the committee submitted this on the recommendation and with the approval of the Postmaster-General, but stating, as I state now, there is no obligation incurred nor is there any legal obligation on the part of the Government. In the line of precedent it is believed to be equitable they should receive compensation for extra hours' work. It is for the House to determine whether under this supposed equity they shall have this compensation.

Mr. ROGERS. One moment. I have not found the statute cited by the gentleman from Illinois. That does not authorize this expenditure—this remaining balance from April 11 to June 13.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after line 18, page 39, the following, to wit: "To pay Mississippi Central Railroad Company, $4,636."

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to raise a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What is the point of order?

Mr. SAYERS. There is no law authorizing the payment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, there is a law authorizing the payment of it. It has been audited long ago and the claim has been allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

By Executive Document No. 210, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, House of Representatives, it will be found this is one of the claims allowed by the proper accounting officer of the Treasury with the approval of Mr. Fairchild, the then Acting Secretary. In that Department will be found the letter of D. McConville, the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, under date Washington, D. C., January 19, 1886, in reference to this claim, which was transmitted to Hon. Daniel Manning, the Secretary of the Treasury. It is a debt audited and due under authority of law.

Mr. CANNON. What is the date of the claim?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is an old claim, but it is not barred by any statute.

Mr. CANNON. What is the date?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will send to the Clerk and have read from page 17 and page 34 of the document to which I have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

[See Executive Document No. 26, House of Representatives, first session Forty-seventh Congress, page 77.]

Claim.	Appropriation from which payable.	Fiscal year in which the expenditure was incurred.	Amount.
The Mississippi Central R. R. Co.: For amount of Post-Office Department drafts in favor of W. Goodman, president of the Mississippi Central R. R. Co., dated August 17, 1861, in payment for mail transportation from April 1 to May 31, 1861, returned and canceled in April and May, 1866.	Deficiency in postal revenues, 1882 and prior years.	1861.....	$4,636.01

Mr. SAYERS. Before the amendment is submitted I ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN] to state what he knows in reference to this claim.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I can not be taken off the floor to have any testimony introduced. When that testimony is introduced I hope I will have an opportunity to cross-examine the witness. I ask the Clerk to read from page 34 of the same document.

The Clerk read as follows:

Claim No. 137 is of a different nature. The records of this office show that a settlement was made with the Mississippi Central Railroad Company in August, 1861, the balance found due being paid in part by a post-office warrant on the Treasurer of the United States, and in part by "Auditor's" or "collection" drafts drawn on postmasters on or near the road. Had the whole amount been paid by warrant, as the statutes contemplated, and the company had a right to demand, the mail service not being under contract and the company not therefore obligated to make collections, payment of the warrant would have closed the account. If the warrant had been returned unpaid funds would have been released to meet the issue of a new warrant without action of Congress.

The drafts issued were in the nature of "bills" for the collection of balances due by postmasters. When evidence of the collection of such drafts is received, then, and not until then, the proper appropriation is charged with the amount received by the contractor, if due him on account.

The amount reported to be due the company is the the total of such collection drafts returned by the company in 1866 as "not collected." There being no funds available to pay the balance, the claim was included in the estimates of claims under the act of July 7, 1884. I am of the opinion that justice to this creditor requires that the claim be again submitted with a full statement of the nature of the case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order permit me to state that you will see from the communication just read that there was service performed under the law; that this service was paid for in the shape of drafts, which drafts were not collected, but were returned, and therefore it is still an unpaid debt, a subsisting obligation upon the Government, if it means to pay such claims.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Can the gentleman state whether this man was paid by the Confederate government?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I know nothing about whether he was so paid or not. I was not postmaster-general of the Confederate States, nor was I in the postal service of the Confederacy, and can only answer from information. I am informed that he was not paid.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. DINGLEY. Was the service performed for the Confederate government carrying their mails?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If I caught the question of the gentleman from Maine aright, it was whether this service was performed for the Confederate government?

Mr. DINGLEY. That was the question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Of course it was not. It was performed for the United States Government; it was settled by the United States Government; the contractor did the service for the United States Government; it was paid by the United States Government in the shape of drafts, and the drafts were drawn on other persons and were not paid. The drafts were returned, and the contractor has not been paid, and that is all. There is no question of war, there is no question of belligerency, none of loyalty. It is simply a question, a plain, simple question, of whether the Government will pay a debt twenty-eight years of age; that is all.

I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, who, I believe, wishes to make a statement.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, at the first session of this Congress the attorneys in charge of this claim came to me and asked me to offer a bill providing for the payment of the claim and press it before Congress. I addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of ascertaining the facts in the case; and the papers were presented to me for examination. My examination resulted in the ascertainment of these facts: Here was a claim for the transportation of the mails, maturing in 1861, which was audited by the Treasury Department, and the holders of the claim, or of this particular part, war having already broken out but not being declared, preferred to have the drafts for the payment of the claim upon Southern post-offices, and they were drawn upon Southern postmasters, the whole of them divided up so as to get them in as good shape as possible for collection, and in that shape were received by the party. I have never yet been able to find from any man living that the money was not collected.

Now, this road, for whose benefit this amendment is suggested, after the close of the war had a mortgage resting upon it, and under that mortgage it was sold to the creditors of the road, who are now claiming this fund as one of the assets that should have passed. But the road and its stockholders, or somebody else, are also claiming it. Upon an ascertainment of these facts I returned the claim to the gentlemen and advised them to have it put into the hands of a committee for the purpose of an investigation. They said it was too late to do that. I then suggested that they go to the Senate committee and let a committee there investigate it and pass upon it. This they did not do, and now this amendment is offered here precisely as it was put in my hands for the purpose of getting it acted upon by the House.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman—but I believe you are against the claim?

Mr. MORGAN. I am against the claim. I do not believe it is a just claim. I believe that these parties have got their money already.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Should it not go to the War Claims Committee, anyhow?

Mr. MORGAN. It should be investigated by some committee, and not be put upon the bill in the shape of an amendment, as now proposed. They declined to let it be investigated, and now it comes here for action.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman has concluded——

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Would it not be better to have it embodied in a separate bill and then send it to the War Claims Committee?

Mr. MORGAN. In my judgment the right committee would be this very Committee on Claims. Let them take it under consideration and investigate it. But these parties decline to allow that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The only objection to what my friend from Mississippi suggests is that this is exactly what I tried to do, but failed. I went personally to the gentleman in charge of this bill and handed him the report, and asked to have it investigated.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. But is not this the wrong committee? Is not the War Claims Committee the proper one to investigate it?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, sir; I think not. This is exactly the committee, because this is a deficiency just like the millions of dollars for pensions passed this morning. It is a debt due by the Government for services rendered and unpaid, and is a deficiency.

Mr. MORGAN. Let me ask the gentleman this one question: Can you say that this has not been paid?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. As the gentleman from Mississippi is aware, for I consulted him about it, I know nothing at all of the details of the case except the fact that the Sixth Auditor reports this matter as a valid claim, and I know nothing else except what that report and the recommendations of the Secretary show. That is the whole of it.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, I venture this assertion from the little investigation I have made, and that is: That this claim was probably paid in 1861 by the Confederate States government out of money belonging to the United States. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Texas to submit a point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I will just take a ruling upon the point of order without discussing the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas again submit his point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I made the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply desires to hear the point of order, and not the merits of the question.

Mr. SAYERS. I will withdraw the point of order and take a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think it is due for me to say that if the gentleman from Mississippi will say upon his character as a gentleman and a member of this House that he believes it to have been paid I shall withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I say this——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Wait a moment. Because if he has investigated and found that it ought not to be paid I will withdraw it; but if he says that loosely and only thinks the claim is a claim which was paid by the Confederate government, then I think it ought to be paid. Now, if the gentleman will say that he believes it has been paid——

Mr. MORGAN. I will say this: I investigated this subject with the intention of presenting it if I found out, in my opinion, it was an appropriation proper to be provided. I became satisfied that there was so much doubt about its being just and of its having been paid, that I came to the conclusion that it should be investigated. I recommended that it should be, but the gentleman who was in charge of the matter declined to permit an investigation in the manner I suggested.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Instead of the gentleman that brought it to me declining any investigation, at his request I went to the gentleman in charge of the deficiency bill, the late Judge Burnes, and handed him these papers and asked him to investigate this claim. He died; and when I was informed that my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] had charge of the bill, I took the papers to him and asked him to investigate it, and I understood from the gentleman from Texas, if he will allow me to say what occurred, that the matter was so complicated with other claims—ante-bellum claims about postal service that had been before the House and the Committee on Appropriations—that he did not feel willing to introduce another one of these claims; therefore, there was nothing left except to bring the matter before this committee. This was the committee on the deficiency bill. I was left with no other remedy, having gone to the two gentlemen who had had the matter in charge.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make a single statement. When the attorneys representing this claim placed it in my hands, having exhausted every other source of information that I could obtain, I went to Mr. Burnes and asked him about it; and he told me that he had given it investigation and was satisfied the claim ought not to be allowed; and especially that it ought not until after a careful and searching examination had been made.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say a single word, not especially in regard to this claim, because I know nothing of the facts; but as a matter of history it will be borne in mind by those who were here in former Congresses, that at the time there was a bill passed appropriating $375,000 for the purpose of paying the just claims of those who were contractors for the transportation of the mails by all the methods devised—by rail, steamboat, and star route—and that it became a law. It was decided, however, by the Department that they would not pay any of the claims until all the claims were in, and then that they would pay pro rata according to the amount of the appropriation.

Another difficulty grew out of it. I am sorry to say that there were some claims presented on which payment had been made by the Confederate government, and therefore they were improper and unjust claims; but there still remain due now a large number of claims which have not been paid. I mention this as a part of the history of legislation upon the subject. I am not familiar enough with the merits of the question in the present issue to say whether this is one of those claims.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. With the statement made by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN] I do not desire to press this amendment to a vote, but withdraw it.

Mr. ROGERS. I renew the amendment for the purpose simply of asking unanimous consent to print another provision of the statute and a table in connection with my remarks delivered a moment ago.

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fees and expenses of marshals: For payment of special and deputy marshals at Congressional elections, $124,000: Provided, That of the appropriation of $675,000 for fees and expenses of United States marshals and deputies for the fiscal year 1889, not exceeding $400,000 may be advanced to marshals, to be accounted for in the usual way, the residue to remain in the Treasury, to be used, if at all, only in the payment of the accounts of marshals in the manner provided in section 856, Revised Statutes.

For fees and expenses of marshals United States courts, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1888, $50,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to strike out the last word, and do so for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman in charge of the bill. Does this provide for the payment of special deputy marshals at the last Congressional election and include the whole deficiency for that purpose?

Mr. SAYERS. For the information of the committee and the gentleman from New Jersey, I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD a list of the items which go to make up that appropriation. We give them every dollar they ask.

The list is as follows:

Special deputies, Congressional election, 1888.

Alabama, middle and southern	$1,230
California, southern	2,460
California, northern	6,885
Colorado	625
Connecticut	1,600
Georgia, southern	10
Illinois, northern	19,450	(or $24,840)
Indiana	2,500
Louisiana, eastern	1,250
Maryland	6,400
Massachusetts	6,530	6,390
Missouri, eastern	3,100	129,055
		135,445
New York, northern (1886)		9,730
		145,175
New York, southern	49,100
New York, eastern	19,100
Ohio, southern	2,305
Pennsylvania, western	4,730
Pennsylvania, eastern	300
South Carolina	250
Virginia, eastern	1,440
Total	129,055

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want information from the committee as to whether this makes full payment, and the reason I ask is this, because, at least in my section, the number of special deputies appointed last fall was larger by about one-third than ever known before and much larger than the increase in the number of precincts.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to the gentleman this, that the representative of the Department of Justice who was before the subcommittee stated to us that it was impossible for him to ascertain the entire amount, but that the Department of Justice felt authorized to ask for this much.

Mr. BUCHANAN. How long ago was that?

Mr. SAYERS. I think that was last week, just before the bill was reported.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is several months since this expense was incurred. Does the gentleman say that it is impossible for the Department of Justice to give the amount of expenditure incurred by that Department for this purpose in the early part of last November?

Mr. SAYERS. That is the statement we have received—that the amounts had not all been reported to the Department.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask the question because, as I have said, I do know that in some sections of the country the expense was much larger than usual, and I am extremely anxious that, in the words of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], this administration shall clean up its own debts.

Mr. SAYERS. There was no effort upon the part of the committee to withhold any dollar that was necessary to pay for those services.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was not impugning the action of the committee at all. It acted, evidently, according to all the light that it had. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To compensate A. L. Rhodes, special counsel in the Mare Island case, being the remaining portion of his fee of $6,000, fiscal year 1888, $1,000.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, but I shall ask unanimous consent to go back to the part of the bill relating to the Treasury Department, where this amendment would be more appropriate.

Mr. SAYERS. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the sum of $2,345.44 be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated, being the unexpended balance of the amount appropriated by the act of March 3, 1885, for pay of disbursing agent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1886, and that the same be paid to William B. Morgan, late disbursing agent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for allowance of pay from July 24, 1885, to June 30, 1886, inclusive.

Mr. SAYERS. I shall be compelled to raise the point of order upon the amendment. That is a mere claim.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order for a moment.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Morgan was disbursing clerk for the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Shortly after the present administration came into power some of the officers of the Treasury Department felt that there was mismanagement, corruption, and fraud in that bureau. Those officials were perfectly right, because subsequent events and evidence showed that there was corruption and mismanagement of a very grievous character in that bureau. One of the victims of the suspicions of the Treasury officers was Mr. Morgan, the disbursing clerk.

He was suspended, and his accounts were examined and he was put upon the defensive——

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. Did this gentleman render any service to the Government during the time for which this amendment provides to pay him?

Mr. BAYNE. I was coming to that. Mr. Morgan, I say, was suspected of malfeasance in his office there. An examination was made, evidence was taken, he was put upon the defensive, and for more than a year he was occupied in defending himself against charges which were subsequently ascertained to be entirely groundless.

Through no fault of his he was suspended, and through no fault of his he was subjected to this examination, this trial as it were, and a whole year of his time was consumed in efforts to defend himself against charges in which at last there was found to be absolutely nothing. It is a clear case of injustice on the part of the Government toward this officer. There was probably some foundation for suspecting him, because at the beginning there was not that accurate knowledge as to the real offenders which was afterwards obtained, but subsequently those real offenders came to light, and Mr. Morgan was not one of them. His skirts were absolutely and perfectly clear and clean.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. And I understand that since his dismissal and subsequent trial no dereliction of duty on his part has been shown?

Mr. BAYNE. None whatever. The Department gave him a certificate that he was entirely exculpated from any and every charge, and that it was a mistake to have suspended him.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. And I understand that the position which he filled is still vacant.

Mr. BAYNE. The position is still vacant. There is another question involved here, Mr. Chairman. There was an appropriation to pay this gentleman. The appropriation was actually made; that money has not been paid out of the Treasury at all, and the amendment which I offer is a reappropriation of that money. Now, I submit to my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] that this is a case where it would be well enough not to raise the point of order, but to let justice be done.

Mr. SAYERS. I shall be forced to raise the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BAYNE. One word, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order. There was an act of Congress appropriating the money to pay for this service. That act is still in force. That appropriation still exists.

This service was rendered up to the time of the suspension of the disbursing clerk. His suspension was supposed to be for cause; but, as subsequently ascertained, it was not for cause at all, and the Department says so. Now, is it not competent to make this appropriation under existing law, the Government having ascertained that it suspended an officer without cause when it thought it was suspending him for cause? In other words, Mr. Chairman, is not this case analogous to the case of a simple employment for a year, the dismissal of the employé by reason of some alleged dereliction of duty, and a suit brought in court, the evidence disclosing all the facts and making it clear that there was no such dereliction of duty? In that event the plaintiff would beyond all doubt recover in an action in a court of justice. And is not this case analogous to that? For this reason should not this employé of the Government receive his compensation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not precisely understand the facts. Does the amendment propose to pay salary up to the time of the dismissal of the officer, or afterward?

Mr. BAYNE. It is to pay the officer for the time during which he was suspended—for the year for which an appropriation was made. It is for the balance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken on this amendment if it relates to service performed after the dismissal of the officer.

Mr. BAYNE. He was suspended; not dismissed.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if that is the status, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] on that point.

Mr. SAYERS. My understanding is that he was dismissed.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not understand that he was.

Mr. SAYERS. I so understand. I do not speak from personal knowledge, however—merely from information.

Mr. BAYNE. I will ask that this amendment be withheld for a moment or two until I can ascertain whether there was an actual dismissal or not.

Mr. SAYERS. The amendment can remain on the table while we go on with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection this amendment will be laid aside with the privilege of returning to it hereafter. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

To pay the widow of the late James N. Burnes the amount of salary for the unexpired term of his service as a member of the Fiftieth Congress, $545.51.

Mr. FORAN. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph last read the following:

To pay Samuel D. Craig for extra work on, and making new indexes to, the Calendar of the House, as per resolution of July 27, 1888, $600.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to raise a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. CRAIN. What is the point of order?

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will allow me, I will proceed to state it.

Mr. FORAN. I would like to hear the gentleman on the point of order before we discuss the merits.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, a resolution was adopted by this House at the last session directing the Committee on Appropriations to place on a certain bill designated by number an item of $600 to compensate Mr. Craig, the tally clerk, for some extra services. The Committee on Appropriations did not put that item in the deficiency bill. When that bill had been reported to the House and was under consideration in Committee of the Whole an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY]—I am not quite sure it was that gentleman, but I believe it was—appropriating $600 for the payment of these extra services. The Committee of the Whole then considering the bill voted the amendment down.

I base the point which I raise on these grounds: First, that there is no law or rule of the House, independent of the resolution to which I have referred, which authorizes the payment of this money. In the second place, if it should be held that this resolution would be sufficient to justify the payment of this money, then I state that the resolution had reference to a particular bill—not the bill under consideration, not any bill reported to this House during this session, but the last deficiency bill, the deficiency bill of the first session of the present Congress.

Mr. STEELE. Let me ask the gentleman, were not these services performed?

Mr. SAYERS. Well, to be candid with the gentleman, I will say I do not think the services were worth the money. But that goes to the merits of the case.

Now, the resolution adopted by the House was exhausted when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] offered the amendment and the Committee of the Whole voted it down—refused to pass it. This proposition increases the pay of this officer to the amount of $600 beyond the statute.

Mr. FORAN. First, one word as to the merits of this amendment. During the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress the pay of four of the five clerks at the Speaker's desk was increased from $3,000 to $3,600. In that proposition Mr. Craig was left out and his pay remains at $3,000 per annum. At the beginning of this Congress he was directed by a resolution of the House to make indexes of the Calendars of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose (Mr. LANHAM in the chair as Speaker pro tempore); and a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage by that body of a bill (H. R. 12485) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, with amendments in which concurrence was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the settlement of the titles to the lands claimed by or under the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians in Kansas or adversely thereto, and for other purposes.

A bill (S. 3920) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARLTON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session (Mr. ROGERS in the chair).

Mr. FORAN. The work entailed by this action of the House on Mr. Craig was enough for one man, although no extra compensation was provided for it. The resolution introduced early in the Fiftieth Congress——

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman cite that resolution? The Chair would like to know the language of it.

Mr. FORAN. I will send it up. First, there was a resolution introduced directing the Clerk to pay $600 out of the contingent fund of the House. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and that committee made the report which I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Appropriations Committee of the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives respectfully ask that you place the following amendment to the deficiency bill, as per the resolution hereinafter set forth, which was adopted by the House on the 27th day of July, 1888.

PREPARATION OF INDEX, CALENDARS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. FLOOD. I desire to submit a priviledged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay to Samuel D. Craig, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $600, in full compensation for preparing an index of the Calendars of the House for the first session of the Fiftieth Congress.

"The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution providing for the payment out of the contingent fund of the House to Samuel D. Craig the sum of $600 for extra services in the preparation of the Calendars, having considered the same, report that, in the judgment of your committee, the amount asked is very reasonable. The extra work on the Calendars is 40 per cent. at least in excess of any previous session, and there has been added an index (prepared by Mr. Craig) which has been of great benefit to the members as well as the public at large. The compilation of this index alone is well worth the sum asked, and the committee would recommend the passage of the resolution if the same were a legal charge upon the contingent fund; but as it is not, your committee therefore report the following substitute and recommend its adoption:

"Resolved, That there be paid to Samuel D. Craig the sum of $600 for extra services in connection with the preparation of the Calendars and indexing the same for the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, and that the Committee on Appropriations be directed to provide for the payment of said sum in the bill (H. R. 10896) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and prior years, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Committee on Accounts.

The substitute was adopted.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FORAN. The Chair will notice the words of this resolution:

Resolved, That there be paid to Samuel D. Craig.

The words are explicit. They admit of no doubtful meaning.

Resolved, That there be paid.

It was further resolved that this item be placed in the general deficiency bill. The Committee on Appropriations disregarded the action of the House, as it frequently does, and failed to insert the item in the deficiency bill for that session. It is said because it was not inserted in the bill of the last session it can not be inserted in this bill.

The language of the resolution reported by a committee of co-ordinate jurisdiction and adopted by the House is "resolved there be paid to Mr. Craig." I understand the point of order to be, because that was voted down in Committee of the Whole, it operates as a repeal. I do not think it does. The resolution directing this item to be placed in the deficiency bill of last session was passed by the House, and no act of a committee, even the Committee of the Whole, can repeal directly or by implication a solemn act of the House.

Mr. CRAIN. I understand that my colleague makes the point of order in the first place that there is no existing law justifying this appropriation, and in the second place that if there were any existing law that the Committee of the Whole not having acted on the appropriation, and the Committee on Appropriations having failed to do its duty by refusing to carry out the instructions of the House under the resolution which was adopted, it is practically void and of no effect. I believe he has made the further point that it is an increase of salary. It seems to me this last objection would be good if it were an original proposition submitted to this committee for the first time, but not in reference to a resolution adopted by the House and having the force of law.

Will the gentleman from Texas having charge of this bill contend because an officer instructed by law to perform a certain duty fails to perform that duty therefore the law is repealed? Will he contend because the Committee on Appropriations refuses to do what it was instructed to do by a vote of the House therefore the action of the House is repealed? There is no more force in the other proposition that because the Committee of the Whole did the same thing therefore it is repealed.

Mr. Chairman, this resolution directs that this man shall be paid, and it goes further and specifies the manner in which it shall be done. Would not the first part of the resolution be pending to-day if the second part had not been added? Suppose the resolution simply declared there should be paid the sum of $500 to Samuel D. Craig without specifying the manner in which it should be paid, is not that existing law? But when the House goes further and directs the manner in which it shall be paid who can doubt it?

No committee of this House, whether it be the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, has the right to repeal a resolution which has been adopted by the House. The only way in which it can be done is upon a motion to reconsider in the House and a vote in favor of the repeal of the resolution, or by a vote in the House rescinding or repealing the resolution itself. But what this committee can not actually do by a vote, namely, repeal a resolution of the House, it is contended by my colleague that it can accomplish by indirection; that is, refusing to do what the House has directed it to do. There is nothing in the point of order raised here so far as this question is involved; and, as I said before, while the point of order raised upon the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, submitted by the chairman of the committee, that it is an increase of pay, would be good if this were an independent proposition submitted to the committee for the first time, it is not tenable when it is predicated upon a resolution which is of binding force and effect and which has the force and effect of law when adopted by a vote of the House, which no committee has a right to repeal either by direction or indirection.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROGERS in the chair). If this question was presented now as it was at the last session of Congress the Chair would, without reference to whether the ruling heretofore made was right or wrong, confirm that ruling; but the question presented now is a very different one. This resolution provides that provision shall be made in a special bill which is named in the resolution for a certain purpose. As the Chair understands it that provision was made, or if not made directly by the Committee on Appropriations it was brought before the House and voted upon by the House.

Mr. FORAN. Voted upon in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, by the Committee of the Whole, and therefore all that the Committee on Appropriations had been required to do by the House was done, and their power was exhausted in that respect when they complied with the terms of the resolution.

Mr. TARSNEY. But that was during this session of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that; but this resolution provides "that there shall be paid to Samuel D. Craig the sum of $600 for extra services in connection with the preparation of the Calendars and the indexing of the same for the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, and that the Committee on Appropriations is directed to make provision for the payment of the same in the bill H. R. 10896."

The Chair does not understand this to be such a bill, or the particular bill referred to in the resolution, but another bill at another session of Congress, and the only similarity between them is that this is also a deficiency bill; so that the resolution passed by the House of Representatives directing the Appropriation Committee what to do was exhausted when that was done.

Now another appropriation bill is before the House, and it is proposed, in accordance with the terms of that resolution, to insert this provision on this bill. But the point of order is made, and we are compelled to fall back upon the language of the rule which provides that "no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto that is not authorized by law." This resolution to which the Chair has referred is not a law in the meaning of the rule quoted, the Chair thinks, but is a mere resolution instructing the Committee on Appropriations to do a certain act at a certain time; and the Chair understands that there is no law in existence authorizing this appropriation, unless this resolution, which the Chair does not think has the force of law in the meaniug of the rule, is still in force. The Chair thinks it has not. With the utmost deference to the Chairman of the committee who ruled on this question before, the Chair thinks, in conclusion, that the proposition now is placed upon an entirely different footing from what it then occupied, and that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CRAIN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PETERS. Will the Chair permit me to call his attention to a question of fact which the Chair assumed, as I understand, in his ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas; but the gentleman from Texas appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the Chair thinks the appeal is not debatable.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to make this parliamentary inquiry: If the Chair becomes advised that it has made a mistake in regard to a question of fact, upon which it predicates the decision, would not that change the ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. Unquestionably, if opinion turns on such fact.

Mr. PETERS. I understand this ruling is based upon the fact that the Appropriations Committee did report this amount for the payment of these services. That is incorrect. The Appropriations Committee, notwithstanding the instructions of the House, did not embody that claim in the House bill which they were instructed to put in. When the bill came into the House, an effort was made to provide for the payment in the Committee of the Whole, but the committee voted down the proposition to make the payment at that time. Now, as a question of fact, the Appropriations Committee having failed to comply with the resolution, is the resolution not a continuing one until compliance is had?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that would not alter the fact; because if the amendment were offered and voted down, it was a substantial compliance with the resolution; and, at all events, the resolution did not require anything to be done except on that specific bill, and the Chair thinks the whole resolution must be construed together.

Mr. TARSNEY. I rise to ask unanimous consent to make a statement, as the Chair holds that this is not debatable.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to the making of any statements as to what has passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to the request of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman wants to put it in the RECORD I have no objection, but it delays the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it was in error; and that the appeal is debatable. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TARSNEY. Some time ago, and during the first session of the present Congress, the House by resolution directed the Committee on Appropriations, if I understand it correctly, to make this appropriation. The Committee on Appropriations refused to do it. Now it comes back to us here, and all I want to understand is whether the House of Representatives is smaller than the Committee on Appropriations. They have been once instructed what to do. They have not done it, and here we are to-day confronted with the same proposition that we had on the 30th day of July last.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair be sustained?

Mr. CRAIN. I understand, but I have no personal knowledge on the subject, because I have not inquired, that this proposition was submitted to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union by the gentleman from Michigan as an independent proposition, and it was not based upon the resolution as submitted. I desire to be informed upon that before I proceed further. [To Mr. TARSNEY.] Is that correct?

Mr. TARSNEY. It was offered in conformity with the instructions of the House to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CRAIN. Now, I submit to the committee that the resolution is law without reference to the particular instruction given in regard to the manner in which the appropriation should be made. Because the resolution was specific in pointing to the bill is no reason why the resolution should be repealed because the appropriation is not put in that bill.

I presume that the object of the Committee on Accounts in specifying that bill was because that was the pending deficiency bill of that session. But it will hardly be contended that because it mentions that bill, because it was the pending bill, and that the Committee on Appropriations failed to make this provision, or that it was not put in by the House, that was an end of it. Of what value are the instructions of the House to the committee if that committee can ignore them by refusing to obey? Of what value is the resolution of the House of Representatives requiring a certain thing to be done when the gentlemen charged with the performance of that duty fail and even refuse to do it? And even going further, and admitting for argument's sake—and it is a fact—that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union did exactly what the Committee on Appropriations did, namely, refused to incorporate this amendment in that bill, will it be contended that from that failure the law lapses and the resolution is repealed, and that it has no binding effect? Suppose that that instruction had been omitted from the resolution. Would it not be binding? Suppose the House had contented itself with saying, "We wish to be paid Mr. Craig $500 additional," specifying what fund it should be paid out of, and by what committee it should be reported. Would not it be law, and would not it be proper to introduce a resolution or a bill providing for the appropriation or to offer an amendment for the purpose in a proper bill to carry that resolution into effect? Eliminate if you will the conditions attached to the resolution, and it is pending. That condition was not intended as a limitation. It was not intended that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or the Committee on Appropriations failing to incorporate this amount in the bill described, that it should never be paid. That was simply going further than the statement of the resolution itself. It not only declared that it should be paid, but paid at once; and that was the reason that bill was specified.

Because it was not provided for in that particular bill it does not go to the effect that it should not be provided for in any other bill or at any other time and that it would never be paid. The claim was submitted to the Committee on Accounts, and that committee simply declared that it ought to be paid; that it was a just claim and that it would provide an appropriation for its payment if it were within its jurisdiction. But they recommended a substitute resolution which states that the claim is a just claim and that it should be paid. The House adopted that resolution. The House made it law. The status of the claim was fixed by that action, which was a declaration of the House that it should be paid; and the further provision that it should be put in this particular bill was not intended as a limitation upon its action. It was simply intended to direct the Committee on Appropriations, then at work on a particular bill, having jurisdiction of this matter, to perform a duty which was laid down for it by the action of the House. And I repeat the question whether the Committee of the Whole or the Committee on Appropriations has the right to defeat the will of the House, ascertained by actual vote in the House, by thus refusing to perform that duty which had been imposed.

Mr. PETERS. The order that was made by this House on the Committee on Appropriations was to bring in in a general appropriation bill in the first session an appropriation of $600. Not having been complied with by the Committee on Appropriatoins at the last session, this is a continuing order. Now, it seems to me there can be no question about that. The order of this House was for the Committee on Appropriations to do a certain thing. But the Committee on Appropriations did not do that which they were directed to do by the House. What was the object of that order of the House? It was to have this amount put in a deficiency bill. It was the object and intention of the House to have this amount paid at the earliest moment; and it named in that order the deficiency bill that would follow first.

But after the Committee on Appropriations failed to obey the orders of the House and bring in this amount upon the first deficiency bill that followed the order, it remained a continuing order, applying to any subsequent deficiency bill that could be brought in during the same Congress; and consequently that order was as binding upon the Committee on Appropriations to bring in the amount in the present deficiency bill as it was in the past deficiency bill. In other words, there stands as a provision of law a statutory enactment requiring the Committee on Appropriations to bring in an item in a deficiency bill of $600 to pay the tally-clerk for work that he had performed. The Committee on Appropriations neither in the first session nor in this session have complied with that order; and now I claim—when there is a motion on the part of a member of this House to require the Committee on Appropriations to comply with the order of the House or to place the Committee of the Whole House in a position that they can act upon it—the question or point of order that it has not been authorized by existing law will not lie against it; and hence, this being a continuing order, I think, with all due deference, that the decision of the Chair was erroneous.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Kansas has certainly very ingeniously treated this matter. He wants a decision of the House upon a point not now before the House—whether the Committee on Appropriations performed their duty or not. The question before the House is whether the decision of the Chair is absolutely correct.

I believe that it is. Now, whenever the Committee on Appropriations is properly under discussion here, we will try, some of us, to defend it, and whenever a proposition of this kind is submitted some of us will have something to say about the merits of this claim, which is properly no claim at all. The point is the one which the Chair has decided, namely, that the instruction of the House given by the first resolution was revoked by the House itself at the very same session.

Mr. CRAIN. It was avoided by the failure of the Committee on Appropriations to do its duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the resolution was disposed of by that action.

Mr. CRAIN. It was disposed of by the failure of the Committee on Appropriations to do its duty and by the failure of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. The House itself changed its mind.

Mr. CRAIN. No, it was not the House; it was the Committee of the Whole that changed its mind.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, that is the House.

Mr. CRAIN. That is not the House, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania very well knows.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope there may be no misunderstanding about this matter. Last year the Committee on Accounts reported to this House a resolution which the House adopted, instructing the Committee on Appropriations to place this item in the bill. What for? For an additional service which had been imposed upon this clerk. He was drawing a salary simply as tally-clerk of the House, and he was directed to make the Calendar of the House, and I think my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and all of us have had facilities through the use of that Calendar which otherwise we could not have had. That was an additional service imposed upon this clerk, and it was for that additional service that the Committee on Accounts reported the resolution which the House adopted, instructing the Committee on Appropriations to report this item. Whether that was right or wrong I am not here to say at this time. But I do say that the House did so instruct the Committee on Appropriations, and the committee did not make the report during the first session of this Congress, and I like to see the Committee on Appropriations now pleading the statute of limitations because that resolution referred to a different bill from the one now under consideration!

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer one suggestion on this point. There are but two ways in which authority can be given to put an item into an appropriation bill. One is by an act of Congress signed by the President; the other is by the action of either House in relation to any item of expense which can properly be paid out of the contingent fund of that House. This item can not be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives. So the Committee on Accounts decided, and they therefore recommended the passage of a resolution instructing the Committee on Appropriations to put the item in an appropriation bill. It failed there, and, it not being an item that could be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, the action of this House could not constitute such an obligation and authority for the payment of the money as is necessary to authorize the committee to include it in the bill or make it in order as an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. If this clerk did not have the Calendar to prepare he would have very little to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, shall the decision of the Chair be sustained?

The question was taken, and the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRAIN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 22.

Mr. FORAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FORAN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 27.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist further on the point of no quorum?

Mr. FORAN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum has voted. The Chair hopes that members will come forward and vote.

The count was resumed; and the tellers reported—ayes 124, noes 28.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman still insist upon the point of no quorum?

Mr. FORAN. Entering my protest against the decision of the Chair and against the outrage committed on this clerk I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes have it, and the decision of the Chair is sustained.

Mr. RANDALL. There has been no injustice done to anybody. Injustice is sought to be done to the Treasury.

Mr. CRISP. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 47, after line 7, insert to pay John B. Clark, Clerk of the House of Representatives, for services in compiling and arranging for the printer and indexing testimony in contested-election cases, as authorized by the act entitled "An act relating to contested elections approved March 2, 1887," the sum of $1,000, and the additional sum of $1,000 to such employés in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives as the Clerk may designate, and in such proportion as he may deem just, for assistance rendered in this work.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to explain to the House the necessity for this amendment, which I offer by the unanimous direction of the Committee on Elections. Prior to the act of 1887, referred to in the amendment, evidence that was sent in from the various districts where there were contests was preserved here by the Clerk and turned over to the Committee on Elections, when appointed, and the committee supervised the printing and the preparation of the index.

In 1887 an act was passed to facilitate the consideration of contested-election cases. It provided that the Clerk of the House should prepare and have printed the evidence in such cases, should index it, etc. It provided also that he might hear the respective parties to any contest as to what was and what was not evidence, and determine what should be printed, the purpose being to hasten the determination of contested elections. In that law, though the Clerk was charged with this duty, there was no provision for paying him for the service. Of course it was a duty discharged in vacation. It required the assistance of several of his clerks for some two or three months; in the report from the Committee on Elections the precise time is stated. It therefore becomes proper and just to pay this officer for this service.

I will say to the House that this difficulty will not arise again, because the House has recently devolved this duty on the clerk of the Committee on Elections, who has been made an annual clerk; so that he, in the long vacation between the two Congresses, can discharge this duty, prepare this evidence for the printer, make the indexes, etc. But since the passage of the act to which I have referred and up to the time when the clerk of our committee was made an annual clerk the Clerk of the House and his subordinates have had to prepare for the printer, index, and correct proofs of the evidence in nine contested-election cases, the evidence in one case alone covering 2,000 printed pages. The Committee on Elections was unanimous in the opinion that the adoption of this amendment would do only an act of justice to the Clerk of the House, and therefore I have been instructed to offer it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To equalize the salaries of the messengers of the House of Representatives, and those detailed as messengers, so that each shall receive the sum of $100 per month during their employment in the Fiftieth Congress, $7,909.

Mr. SAYERS. I raise a point of order on this amendment. My point is that there is no resolution of the House and no provision of law to authorize it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAYES] desire to be heard?

Mr. HAYES. As showing the merit and justice of the claim——

Mr. SAYERS. I object to any statement of the merits. Let the gentleman confine himself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa on the point of order.

Mr. HAYES. By way of preliminary and as a foundation for my remarks, as showing the merit and justice of the claim itself, I will say that a resolution for this purpose was introduced and referred to the Committee on Accounts; and that committee agreed to report it favorably. A report was prepared, which has not been presented, as it was not desired to put it on the Calendar. That report is as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution, Miscellaneous Document No. 41, in relation to equalizing the salaries and compensation of the messengers of the House of Representatives, submit the following report thereon:

That they find that there are some forty-two messengers of the House, and that, while they do substantially the same work, their pay varies from $60 to $100 per month.

The committee can see no good reason why all these men should not receive the same pay where they do the same amount and kind of work, and there seems to be an unjust discrimination in this matter, which grows out of the fact that they were employed under different resolutions passed at different times.

The amount mentioned in the resolution and which is all that is necessary to equalize the compensation of these messengers for the whole term of the Fiftieth Congress, so as to pay each the sum of $100 per month, is $7,909.

There are, at present, on the messenger's roll twenty-three persons receiving $100 per month, which includes the soldiers' roll of fourteen persons, nine at $83.33⅓, two at $75, two at $70, three at $67, and three at $60 per month, and the amount mentioned in the resolution equalizes them all for the whole period of the Fiftieth Congress at $100 per month.

The duties of these men are quite laborious and exacting, as they are, in addition to their ordinary daily labor, assigned to the care of some committee-room, and are obliged to attend all committee meetings. During last session of this Congress they attended no less than seventy-eight night sessions—several lasting all night.

We believe that the resolution is just, and we therefore recommend its adoption.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order. These particular messengers are employed under authority of law. They are receiving different rates of compensation; and this is simply for the purpose of equalizing them. Such being the case, I do not believe the point of order is well taken. These officers are already employed under authority of law and are receiving some payment under such authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employés of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 20th day of October, 1888, including the Capitol police, for extra services during the Fiftieth Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. SAYERS. I make a point of order on that amendment. I submit that there is no rule of the House and no law authorizing the appropriation.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time that a point of order has been raised upon an amendment of this kind when offered upon an appropriation bill. I find that the same point was made in the Forty-seventh Congress. Hon. John A. Kasson, who was then in the chair in the Committee of the Whole, remarked in deciding this point of order:

The Chair desires to state the only doubt in his mind arises from the fact that it relates to an existing service which is constantly before the House; and in view of the numerous precedents which exist and which he has not had time to examine to see whether the point of order is settled, but concerning as it does the entire body of the House, he feels it is a case where, without shirking proper responsibility, he ought to submit it to the judgment of the committee.

He therefore submitted to the Committee of the Whole the question whether the point of order should be sustained. The vote was 128 to 24 in favor of inserting the amendment.

In the Forty-eighth Congress I find the Speaker of the House, on page 5502 of the RECORD, ruling as follows:

The Chair finds upon an examination of the records that on two occasions heretofore an amendment similar to this—the Chair thinks in precisely the same language—has been offered, and a point of order made against it, and in both instances the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, by a very large vote, held the provision to be in order.

In the Forty-eighth Congress, second session, a similar proposition was inserted in the deficiency appropriation bill. The proceedings will be found on page 2148 of the RECORD for that session. There is no necessity for the reading of those proceedings. It would only waste time uselessly.

In the Forty-ninth Congress, Mr. Hammond, of Georgia, being in the chair, a similar amendment was offered, and the point of order was made that there was no law authorizing the item. The question was again submitted to the Committee of the Whole, and that committee decided to insert it. I will say nothing as to the justice of the appropriation, but leave the matter subject to the decision of the Chair, only referring to these volumes as precedents for the amendment. Following the precedents, Mr. Chairman, I would respectfully ask, if the Chair has doubt upon the question, to submit it to the decision of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that hitherto on more than one occasion an amendment precisely similar or having the same purpose in view has been submitted to the House, and the most recent decision was that of the Speaker himself, who held the amendment to be in order. The Chair happens to have that decision before him, and will ask the Clerk to read certain paragraphs from it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds upon an examination of the records that on two occasions heretofore an amendment similar to this—the Chair thinks in precisely the same language—has been offered and a point of order made against it, and in both instances the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, by a very large vote, held the provision to be in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; but does that action of the Committee of the Whole establish a rule for the control of the House? It must be apparent, Mr. Speaker, there is no law authorizing this item.

The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair is not absolutely bound by any decision of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, although such a decision is certainly entitled to very great respect when the question has been discussed and decided by that committee, consisting as it does of the same members that compose the House itself. In order to preserve uniformity in the rulings upon this question the Chair thinks he ought to admit the amendment and allow the House to vote upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. And hold that there is a law authorizing this appropriation; that it comes within the third section of the twenty-first rule?

The SPEAKER. The provision seems to have been held in order heretofore upon the ground that it had been included in an appropriation bill, and was the law at least for that year.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair had doubts as to the correctness of the ruling of the Speaker he would nevertheless adhere to it, since he would not feel at liberty while occupying the chair temporarily to dissent from it. The Chair admits the amendment, and the committee can vote on it.

Mr. SAYERS. As to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. On the amendment itself.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question, if he can tell the committee what additional expense this would involve?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not know that I can answer the question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is one of the firm which employs these men. I am simply a junior member of that firm. I suppose he ought to be able to give me that information. [Laughter.] I must say that if there is any Congress in which such a month's extra compensation should be paid to its employés it is the Fiftieth Congress. But, Mr. Chairman, let us look at the precedents. I find that it was paid away back as far as the Twenty-ninth Congress. On August 3, 1846, it was granted; on March 3, 1847, the Clerk of the House was directed to pay it. On August 7, 1848, it was again granted; also on March 9, 1849, September 20, 1850, and March 30, 1851. In July, 1854, 20 per cent. extra compensation was allowed. Further, on the 3d day of March, 1857, there was the same provision, and so on without stopping to enumerate them. Before the war House after House and Congress after Congress made such an appropriation. After the war broke out, and it was necessary to raise thousands of millions of dollars to sustain the cause of the Union, the House, in a fit of economy, refused the appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think the House was in a "fit" but in a very healthy condition of mind.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman is right. Rigid economy was then necessary, for every dollar was needed. Under the necessities of the situation at that time, Congress felt itself unable to pay an extra month's salary; but in July, 1879, it was again paid; and also on March 3, 1880, and July 7, 1884, and on March 4, 1885.

Now, the Fiftieth Congress has been in session longer than any of its predecessors. It has been in continuous session since the first Monday of December, 1887, with the exception of forty days. The average time consumed in legislation by former Congresses has been eleven months. This Congress has broken the record, and has taken fifteen months. The tariff debate occupied much of that time. I am of the opinion that any employé of the House who listened to that debate night and day, as many were compelled to do, and came out alive, ought to be entitled to extra compensation. [Laughter.] Then the filibustering season occurred and the members were kept here all night long, and until the sun shone over the top of the Washington Monument.

Mr. HATCH. I would suggest to the gentleman that the Washington Monument is west of the Capitol. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOKER. Well, the sun gets there sometimes.

Mr. MCADOO. The New York Sun shines all round the monument.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The sun gets there, as my friend from Mississippi suggests, some time during the day. Its beams gild the top of the monument as soon as it rises. There were eighty-eight night sessions in the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, and there have been one hundred and four altogether up to this time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. CUMMINGS.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Missouri. During these night sessions, Mr. Chairman, nine-tenths of the employés have been compelled to remain here and work, and all of them are required to be here every day. Many of them got no rest during the holidays. The hard work of the session killed one of the official reporters. The work of this Congress has been exhausting and excessive. Is proof of this needed? That desk [pointing to the seat of Mr. Burnes], draped in black, tells the story of its exhaustive nature—a great member dead from overwork. There is no man in this House who can not compute and who does not know the arduous labors of the employés during this session. I have offered this resolution, sir, because I felt it to be my duty to do so. It is an act of common justice to these men and a duty which I owe to myself and to this House. [Applause.] I will not occupy the attention of the committee any further.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 14.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, do not do that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have made the point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman, in order to ask unanimous consent that there shall be a yea-and-nay vote upon this in the House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I hope unanimous consent will be given.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, can the Committee of the Whole by any proceedings in committee bind the House?

The CHAIRMAN. It can not except by consent of the parties forming both the committee and the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. It can on the individual honor of each member of the committee.

Mr. STEELE. With the understanding that if the gentleman can get enough votes to call for the yeas and nays he can have it; otherwise I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum having been withdrawn, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not withdraw the point of no quorum. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. I understood the gentleman had withdrawn the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The committe divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 150, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12571) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONFEREES ON PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. By mistake the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] was appointed one of the managers of the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the pension appropriation bill (H. R. 11658). He declines to serve, and the Chair appoints Mr. LONG, who should have been appointed in the first place.

EULOGIES ON HON. JAMES N. BURNES.

The SPEAKER. This is the hour set apart for the consideration of resolutions in relation to the death of Hon. James N. Burnes, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, by a previous order of the House this hour was set apart for the presentation of tributes to the memory and eminent public services of our late colleague, Hon. James N. Burnes, of Missouri. In behalf of the delegation from Missouri upon this floor I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the following resolutions:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. James N. Burnes, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, that the House at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the melancholy duty devolves upon me of supplementing the resolutions just submitted with a brief summary of the salient features of my colleague's remarkable career. Born in the State of Indiana, August 22, 1827, at ten years of age he was taken by his parents to their future home, in Platte County, Missouri. With the usual academic advantages he had already developed such parts and promise that he was sent to the law school of Harvard University, from which he graduated in 1853.

His chosen profession he pursued with great distinction for twenty years. He was made circuit attorney three years after his graduation, and was presidential elector the same year. He was judge of the court of common pleas from 1868 to 1872. Colonel Burnes was a zealous member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Charity Lodge, No. 331; Mitchell Royal Arch Chapter, No. 89, and St. Joseph Commandery Knights Templar, No. 4, all of St. Joseph, Mo. He was also a member of St. Joseph Lodge, No. 22, Knights of Pythias, and Pocahontas Tribe, No. 10, Independent Order of Red Men. Mr. Speaker, from the commencement of his active career until his work was finished in these halls, a short month ago, that career was marked by cumulative and unbroken success.

But, sir, the mere record of the epochs of his advancements can but imperfectly chronicle the career of this extraordinary man. For more than thirty years James N. Burnes was a prominent and potential factor in the political, financial, social, and benevolent activities of the State he loved so well and that so loved and honored him. Not only was his financial ability signalized by the accumulation of a large private fortune, but he was identified with many most imposing public enterprises, among them the construction of the great bridges at Atchison and Leavenworth, the Southwestern Division of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, and at one time he was president of the Missouri Valley Railroad Company. At the time of his decease he was the principal owner and president of the St. Joseph Water Works Company, and the leading stockholder in several important banks. With what scrupulous rectitude his dealings were characterized a single illustration will more than suffice. When, in 1877, the Mastin Bank of Kansas City and the National Bank of the State of Missouri failed, involving over a million dollars of the funds of the State, Colonel Burnes was the principal indorser upon the bond of the State treasurer. At this unexpected and appalling conjuncture, almost alone and unaided, except by the rugged integrity of the treasurer, he marched bravely and unhesitatingly up to the exigency, redeeming to the Commonwealth every dollar of the principal and interest.

When he entered the Forty-eighth Congress the reputation of his large and varied sagacity and experience as well as his profound financial knowledge caused him to be placed upon the Appropriations Committee among such compeers as RANDALL of Pennsylvania, CANNON of Illinois, FORNEY of Alabama, HOLMAN of Indiana, Washburn of Minnesota, LONG of Massachusetts, TOWNSHEND of Illinois, RYAN of Kansas, and others who had achieved great renown in the public service. The distinction thus accorded Colonel Burnes by Speaker CARLISLE is rarely conceded to a member during his first term of service, but the wisdom of the selection finds vindication and commentary in the records of the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses and his re-election to the Fifty-first Congress. Indeed, sir, during his first term in Congress his management of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill demonstrated both the amplitude and the analytical power of his intellect as well as his skill and force as a debater. Many within the sound of my voice will recall with what varied and sustained illustration he gave evidence of these characteristics. His devotion to duty, his patient and persistent labors, his zeal for the interests of his constituency, his sturdy maintenance of his convictions, and his perfect courtesy were uniform and consistent to the end.

In this connection I can not so beautifully and cogently give expression to the estimation in which he was held by his own people as in transcribing the subjoined resolution adopted by the joint memorial session of the Missouri Legislature:

Resolved, That by his death the country has sustained a severe loss. He was an able legislator, a gifted orator, a tribune of the people, whose rights he defended with unselfish devotion; a man of ripe judgment and great experience in affairs, he resolutely devoted every energy of his mind to a thorough investigation of whatever business he was engaged upon, and always with a laudable ambition to promote the best interests of all classes of our people. To the discharge of his public duties he applied the resources of a mind richly endowed by nature with rare intellectual gifts. Cautious, he seldom committed a mistake; honest, he always looked to the advancement of the general welfare; diligent, his industry knew no limit but a complete mastery of every subject under consideration; patriotic, he exhausted the strength and resources of his great nature by overwork, and with heroic courage sacrificed his life on the altar of public duty. The people of Missouri will ever reverence his name and treasure the memory of his virtues.

Mr. Speaker, I falter when I attempt to speak of my friend in his higher and better relations—of James N. Burnes as a man. His charity and hospitality were alike profuse and unostentatious, and he was such a friend that many of us here grappled him to our hearts with "hooks of steel." There is a dark shadow still clouding the pathway that he trod beyond the Father of Waters, and hundreds of hearts that cherished him are mute with simple sorrow. God help the widow and orphans in the day of desolation! That brave, strong, manly man; that genial, sunny companion had been bearing within his consciousness the premonition and foreshadowing of the final stroke for two long years. So placidly he spoke of it that his closest friends thought it must be fancy, and yet he has more than once, in the silence of his solitary chamber, staggered to his table at night and recorded his symptoms and sensations, lest peradventure the end might come before the dawn, and those who should mourn for him might not know that he had recognized the approaching footfall of the grim messenger.

Mr. Speaker, are there not mystic coincidences of human experience that transcend our ken and escape our philosophy? Listen to these words spoken five winters ago in this Hall by Colonel Burnes in eulogy of Dudley C. Haskell:

Elected a member of this Congress, his responsibilities were enlarged by the general recognition of his intellectual power. He seemed to realize the fact and prepared himself to meet it. No command of his physician, no appeal of his anxious friends could swerve him from what he believed to be the path of duty. He believed the mind should dominate the body, whatever the stress or strain. The sharp, keen conflict of mind with mind and system with system was already before his eyes. The tumult of action and cheers of victory resounded in his ears as his vital force was departing, pitifully ominous of the end. At his post of duty, overtaxed and overburdened by the peculiar exactions of Congressional life in this House, the lamented Haskell, like many another, died a martyr to his moral convictions of official obligation.

Thus died James Nelson Burnes.

How strangely in this instance does the encomium of the friend become the prophecy of the eulogist, and the painting of the artist anticipate the portrait of himself!

Mr. Speaker, in yonder hall [pointing to the old hall of the House of Representatives, now Statuary Hall], now symbolizing our nation's Pantheon, but once the scene of stormy and splendid debate, John Quincy Adams, the Old Man Eloquent, fell as the oak whose sap has failed and whose leaf has withered. More than forty years elapse and the oak whose fiber seems like steel and whose leaves seem to garner in the sunshine falls as suddenly. But they both fall as the monarch of the forest falls.

Mr. Speaker, it was Mr. Webster, as I now recall, who, in one of his speeches, alluding to the great extent of our country and the tireless zeal of its pioneers, used the significant expression, "The hunter's path lay over great mountains." So, sir, to him, who, like our friend, achieved a full measure of fame in this House, the path must be cleared over mountains, and the work, by reason of "the peculiar exactions of Congressional life," must be done single-handed. Our late colleague has blazed his pathway and along it shall long be reflected the light of his beneficent example. Let us strive to emulate his virtues.

All honor to his memory! He lived a high and manly life, unswerved by the solicitations of unworthy compromise and unaffected by the glamour of place or prestige, and fell at the post of duty.

The knight's bones are dust
And his good sword rust;
His soul is with the saints, I trust.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, we rarely see a character made up of qualities so positive and decided as was presented to us by our late associate, James Nelson Burnes. He came into the House of Representatives in the Forty-eighth Congress unheralded by any special notoriety. Modest, almost reserved, in manner, he proceeded without ostentation to discharge his public duties. It was not long before he had won his way to the front and was recognized as a man who could be safely depended upon to know what he undertook to do and to do it without fear or favor, holding the public good always in view.

Mr. Burnes would have risen to a high place as a leader among men, no matter where he was placed. He had a splendid physique. He was educated in the best schools and disciplined and trained by large experience in the business of life. He had a clear judgment, was prudent, industrious, and strong in will, yet he was always kind and agreeable to those with whom he came in contact. With such qualities it is not to be wondered at that he carried through successfully the public business committed to his care. His success required incessant labor and the exercise of a patience of which few men in this House have any knowledge. He was always ready, always polite, always anxious to do what was right.

Although a man of large means, allowing him to gratify every wish for travel or personal enjoyment, he preferred to be a man of action and to devote himself to his public and private duties. Death at last found him in the midst of his labors. The exhausting first session of this Congress, unprecedented for its length and ceaseless sessions night and day, weakened and enervated his herculean frame, as it did so many others, and led undoubtedly to his sudden demise. At the time he was stricken he was engaged in aiding in the passage through the House of the great appropriation bill.

His health had failed, and there were serious apprehensions on the part of himself and friends as to what would be the result, but his high courage and sense of duty never failed him for a single instant. No soldier on the field of battle gave up his life to his country more willingly or deserved greater renown. The honors paid to his memory here, in Missouri, and throughout the land showed the high esteem in which Mr. Burnes was held by people of every class and station.

He was faithful to his convictions of what was right, and his fidelity to his friends could be depended upon under all circumstances. His word was sacred. In the midst of political complications, danger, and excitements he was always calm and dignified. His public life was one of strict integrity and his private life without blemish.

Mr. Speaker, I knew Mr. Burnes well, perhaps better than any other man on this floor, and the more I knew him the stronger became my friendship. We became acquainted soon after his appearance in Congress, and when he died there were few upon whom I relied with more confidence than I did upon Mr. Burnes. His death, therefore, was a severe blow to me, but I bow to this, as I have done to like troubles in life, with humble submission to God's decree. His example, Mr. Speaker, is precious to his country.

He was happy in his domestic life, a devoted son and husband, and loved his children as a father should. He was patriotic. He looked to the public welfare. His loss to his family, his State, his country, his friends, is irreparable, but out of his early grave springs the hope that dies not, of the beauty and sweetness of a pure life.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure, weighted heavily with sorrow, that calls me as a witness for my departed friend—James N. Burnes.

To be brought suddenly from the generous warmth of his living friendship to stand in the shadow of his dying hours and speak of him seems like a hard, cruel privilege for one whose heart, full of affectionate memories, is best equipped for silence.

But as we would hold the hand of a dying friend when in the supreme struggle of mortals, as we would follow him to his final rest and gently lay him down, so responding to generous invitation and heart's true wish, we here unite through friendly resolution and words sincere to note his going, his country's loss, with our true grief on legislative and historic page.

How weak, how insignificant, is human power and human speech for such a task! I wish I had the power to speak his life as he deserves it spoken. Whatever simple gift I had for speech my heart has taken from me, and my poor words will seem betrayal of this weighty trust.

If I could paint the picture of his home when your committee laid the casket there; if I could show to you the family bending broken by the stroke of fate; if groups of orphans filling his resting place with flowers and stifled cries for him who had been friend and almost parent too could help me here; if you could see the almost endless line of citizens, old and young, rich and poor, native and foreign, black and white, strong and maimed, passing by the coffin for one last look at their old neighbor and their friend; if you could see his "Brothers of the Mystic Tie" waiting in countless numbers to pay him the highest honors of their order and to be his escort to the waiting tomb; if the solemnity of a grief-stricken city should speak to you; if that indescribable language which comes from every form of sorrow when a great and loved man lies dead could speak to you from his home—if I could show all these then would I be content, for then only could I touch the measure of my duty.

Judge Burnes was a man of large experience. He had taken soundings in many of the turbulent waters of life. He had been lawyer, judge, railroad builder, banker, politician, and member of Congress, and in all his undertakings he made success bend to his powerful will and far-reaching mind. His was a composite character. It had in it the mountain and the valley, the sunshine and the shadow. Am I understood when I say that all the seasons were represented in his abundant nature? I will not deny that he had faults. He would have been lonely here without them, but even his faults were warmed by an ever-present virtue, and were lost in a heart full of generous friendship and inexhaustible affection. Let me be more specific.

As a lawyer he was clear, earnest, profound; he was untiring, unyielding, versatile, and in an eminent degree successful.

As a business man he dashed past the weak and grappled with the strong; he scorned small ventures, and entered the arena where the master minds met in sharp, deep conflict for the wealth of earth. He seemed to hold a magician's wand; gold answered his call, and he died a millionaire.

He was an orator of no ordinary type; he was an accurate reasoner, gifted in speech, trained by school, poet, historian, and philosopher; a lover of beauty and a worshiper of nature—all these, combined with a quick, delicate fancy, a stinging wit, and a generous, boundless humor, made him irresistible in swaying an audience and making captive both heart and judgment.

His coloring could be as soft and tender as the songs of Goethe and the creations of Raphael, or he could give the thundering numbers of Homer and the dazzling splendor of Michael Angelo. He could woo like a lover, or he could strike like a trained gladiator. His oratory was not from the school of the elocutionist, but was the rich and cultivated gift of generous nature. As a legislator he took first rank. He comprehended the true meaning of every measure. Instinctively he knew what motives, interests, or ambitions were back of it, and as clearly he measured the full meaning of the opposition. Possessing these powers in a high degree, he had the further advantage, when necessary, of concealing his own purposes and motives from those pitted against him.

He could thwart by ways most subtle, or he could assume the qualities of the lion in attack or defense. He was an untiring worker, especially in all matters coming to his special care, and would pursue his investigations until he mastered the situation. Entering Congress with him, familiar with his work, side by side with him in committee, intimate as a friend, I know that his legislative life was as clean and honorable as it was able and illustrious.

As a friend he was one of the gentlest, kindest, truest. You who only knew him in this Chamber were comparative strangers to this most remarkable man. You should have entered his great heart and feasted on his affections in order to know the wealth of his great and noble nature.

He is the only man that I have ever known whose gentle, tender treatment seemed all the man and yet more the mother. There was nothing that he would not do for a friend—nor did he wait for invitation. He seemed never happier than when sacrificing himself to give pleasure to his friends. His presence was a constant fascination, his conversation an unceasing charm. His wit was held for battle, but his humor was the constant servant of his friends. The trouble and cares of a friend filled his thoughts and brought forth his generous counsel more than did his own. He loved his fellow-men. His heart was full of quick and warm response for generous natures. His friends were not confined to those in power, or to the inmates of the gilded home. He was as respectful to his dusky body-servant as to his proudest peer. He could penetrate through color, poverty, and untutored speech to where a true heart lodged.

He was as modest and unpretending as any fellow-being who toiled for his daily food, and it was better than rich tomb or towering monument to have the simple, honest faces, wet with grief, bending over his coffin. His influence upon old and young was wonderful. The old sought him to renew their youth, the children sought him as a companion. A picture of his death-bed scene would tell his character. A boy of sixteen, after he had retired, learned that the judge was dying. He rose at once, near midnight, and hastened to the bedside of his dying friend. Never before had he witnessed a dying scene, and yet it had no terrors for him, for a loved companion was dying, and he sat close by his side, bearing the agony in his young, faithful heart until the end relieved us all.

Now, look at this last picture: A gray head is buried in the pillow. I thought the lips moved in prayer for his dying brother. A strong son sobs until it seems as though his heart would break before the father's. A stripling bends forward as though he would tear him from the arms of death. Strong manhood weeps. The trusted employé will not leave his side. His faithful colored attendant stands near him to the last, every death stroke striking his heart, too. His political adversaries, his political friends—all friends—are each sharing his agony. That little stricken group is an epitome of the vast assembly, taking in whole States, that bent the head when James N. Burnes died.

For months he knew that his last hour was near, and often spoke of it with calm, serene philosophy. His faith in God was strong, and he trusted his future to Him as the child trusts its mother when it goes to sleep upon her breast. Within a few days of his death he spoke freely to me of his wife, his brothers, and his sons. His mind seemed running over with thoughts of them. In telling me of his wife he spoke of her physical sufferings, her patience that seemed more than human, her beautiful character, and drew a picture of a noble woman such as I had not before heard from lips of man.

But I must yield to others who will speak of him, and I am glad that other friends will speak, for I have sadly failed when most my friend had need of me. How true was he to his departed friends. They never lacked for loving champion while he yet lived. While I must leave my friend with a poor, lame service when I owed so much, yet I do know that my heart is true to him—far truer than my speech.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky.

As in many groups they were busied in diverse occupations, some in games and others in work, the master opened the door and with a smile beckoned to the leader of the busiest group, who, laying down his tools, went within and the door was shut behind him. His comrades waited for him, and finding that he came not realized that that was death.

Centuries ago a pagan philosopher used this illustration of what we call death, and we have seen it occur in our midst that the master came into the busiest group and beckoned the master of the group into the open door. He followed and the door shut. "God's finger touched him and he slept." That is the death which we in our blindness regret; but it is but "the gray eve between two shining days;" the day of the past and the immortal day of the eternity of the future.

It is said that this friend of ours had stood side by side, sometimes face to face, with death for weeks before; that he seemed to know he was but a little while for earth—that the sands of life were slipping through his fingers. Some nights before a premonition had been given, and he arose from his bed and left a note of warning that if he were found dead it might be known of what he died and that he did not fear to die. And it is a demonstration of the manliness and strength of his character, which exhibited itself in his physical robustness and in his mental vigor, that this companionship with death neither blanched his cheek nor daunted his heart, nor for one moment weakened the efficacy of his daily labor and of his intellectual processes. We would have a better estimate of him than we have if we could put ourselves in his place and feel what would be the effect if we were to walk arm in arm with death when we discharge the duties that are imposed upon us here.

I did not know him as well as the distinguished gentleman who was the chairman of his committee [Mr. RANDALL], nor his friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], who was his colleague on the committee, nor his colleague from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], nor as many of his friends knew him. This is not a very good place for personal intimacy. We are a congeries of committees, growing more into specialists as the country grows more and more; and as our duties are to legislate for more millions, each committee is somewhat segregated to itself, and we must trust the members of the other committees for information, voting much on faith and often without knowledge. No man can make himself master of all the business to be transacted here, nor become familiar with the details of the multifarious matters submitted for our action.

Therefore a new member coming into this body, anxious to perform his duty and sincerely earnest in his desire to perform it conscientiously, begins to try to learn, on the very first day of his entrance, who are the members of the various committees upon whose labors he can rely for that information which must be obtained, upon whose intellect he can depend that the conclusions reached are sound, and upon whose integrity he can afford to base his own public action, feeling that that labor and that intellect have been honestly directed and that the result is an honest result. In this sense I soon began to rely upon the result of this dead colleague's labors.

I found that he was a man ceaseless in work, that there was no limit to the industry of which he was capable; that he had a mental vigor and efficiency, accompanied by scholastic training and the discipline of a busy and successful life, which made that industry capable of sure and accurate results, and that he did desire, as far as I could judge, to reach results that were not only honest in the lower sense of pecuniary integrity, but honest in the higher sense of patriotic duty, so that that which he did should not only be free from any stain of personal self-seeking or pecuniary interest, but also should be instinct with a desire to do what was best for the common weal.

It was not so much his public utterances on the floor, although they were always clear and strong; it was not so much the intellectual vigor which he displayed, as it was the vast capacity for labor which I saw he had when I came into personal contact with him, and the earnest disposition that he constantly manifested to reach proper results, that won my admiration and confidence. And, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say that when in the labors of the last session, labors that were so incessant and so trying to many of the members of this body, the health of that distinguished gentleman, who has for so many years been chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, gave way, and it seemed that he would be temporarily, if, indeed, not permanently disabled, many of us turned with a feeling of sorrowful confidence that under his leadership and training there had been prepared, in the person of Judge Burnes, a fit and qualified successor. And may I be permitted to add, sir, in the midst of all differences, in the midst of divided opinions, the expression of my sincere gratification that while we mourn the death of that worthy colleague and friend, God has spared, and may He spare to us for many years, the efficient services of the chairman of that committee.

Mr. Speaker, of the private life of Mr. Burnes I knew very little, but "there are some things which a man does in life that he can well remember with pleasure at death," and these things were the daily doings of this man's life. Kindly words, generous deeds, thoughtful actions, friendly smiles, marked the sunshine every day of his life, and these are the really important things in life. In that wondrous book, the Book, there is hardly anything so precious to me as the revelation of the Divine alchemy which takes the two mites of the widow and turns them into a greater wealth than the gifts of all the rich. It is the little things that count. Not what, not how, but why we do what we do is the great test of a man's character, is the real power and measure of his influence as well as of the Divine reward hereafter; and unless I have been misinformed, many of these things may have gathered in that company of which my friend [Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa] speaks, at the death-bed of Judge Burnes. There were sorrowing friends there, but on that unconscious brain and scarcely pulsating heart there may have been other impressions, visions seen with clearer eyes than these poor physical eyes of ours, when those kind deeds came trooping round that bed, to soothe his aching frame, and smooth his pathway to the grave, and give to those last moments of earth the choral song of kindly deeds and sweet and friendly words.

This man's life began with a contest for supremacy at Harvard College, when he was elected the judge of the parliament of the law-school, and it was a masterful contest from that day until he died; masterful by the power of his will and the strength and breadth of his brain, and it was fit that for him there was no period of decrepitude. I esteem it one of the fortunate events of any man's life that, in the vigor of his manhood, amid his daily labors, when there is no abatement of his natural strength, when the powers that God has given him are consciously under the mastery of his will and are its servants for carrying out good purposes, he suddenly finds this tabernacle of mortal flesh falling from the higher and nobler nature, and he steps with all the power of a divine manhood into the presence of his Maker. It is no cause of sorrow. It is no reason why we should weep. And to-day, as we recall the last scene of our colleague's life and lay the tributes of our admiration and affection upon his grave, it is not unbecoming that we should ask that when our time comes—and it may come sooner or later in the midst of these labors—it may come to us suddenly, without premonition, without the mortal dread of warning, and that we may stand at a moment's notice on the other and better shore. That there is another and better shore, that we are surrounded by unseen realities, I for no moment have ever doubted. There is a place where the incommunicable thoughts of our innermost hearts will find outlet to those we love.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, it lacks but five days of just five years since, on an afternoon like this, and upon a like occasion, I, then a new member of Congress, first heard the rich deep voice of James Nelson Burnes—a voice mellow and resonant and full as the swelling sub-bass of an organ-note. Since then how familiar has been its music to our ears, never falling on them without awaking that soothed and welcoming responsiveness which the ear instinctively gives to a melody that melts into sympathy with itself. Whether that voice breathed softly, as an Æolian harp, along the chords of courteous and kindly compliment, or, in the stress of hot debate, expanded to the mighty volume in which the aroused and masterful orator pours the thunder-peal of his passionate and resounding eloquence, it never grated on the ear, it never struck a false note, it never failed to be the obedient expression of the mind it served, or to win without harassing the attention of the House to which it spoke.

At the date to which I refer, Mr. Burnes, also then serving his first session in Congress, was speaking in it almost for the first time. He was delivering an address upon the life and character of Dudley C. Haskell, of Kansas, a member of the Forty-eighth Congress, who had recently died, and to whom the House was then paying its tribute of respect. Himself a picture of magnificent physical power and health, nothing seemed less probable than that five years from that time the House should be paying its like tribute to James Nelson Burnes. Those of us who were there recall the graceful and appreciative touch with which he portrayed the characteristics of him whom, coming from the adjoining border of a State adjoining his own, he denominated his "neighbor," or the felicity with which he wove the laurels of Missouri and Kansas around the name of Dudley Haskell till it seemed as if the noble river which is a boundary between those two great States, distinctively representative as they are of the two great political forces of the Republic, was a river of their common tears poured out to Haskell's memory. It was in this appreciative strain, it now seems also like a prophetic strain, that Mr. Burnes then uttered these words, so significant of himself but one short month ago:

> Elected a member of this Congress, his responsibilities were enlarged by the general recognition of his intellectual power. He seemed to realize the fact, and prepared himself to meet it. No command of his physicians, no appeal of his anxious friends, could swerve him from what he believed to be the path of duty. He believed the mind should dominate the body, whatever the stress or strain. He had thought much upon legislation, and saw, or thought he saw, the the work of his hands in former Congresses about to be reviewed by his political adversaries. The sharp, keen conflict of mind with mind and system with system was already before his eyes. He saw the coming all-night vigils, and the glare and heat of the fierce onset—the thrust, the parry, and the parliamentary blow. The tumult of action and cheers of victory resounded in his ears as, unconsciously, his vital force was departing, pitifully ominous of the end. At his post of duty, overtaxed and overburdened by the peculiar exactions of Congressional life in this House, the lamented Haskell, like many another, died a martyr to his moral convictions of official obligation.

So, too, died James Nelson Burnes at his post, struck down like the younger Adams on the floor of the House of the Representatives of the people. It has been my fortune to serve with him during most of my Congressional life upon the Committee on Appropriations. I was familiar, as were we all, with his conciliatoriness of manner, sometimes and strikingly in one of such vigorous brawn of physical and mental force, melting into a very softness and flattery of voice and touch and compliment and generous kindness. But underneath this we all were quickly taught that when it came to the will, which in this man was like the engine in the heart of the steam-ship, when it came to the purpose he had in view, and the result he had determined to achieve, no bar of steel was so firm and irrisistible. It was a hand of silk when it grasped that of a friend or bestowed a courtesy; it was a hand of iron when it flung from his path an obstacle or struck a foe.

He was a man of tremendous persistence and mental industry. His desk to-day would be more characteristic of the man if the flowers and cloth of mourning which are now upon it were removed, and it were ready for hard labor and diligent application to the work of legislation. For he suggested life, not death; and my religion thinks of him still grandly alive, not movelessly dead. His comprehension was broad, seizing and digesting the infinite variety of subjects before our committee alike in their general reach and in all their minute details. His great brain, set in his massive, square, capacious head, mastered with a giant's grip whatever it attacked; and while many of us differed from his conclusions, and often questioned the policy which he would have applied to expenditures in the interest of public works and obligations, we never underrated the might of his antagonism.

Yet, withal, it was a supple mind. In the intensity of his maintenance of a position he not only struck the blows of a sledgehammer, but sprung every device which his swift ingenuity suggested. If I were to sum up his characteristics as a public man, I should embrace them in the one controlling quality of a masterful force. It was typified in his physical frame. It included also deftness, quickness, aptness, art. It now went home with the most emphatic directness of speech; it now hid its attack, as the goddess veiled her son, the Trojan hero, in an enveloping mist and cloud of words. It was like the trunk of an elephant, able to strike a blow that crushes a wall, yet with so subtle and delicate a touch that it picks a pin from the floor. It was a force that never expended itself in a tumultuous and tempestuous explosion. It never lost control of itself. Like the voice in which it was uttered, it was, however surcharged, always under command. No storm of fierce debate, no whelm of vehement opposition ever disturbed its equipoise. It never left him at the end of whatever struggle with other than that bland smile upon his face and that courteous intonation in his greeting or parting salute, which we all recall as vividly now as if but a moment ago he had leisurely walked across this Hall, fanning his leonine open throat with his habitual palm-leaf fan, and had gone out through yonder door, soon to come back again while yet we speak of him.

And that masterful force stood by him to the end. On the morning of his last day of service here, the 23d day of January, 1889, he was in his place at the table of our committee, the veteran chairman of which, recently worn in health, though never more resolute in mind than now, had come to lean a little on his broad shoulder. He was especially prepared for the debate which was to occur on that afternoon session. He took his seat in the House soon after it came to order. The sword of one more surely fated than Damocles was suspended above him, its point at his very heart. He knew it was certain to fall. He saw the very disintegrating of the single hair by which it hung. But he did not flinch. The square jaws were set a little firmer; the iron hand clinched itself a little tighter; the masterful spirit rose only to a sterner defiance; and if ever a human will put forth the force which none but Almighty power could bend or break, it was that of James Nelson Burnes when he fell that day here at his post in the discharge of his office as a Representative of the people.

As one who was with him in their service, entering Congress at the same time; as one who was his associate upon one of the committees of this House; as one who for five years was the recipient of his most cordial courtesy and a daily witness of his laborious and efficient industry; as a graduate from the same university at which he studied law; as his colleague and his friend, I pay my tribute to his memory and extend my sympathy to the circle of friends, and especially to the wife and kin, to whom he was a mighty castle, and to whom his death is the falling of a great arch of the refuge and shelter of their hearts.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, James N. Burnes was a native of Indiana, and although he achieved his high reputation in a sister State, Indiana could not be silent when the Representatives of the nation express their grief at his death and this House places upon its records an enduring memorial of his high qualities as a legislator and his worth and merit as a man. I am a native of Indiana, and it may be that the high esteem in which I held Judge Burnes, or at least the affection I felt for him, was in some degree colored by the sentiment that he was a son of the great State which I love and in which my life has been passed.

I had known something of Judge Burnes by reputation before he came to this Capitol, but my personal acquaintance with him commenced with the Forty-eighth Congress, when he and I both became members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House.

For four years we served together on that committee, and every successive step of his career during that period on that committee and in this Hall up to the day before his death, when we last conversed together for a few moments where I now stand, increased my esteem and affection for him as a man and my admiration for his abilities, unfaltering integrity, and high sense of justice.

The assignment of Judge Burnes to the Committee on Appropriations, the most important committee of the House, on his first entrance into Congress, indicates the reputation he had already acquired. He was made at the outset by Mr. RANDALL, then and still chairman of the committee, a gentleman whose large experience in Congress and admirable judgment of men rendered a mistake almost impossible, chairman of the subcommittee on the consular and diplomatic bill, and later on of the general deficiency bill, one of the most important of the fourteen great appropriation bills—a bill on which countless forces, official and unofficial, seek to crowd almost countless items, certified and uncertified, running back through many years, and swelling into vast millions. It is a bill every item of which requires painstaking, protracted, and patient labor. Judge Burnes, while actively participating in the preparation of the other great bills of that committee and the current business of the House, had that particular bill especially under his charge, and it is to be placed to his honor that in the many millions of dollars involved in that bill, covering a vast multitude of items and running back through many years in successive sessions of Congress, not an error or mistake has ever been found.

The real work of Congress is performed in the committee-rooms. The preparation of one of the great appropriation bills, especially one in which the result is expressed in large aggregates like the "budget of deficiencies," is the very drudgery of legislation, its results are simply expressed in great sums of money. None of the enthusiasm which gathers around the current proceedings of Senate or House give it animation. Nothing but a high sense of public duty could secure its faithful performance. Gentlemen around me know with what patient industry and fidelity Judge Burnes performed this necessary and valuable duty of legislation. When he brought the bill into the House with its aggregated millions of dollars he was the master of every detail, and was prepared to meet every motion to enlarge its volume. Not one or that great mass of discredited claims, which year after year seek a favorable opportunity to reach the Treasury, ever escaped his observation; yet a demand that was just, no matter how long it had been delayed, met with his prompt recognition.

In legislation Judge Burnes demanded not only just methods but undisguised frankness. During the Forty-eighth Congress a question incidentally arose as to a secret-service fund to be employed in negotiations with a foreign government for the benefit of ours, but he denounced the measure in words of burning eloquence as unworthy of a great and free people. Such methods of the state-craft of monarchies were unworthy of a Republic where the public mind, fully informed, should control events.

He was the very soul of justice and honor in legislation. He examined with the same patience and impartial fairness the small claim of the humblest citizen and the great claim of a powerful corporation. Circumstances occurred in the closing period of the Forty-ninth Congress that brought into full view his great qualities. Conditions arose of extraordinary embarrassment in relation to an important appropriation bill under Judge Burnes's control. In that contention gentlemen who were carefully noting the current of events saw him display high qualities of self-denial and fortitude worthy of a Roman senator in the golden age of that republic.

One of the great corporations which have grown out of the Federal policy of our age, greatly indebted to the United States, asserted a claim against the Government involving millions of dollars and demanded its payment, without reference to the just counter-claim of the United States of a vastly greater sum, but not yet technically due. After an exhaustive examination Judge Burnes reached the conclusion that it ought not, in justice, to be paid. Repeated conferences on the bill rendered it reasonably certain that unless Judge Burnes and his associate House conferees receded and permitted the payment of the claim the bill would fail. The bill involved very large sums that ought to be appropriated and about which there was no dispute, claims the most meritorious.

The situation was one of extreme embarrassment. To recede allowed the payment of millions which Judge Burnes thought ought not under the circumstances to be paid, to refuse to recede postponed payment of claims eminently just and meritorious—claims of soldiers of the late Union Army and their widows and orphan children, and other meritorious and necessary appropriations not in dispute; but Judge Burnes, sorely pressed, did not falter. The hour of final adjournment fixed by law rapidly approached and every influence which policy, interest, and power could suggest was brought to bear to induce him to recede from his position, but he stood by his convictions with the firmness of a rock which had defied for centuries the rage of the ocean.

He understood well the severe criticism he would encounter if the bill failed in his hands, for but few such events have occurred in our history, but he did not falter. He brought hastily into the House a bill embodying the most pressing and meritorious provisions of the bill in dispute, and on his motion it was instantly passed by the House and sent to the Senate. Almost at the last moment concession was made to his views, but it was too late and the bill failed. Happily no material public inconvenience resulted from its failure; the ends of justice were secured and this noble example will remain upon the records of Congress forever of unfaltering firmness in the performance of a public duty.

Judge Burnes possessed the qualities, firmness of purpose, and intellectual power which under favorable conditions and with larger experience in statesmanship would have made him one of the foremost men of our age. His truth, moderation, and sense of justice as displayed in this Hall would have steadily advanced him in the respect, admiration, and confidence of his countrymen; his unassuming manners, his patience and forbearance, and above all his unflagging industry, great talents and attainments and high sense of fairness and honor made him of great value in the public service, and with prolonged life would have given him a commanding position in the councils of his country. He was of the order of men who under favorable circumstances become, as it were, landmarks in history.

I will seek to express the opinion I have formed of Judge Burnes by a comparison.

The historians relate that the Roman senate, wearied with the protracted war it had waged on the opulent city of Numantia, in Spain (I quote from Bancroft), which had for years resisted the Roman arms with invincible fortitude, deputed Tiberius Gracchus, celebrated for his truth and moderation, with plenary powers, to that city. While a fierce conflict between the invading army and the beleaguered city was impending it was announced that Tiberius Gracchus, a messenger of the Roman senate, was approaching the ramparts; the assault ceased, the gates of the city were thrown open, the citizens with their wives and children "thronged round his steps, hung on his arms, and clung to his hands." They led him into their city and—bade him take from their public stores whatever treasures he desired; he took but a handful of incense and offered it to the gods. They requested him to establish the basis of peace, and he framed a treaty on principles of mutual independence.

Of course the conditions of human life which rendered this incident in history possible do not exist in our living age, and has not for ages past, and yet I think I may fairly indulge in the comparison I wish to make. As I have seen James N. Burnes in the committee-room and in this Hall, observing his high sense of truth, justice, and honor, the spirit he uniformly displayed of kindness and moderation, the simple dignity of his deportment, the generous and humane temper of his mind and heart, the benevolent expression of his face, I feel that I can say with safety that under like conditions he would have inspired the same high confidence and furnished the same absolute assurance of justice as did on that historical occasion the illustrious citizen of Rome.

In the death of James N. Burnes many of us have lost a friend we loved and admired, this House one of its most valuable members, his

State and the nation a great citizen whose high merit is fully attested by the record he has made in this Capitol. That record will remain a monument of enduring honor to his memory.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it is appointed to all men once to die, but when that death will come or how or where is not revealed to flesh and blood. Each life is for our instruction and each death is to us a warning and a lesson. What death involves we do not know, beyond this, that the eyes cease to see, the ears no longer hear, the lips are dumb, the heart is pulseless, and the wheels of life stand still. I have watched with the dying, and been alone with the dead, and have felt that sense of dread which comes to us when we contemplate the fact, that even in health we are skirting the confines of "the valley of the shadow."

Whether death ends all conscious existence I do not know, but I have an unwavering faith that this life is but the germ of an immortality. However and wherever we exist this conscious intelligence still survives. As I have stood in the presence of the dead I have found myself, almost unconsciously, repeating the words of Cato's soliloquy:

> Plato, thou reasonest well;
> Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
> This longing after immortality?
> Or whence this secret dread and inward horror
> Of falling into naught? Why shrinks the soul
> Back on itself, and startles at destruction?
> 'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us.

The death of the aged and infirm is so in the natural course of things that while it saddens it may not shock us. The dissolution that follows wasting disease and painful illness we are prepared to meet; but when one in the fullness of life, the zenith of strong manhood, is, without premonition, struck down, we stand appalled in the presence of the sudden calamity. Such a death most forcibly reminds us that we are mortal. In the life, the labor, and the sudden death of James N. Burnes there is for each of us an impressive lesson. Others will speak of his life and services, his trials and triumphs. It is my part to refer only to the manner of his death and the impression left upon my mind by the sad occurrence. It seems meet that I should do so, as I was with him when he first felt the shock that foreshadowed his speedy dissolution and was among the last to converse with him.

On the morning of the 23d of January last I met our deceased friend in the Appropriations Committee room. Mr. RANDALL, being indisposed, was absent temporarily, and had requested Mr. Burnes to preside at the meeting of the committee. Whether the hand of affliction had been laid upon him then I do not know, but I never saw a picture of more perfect health than he presented. As you know, he was a man of stalwart frame, a giant in strength, and of indomitable will. I never met him when his intellectual faculties seemed clearer than on that morning.

When the committee adjourned, he preceded me to the floor of the House. A few moments after I had taken my seat, I turned and called to ask him some question concerning the pending bill. He answered, and, rising from his seat, walked to the head of the center aisle, in front of the Speaker, to meet me. I asked him a question concerning a provision in the bill, whether it was reached. He said, "Not yet." At that moment he raised his hand to his face and said to me, "Ben, there's something the matter with my tongue, I find difficulty in speaking." At the same time I noticed a nervous twitching of the muscles of his face, and deeming that he was seized with some nervous affection which the fresh air and his resolute will might throw off, I said to him, "Come with me into the open air."

He took my arm, and we walked together out to the east front of the Capitol. As we passed along he seemed to be struggling to control the muscular action of one side, and I said to him, "Burnes, bring your will power to bear, and you can drive this trouble from you." I saw he was making the effort. On reaching the open air, he felt somewhat better. For some minutes we walked up and down, conversing about the unnatural feeling that seemed to be taking possession of him. I proposed to go for a physician. He resolutely declined to have me do so, and said it was nothing and would pass off in a moment.

I urged him to let me bring him some stimulant; that he also declined. I urged him to go with me in a carriage to his physician, Dr. Sowers; he positively refused, and those who knew James N. Burnes will understand that when he said "no" he meant it, and he would be an aggressive friend who would persist in doing that which Burnes forbade.

At his suggestion we walked from the east end of the Capitol to the consultation room of the Appropriations Committee. On reaching there I again suggested that, as he did not feel better, I should at once summon a physician. He refused to permit me to do so. I insisted then that he should take some stimulant to warm him. He consented, and I left, and meeting his colleague General HATCH, asked him to assist, and in a few minutes Mr. HATCH obtained some brandy, and Mr. Burnes took a small portion. This seemed to revive him. We stood there alone, while he seemed to be struggling to throw off the influence that oppressed him. I have never seen such a struggle between the will and the physical man. Twice he dropped the cigar which he held in his hand. I said, "Burnes, let your cigar go, you do not want it." "No," he said, and stooped down as if to compel the hand that was yielding reluctant obedience to respond to the mandate of his will.

Twice he picked the cigar up, and twice it fell from his hand. At last he seemed fully to realize the nature of the struggle in which he was engaged. Putting one hand upon my shoulder, he said, realizing as I did not the danger which was present, "Ben, it is hard to quit the battle now," and after a moment's silence he said again, "I hate to leave the field now." I then understood what he meant, but did not dream that he knew, and I am sure I did not, that he was stricken, and that speedy dissolution was imminent.

He said again with earnestness, but having difficulty with his articulation, "I have much to do, and I hate to quit the battle now."

I said to him in reply, "Why, Burnes, you are good for twenty years yet." He shook his head in a manner which left no doubt that he felt that his hour had come. In a moment he reviewed the work he had done, and surveyed the ungathered harvest which spread out before him, and contemplated the labor unperformed and to which he was about to lend his willing hand. But it could not be. Then for the first time I observed that indomitable will of his for a moment seemed to yield.

I again said, as if intending to disregard his wish, "I will go for a physician, or take you to one." He still earnestly refused to let me go. He doubtless knew all human aid was vain.

I then asked him to lie down upon the lounge. He did so, and at that moment our colleague upon the committee [Mr. RYAN] entered the room, and seemed to realize in a moment Mr. Burnes's condition. He said, "We must call a physician at once," and in a moment Dr. GALLINGER, Dr. DAVIS, and Dr. ATKINSON, members of the House, entered the room.

Dr. GALLINGER made an inquiry or two, and in a moment diagnosed the case. The quick, practiced eye of the physician revealed to him that James N. Burnes was stricken in death.

He said quietly to friends, "It is only a question of a little time."

Burnes was paralyzed. A blood-vessel in the brain had burst, and he was past all human aid. He was carefully and tenderly removed to his rooms at Willard's Hotel, was kindly cared for, but in a few hours he was dead. His son, who was visiting his father, hurried to his side. It was touching to see that stalwart, strong young man, standing by the side of his stricken father, eager to do something for his relief, anxious to engage in a desperate struggle to wrest him from the grasp of the destroyer.

I knew how he felt, for not many months before I had held in my arms a boy that I loved dearer than my own life. Death seemed to be tearing him from my grasp. I remember, in my agony, feeling the desire that death should take on some physical form or shape and let me fight him for my boy.

So that faithful son stood by the side of his honored father, devoted, yet powerless to help or save. The family at home learned at the same time of his illness, and his death, which followed immediately. It is difficult for us to realize in full measure the agony of that bereaved family in the loss of a husband and father.

I know the home of Burnes was a Christian home, and I am persuaded that, in the presence of such affliction as came to the members of that household, the voice of the Master was heard speaking the words of comfort, "Let not your heart be troubled. Ye believe in God; believe also in Me. In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." I do not know what faith Burnes had. He was conscious of his approach to the "valley of the shadow," but whether he went with unfaltering step, upheld by Christian faith, I do not know. I judge of the man as I knew him. His heart was generous, and to me at least he proved by works his faith, and his works were such as to give assurance that although he made no profession before the world yet he had Christian faith.

Of his usefulness and labors in public and private life it is not my purpose to speak. That task will devolve upon others. I have spoken of his last hours. This much I may add: I stood by the coffin in which he lay; he seemed to have settled into a peaceful slumber; and in that presence the uncertain tenure by which we hold to life was deeply impressed upon me. I seemed to hear, in language not audible to mortal ears, but none the less palpable to my understanding, "Do thy work to-day; for thee there may be no to-morrow." The chaplain had finished the prayer for the repose of the dead and invoked a blessing upon the living, when we left our friend in care of those who were to bear his mortal remains to their final rest within the borders of the State which had honored him with trust and confidence, and which he had in nowise betrayed. We saw the form of our friend shrouded for the tomb, but in the presence of that change called death we felt that we could say of James N. Burnes, "It is well with him."

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, on the 23d day of last month the House was startled by the announcement that one of its most distinguished members, James N. Burnes, had been stricken with paralysis while in the performance of his duties and in attendance at the Capitol. For this sad intelligence no one was prepared. During the morning he was with his committee—that of Appropriations—taking, as was his custom, an active and influential part in its deliberations. He appeared to be in excellent spirits, and there was not the faintest shadow upon his countenance or speech or action of the event which was to come so soon and in such form. To the observer death seemed to be afar from him as he sat with us and assisted us for about two hours in the preparation of the measure which was then claiming our attention.

He walked from the committee-room, apparently in splendid health, seated himself at his desk, prepared an amendment to the bill which the House was considering, and arising to confer with a friend was smitten with the first symptoms of the attack which was to terminate so fatally and in so short a time.

He was borne from the Capitol in a most critical condition to his hotel, and before the morrow's sun had risen he had taken his final departure from the scenes and circumstances of this life. That he anticipated the probability of any early death and was not altogether unprepared for the suddenness of its coming may be inferred from conversations with his intimate friends.

During the former session of the present Congress, and especially toward its close, he was very busily engaged both day and night, and proceeding from here to the district which he represented, he immediately entered upon a very active canvass, which he personally conducted until the election. He returned to the Capitol last December with his strength somewhat impaired, and was soon afterward taken seriously ill. Recovering, he resumed his Congressional duties with his wonted industry and activity, and continued in their constant discharge until the very moment of his last illness. It may be literally said of him that he died with his harness on—in the very midst of his labors—in the actual performance of the high functions to which he had been called by reason of his abilities, his splendid services, and the judicious partiality of those among whom he had lived and wrought for so many years.

Mr. Burnes was a busy, an active, a practical, and a prosperous man. The successes which marked his career were not the chances of fortune, but rather the results of toil, sagacity, courage, and inflexible determination. He was self-reliant and self-confident, and full to the overflowing of resource. He thought for himself; he acted for himself. His plans were carefully considered, and when matured, he pushed them on boldly and skillfully to their accomplishment. The tendency of his mind was not in a single direction, nor was it limited in its aspirations or undertakings. Any enterprise which promised gratification to his ambition and usefulness to humanity was sure to meet with favor at his hands. Possessing an intellectuality capable of the highest and of the finest polish, he was nevertheless a man of action. A theorist, a philosopher, a lover of literature, he was also eminently practical in all his aims and efforts. He was endowed with a most excellent judgment, which under the most trying circumstances never lost its just equipoise nor failed to serve him as a sure, a safe, and a ready counselor. He never lost his presence of mind, but met and grappled with difficulties as they arose without hesitation or fear.

To the activity, strength, and diversity of his mental endowments were added graces of deportment and character which contributed in no small degree to his advancement in life. He was easy to be approached, courteous in bearing, affable in manners, true to friendship, faithful to promises, and considerate to those with whom he was connected, without regard to station in life. These lovable qualities added very materially to his strength and influence with men. He was wealthy, without being ostentatious. His liberality was not accompanied by selfish extravagance. Possessing all of these high and varied qualities of mind and heart, it is not a wonder that he became a recognized leader and won for himself complete success in all his undertakings.

He was a necessity to those with whom his life and labors were cast, and it was therefore not a strange or unaccountable circumstance that on the cold, wintry, Sabbath evening of his funeral thousands were gathered to witness the long-extended cortege which bore his remains to their resting place, and that the people at his own home and in his own State, without regard to party, class, or distinction, united in paying to him the last tribute which can be offered to humanity. A man had gone from them who had accomplished many great and useful enterprises, and whom they had delighted to honor with their confidence and esteem.

It has been said that the life of Mr. Burnes was begun amidst straitened circumstances and that the scholastic and professional education which he attained came to him through the kindly aid of his kinspeople. If this be true, his subsequent career illustrates not only the great strength of character which he possessed and without which he could not have been so successful, but also the exceeding value of our political and civil institutions, and of the social characteristics of our people. His career, amid all the varied vicissitudes of his life, can not but animate ambitious poverty to the loftiest exertion, in the confident expectation that success surely awaits the toiler in every department of honorable activity, even though the beginning be obscure and humble.

James Nelson Burnes was born in Indiana in the year 1827, and was therefore in his sixty-second year when he died. As to his early life I have no information further than that he received a common-school and high-school education, and that he was graduated at the Harvard Law School in 1853. He then resided in Missouri, and immediately began the practice of his profession in that State, which he diligently pursued until 1868 with great success, gaining much reputation as an advocate. From 1868 to 1872 he presided upon the bench, and in that high and delicate position he acquitted himself with great credit, thus adding to his reputation as a practitioner the broader and more enduring fame of an honest and an able judge. In both of these capacities his record is without blemish and is a source of great pride and satisfaction to his friends and relatives. Every obligation which was imposed upon him by virtue of these relations to society and to individuals was met and discharged with scrupulous fidelity.

Retiring from the bench, he entered upon an entirely different sphere, in which was put to the test not only the experience and information which he had previously acquired but also those other great qualities of mind and character which were still latent to the public eye, even to those who had been nearest to him and thought that they knew him best.

Looking around him, he saw that the great West presented an inviting field for the building of railways and that the demands of commerce would increase with the growth of population and with the development of the country. The opportunity was before him and he did not hesitate to follow the dictates of his judgment. Others of greater experience in such matters were consulted, but they hesitated to make the venture.

But Mr. Burnes was self-reliant and possessed the courage of his convictions, and, without previous training or technical skill, he embarked in the dangerous enterprise of railway construction, which was to call forth his best energies and the exercise of an indomitable will. Failure might prove to him an utter wreck of fortune and of character as it had often occurred to so many who had enjoyed far greater advantages and had had far better and far brighter prospects than he.

The word "failure" was not written in his vocabulary. It was a strange word to him—a word with which he was not to become personally familiar. He had considered, and having considered it was with him to act. He was the organizer and the first president of the Western and Atchison Railroad Company, which built the first railway in that section of the country, except the Hannibal and St. Joseph. Succeeding in that enterprise, he organized another company, and was the moving spirit in the construction of the Chicago and Southwestern Railway, from Leavenworth, Kans., to Ottumwa, Iowa, and now forming a part of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway.

Principally to him and to his efforts is due the construction of the bridge across the Missouri River at Atchison, in Kansas, and that, too, during a season of great financial disaster and panic.

He was a member of the original Town Company of Leavenworth and Atchison, and was still interested in the organization at the time of his death.

Who, Mr. Speaker, can estimate the advantages that have accrued to the great States of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, and Iowa, and to other communities because of the completion of these enterprises in which Mr. Burnes was a leader? It must have been, indeed, a proud moment to him when that great concourse of people met at Atchison on the 25th day of September, 1875, to celebrate the completion of their bridge. He had actively assisted in bringing to them these instrumentalities of commerce, and they were there to express their appreciation of their value to themselves and to their posterity.

An address of much power and eloquence was delivered on that memorable occasion by a distinguished gentleman, now the Presiding Officer of the Senate of the United States, in the course of which he said:

> But there is one other man to whom, more than all perhaps, this is due, a man in whose great brain the idea was first conceived, in whom it originated, and who has pushed it forward to its triumphant conclusion, a man who is not only one of the first and master minds in Missouri, but also one of the master minds in the Northwest and of this continent; and I say further that full justice will not be done him until at the eastern approach of that bridge stands a statue in bronze of Col. James N. Burnes, of Missouri.

This was a merited tribute to a deserving man, who had, by his enterprise, his courage, and his industry vastly enhanced the material wealth of his people, thereby conferring, in the most substantial and enduring form, benefits of incalculable value and variety, not only to the present, but to all future generations.

But, sir, it was as a member of this House that Mr. Burnes was best known to the great majority of us. Elected to the Forty-eighth Congress, he was assigned to the Committee on Appropriations, where he remained until he died. His practice as a lawyer and his experience as a judge, combined with his large and varied capacity as a man of affairs, enabled him to readily comprehend the character of the duties to which he had been appointed.

At the very commencement of his service he began to thoroughly equip himself for the work which was before him. The administration of the Government in all its details received his continued and careful attention, and wherever a mischief appeared he sought to apply a remedy. It is entirely safe to say that he contributed largely to such legislation as has been permitted on the appropriation bills since he became a member of this House. In his recommendations of expenditures he was economical but not niggardly, believing that the Government should have a sufficiency for proper and efficient administration, but no more than was enough.

Methodical and industrious in his mental habits, he made himself very thorough in his knowledge of every question that he undertook to consider. With him it was an inflexible rule to withhold his judgment until all means for information had been entirely exhausted. Careful and painstaking in his investigations, his conclusions were but seldom, if ever, erroneous. He soon acquired the confidence not only of the committee but of the House also, and in matters of expenditure he was, at the time of his death, a recognized authority. He spoke but seldom, and then only upon such subjects as he had completely mastered. His utterances for that reason always received attention, and he but seldom failed to carry the majority with him. His popularity was continually on the increase and his influence rapidly enlarging. It was a steady growth, not spasmodic. He was regarded by every one who knew him as a well-equipped legislator—as one whom it was entirely safe to follow upon measures which he had in charge. He acquired much reputation during the former session of the present Congress. The responsibility under which he then labored was greater and heavier than ever before. How well he met that responsibility we all know. His strength seemed to increase with the weight of the burden imposed, and his exertions quickened to the demands which were made upon his energies. At the close of the session his character as a wise, honest, and courageous legislator was firmly established.

The past was secure, and the future appeared full of promise. He had fully demonstrated to the satisfaction of all his entire fitness for the high position to which his services had carried him in the estimation of his colleagues and of the country. No one who knew him will deny to Mr. Burnes the possession, in a very large degree, of a high order of ability for public affairs. He was not content with the mastery of the principles upon which a question rested and to which it owed its vitality; he also strove to possess himself of the details of its application to correct government. He regarded matters of legislation rather from a practical than a theoretical standpoint, and for that reason his opinions were entitled to great weight. Had he lived for some years longer it is quite certain that his reputation would have grown to national proportions and that leadership in the councils of his party would have been cheerfully accorded him.

But, Mr. Speaker, the most interesting feature of Mr. Burnes's character are to be drawn from his social and domestic relations. He had many, very many friends, who were attached to him by the strongest ties. His genial and kindly nature made it pleasant, indeed, to be with him, and the enjoyment of his society was not relinquished without regret. What more beautiful and instructive lesson could be taught than that which is to be found in the close and affectionate relationship which existed between D. D. Burnes, C. F. Burnes, and James N. Burnes—three brothers? In business affairs they were partners, owning everything in common and never disagreeing in the matter of property, or in its acquirement, disposition, and management.

D. D. Burnes dying more than twenty years ago, the affections of the survivors were extended, in all their strength, to his children, and the six orphans—minors all of them—occupied the very same place as their father in the love of their uncles. They were tenderly cared for during the years of their minority, and are to-day co-sharers in the joint property of the three brothers. They dwell beneath the same roof and sit around a common board.

Probably a more touching address has never been heard than those few and simple words, which were spoken by the last surviving brother—one of the three—to the Congressional committee, who accompanied his remains to St. Joseph. He spoke of their business and of their domestic relations and of the undying attachment which bound each to the other, concluding with the statement that the strongest of the three had fallen—from whose decision touching any matter of whatever kind no appeal was ever taken.

Mr. Speaker, James N. Burnes did not live in vain. He was no idler in the great vineyard in which humanity has been called to labor. From the first to the last he was a worker. The productions of his hands are to be seen in many places, nor will they soon pass away and be forgotten, now that he is no longer with us. They will survive him to bless those for whom they were conceived and accomplished, and they will remain fitting and never-fading memorials of his great usefulness. Mr. Burnes had an abiding confidence in the sublime truths of the Christian religion, and it is indeed gratifying to know that, in the midst of the pressing engagements of a busy and an active career, he did not forget those higher and more important duties which pertain to the life which is eternal.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, while I can hardly hope to add to the eloquent tributes that have been paid to the memory of our distinguished friend who has so recently gone from our midst, I feel that I can not let the occasion pass without offering my testimony to the valuable services, eminent ability, and high character of our lamented associate.

For more than thirty years we have lived in adjoining districts, separated only by the river that marks the boundaries of our respective States. For the greater part of that time we have been acquaintances and friends. The interests of our respective constituents were largely identical. Our people are bound closely together by intimate business relations, and each felt that in working for his own district he was advancing the interests of the other. Himself a large property-holder in one of the principal cities of my State, he was regarded as being as closely identified with its interests, and was as well known to its people, as to those of his own city.

It is an especial gratification to me to be able to say, after six years of association with him on this floor, we having together entered the Forty-eighth Congress, that I have always found him ready and active in the support of all measures which I have introduced for the benefit of the people whom I represent. Though occupying seats on the opposite sides of this Hall, our relations were always harmonious and cordial. During his term of service in this House I have always been able to rely upon his intelligent interest in and hearty support of all measures intended to promote the welfare of the people of Kansas. That they appreciated his efforts in their behalf is shown by the unanimous adoption by the upper branch of our Legislature, composed almost entirely of those belonging to an opposite political party, of the following resolutions of sympathy and regret at his untimely death. They testify to the estimation in which he was held by the people wherever he was known:

Whereas the people of Kansas learn with profound regret of the death of Congressman James N. Burnes, of Missouri: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of Kansas, That in the death of Colonel Burnes this State has lost a firm supporter, the West a loyal friend and just legislator, and the country at large an honest, wise, and prudent statesman.

Resolved, That the sympathy and condolence of this body be extended to the family of Colonel Burnes in their affliction.

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased statesman.

All of Mr. Burnes's active life was spent in Western Missouri, where he was taken in early childhood. At that time that section of the State was but sparsely settled. Railroads were unknown; the early settlers were poor; and amid the privations and hardships of pioneer life his early manhood was spent. Endowed with a hardy frame, a robust constitution, and a splendid intellect, he was ambitious not only to secure for himself a competency, but to establish a name among those with whom his lot had been cast. To this end he strove to develop the resources of his great State, and his labors for what he believed to be the best interests of her people were unceasing.

While bold and self-reliant, he was never unnecessarily aggressive, nor unmindful of the feelings and rights of others. Marking out his course, he pursued it with all the energy of his nature. Fighting his battles with undaunted courage and yielding nothing to force or blandishment, he pressed forward with an indomitable will, surmounting all obstacles. He knew no such word as fail. Kind, generous, and considerate, always affable and courteous, he never wantonly gave pain to others. To the poor he was a generous, thoughtful, and true friend, and was ever helpful to those who needed and deserved aid.

As a member of this House he occupied from the first a foremost position. Able to grapple successfully with all questions which were presented, however comprehensive in their scope, he worked untiringly for the success of what he believed to be right and for the highest and best interests of his country. He was always at his post of duty. It was inborn in his very nature to do what he did with all his might.

To his political party in his State he was a tower of strength. A wise and judicious leader, and at the same time a brave and fearless champion, his loss will be severely felt in the political contests of his section of the country. While intensely devoted to his party, and ready to labor unceasingly and with all his might for its success, he was in no sense a bitter partisan. On the contrary, he was always courteous to his opponents and tolerant of the views of those who differed from him.

Mr. Burnes had many warm, true friends on this side of the House, a fact which he often spoke of with feelings of gratification, and which is well attested by the unanimous expressions of grief at his loss which have come from my political associates here.

Eminently a man of affairs, deeply interested in business and politics, our dead associate was at the same time a tender husband, an affectionate father, and a trustful, confiding brother and friend. The partner of his life and home, for years a confirmed invalid, found in him not only a sturdy champion and protector, but also a tender confidant who valued her counsels and appreciated the genuine worth which affliction only served to bring out in brighter colors. Henceforth her widowed heart will turn for consolation to gracious and loving memories of him who has gone, cheered and sustained by the sweet faith of the Christian that when a few more years have passed the ties so rudely sundered will be reunited never again to be severed, and that beyond the river, in that better land, they will enjoy each other's society forever.

Our friend fell at the post of duty and in the midst of his labors. The end befitted the nature and qualities of the man. Pursuing the methods of a life crowded with activities, a mortal blow fell upon him, and before the light of another morning had come he had "crossed the river and was at rest."

Mr. Speaker, I can conceive of no more felicitous ending of a busy and burdened life than to have the golden cord severed before age has dimmed the faculties or disease enfeebled the vital energies. Thus to depart, in the midst of cheerful employments and in the enjoyment of the confidence and trust of our fellow-men, is indeed to enter into rest.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I was introduced to Colonel Burnes in 1874, at the capitol of our State. Our homes were in different sections of the State, about 200 miles apart. After our acquaintance began we met more or less frequently, but I knew him only in a general way. Our meetings were accidental or at some important conventions of the people, where both of us happened to be on public business. Our greetings were such only as are usually incident to such occasions. I speak now of a time preceding my election to Congress. He had served here the term before I came and had been re-elected. When I came to Washington I met with all those petty annoyances which spring from a lack of experience and knowledge and which are common to some extent, I presume, to all novitiates.

Colonel Burnes had been here long enough to become familiar with the ways and methods of our national public life. He came to me voluntarily and often and made suggestions which were useful, and rendered me many little services that were valuable. This was not done in a patronizing way, but with such a modest frankness and with such a glow of natural kindness as to remove every suggestion of impertinence. Whatever he did in this respect was done in a manner so easy, so graceful, so natural, that it seemed to be wholly without design, and created a pleasing sense of gratitude without any special weight of obligation.

These little courtesies attracted me to him and afforded me a fortunate and gratifying opportunity to cultivate his friendship. I came to know him well, almost to the verge of familiarity. We were much together, and had between us many little confidences. We were close friends. I never made any special study of his history, his life, or his character; but I knew the man Burnes well. What I knew of him was not the result of psychological study. I never set him on a pedestal before me to mark out the perfect lines and the imperfect, the strong points and the weak points of his character. I could not, and I would not if I could, lay the cold steel of unfeeling criticism and analysis to the life and character of any man who was my friend, and whose memory is dear to me. I would not test the life-work of any man, warm-hearted, impulsive, aspiring, whose life has been passed in the midst of great activities, by the superfine standard of a dreamer or a moralist.

This man was human, and had many of the frailties and weaknesses of our mortality. I could not have loved him else. But his faults were either the waste of an overflowing companionableness, which in him was genial and attractive to an extraordinary degree, or they were faults which came bristling up when the fierce lion in the man was aroused. When pursuing "the even tenor of his way," when at his natural level, he was as free from fault and as safely armored against criticism as any man. But he found pleasure in his friends. He loved their laughter, their songs, their humorous sayings, their familiar banterings, and all the sweet abandon of boon companionship. These traits may sometimes have led him beyond the straight line of a punctilious and over-morbid orthodoxy, but never into any species of debauchery or excess. He was well poised and guarded himself well enough. His faults in this respect, if faults they were, were simply the overflow of a generous, kindly, companionable man—one who could recognize the obligations of morality without a tinge of asceticism, and who could observe all the just proprieties without engaging in any Pecksniffian pretense.

He had iron in his blood, too. He was a dangerous man to wrong. He knew how to remember, how to resent, how to revenge. A fallen foe or a repentant one, he was ready always to forgive. Accessible at all times to honorable reconciliation, an open foe did well to guard with caution and watch with apprehension. He was fruitful of resource, adroit in attack, masterful in defense, relentless in pursuit. His enemies, whether those who had done him a positive wrong or those who stood as obstacles in the way of his great purposes, had never any reason to doubt that sooner or later an opportunity would come to test his mettle. He fought as occasion required, but honorably. Some who stood against him, in their most promising periods of apparent safety, have suddenly felt their foundations sinking and seen the fabric of their strength falling about them, without comprehending the cause of disaster. Others he has confronted and sprung upon with the roar and crush of a lion, impatient of restraint, and swept them away at once. While his enemy stood upon his feet to strike and defy, he had in his blood the merciless instinct of battle and in his brain the inspiration of the warrior. But when the sun went down upon a battle finished there came back to his heart the gentleness of a woman and a longing to forgive and be forgiven. These things may have been faults. If so, he had them.

He was a man of brains. He was a man of force and power at all times and under all circumstances. He has been associated with many great and important enterprises, social, commercial, and political, and in all of them was a potent if not a dominant factor. His public work here is well known to us and to the country. Patient in research, persistent in industry, equipped with an enormous fund of valuable information, scrupulously desiring and bravely determined to do what his deliberate judgment dictated was right, possessing the unbounded confidence of his associates in the sincerity of his purposes and the integrity of his manhood, strong in debate, aggressive when need be, yielding when he could, firm as a rock when principle was involved, but courteous always, it is no marvel that he won high place and great influence in this Hall and at this capital, and impressed his thought and individuality upon the legislation and policies of his country.

He was strong, forceful, ambitious. To a great eminence he climbed, and ere he fell unfurled his standard high among the green waving banners of fame. But fall he did, as fall we must. In the midst of his labor, usefulness, and rising power he sank from our sight and from the world. While his power was growing, his renown spreading, his fame aripening, he fell here at his post of duty. With loving hands we bore him away and laid him to rest among the great oaks, the sugar-maple, the weeping-willows, the flowers, and the cold, white monuments in that city of the dead on a hill-top above the city where he lived. Away from the scenes of his labors and triumphs. Away from his friends and his loved ones. Away from his home—that home as I saw it and heard of it, with all its deep pathos and wealth of love. Oh, the pitiful, clinging love of the invalid wife! Oh, the marvelous love of the brothers living and of the orphaned children of the brother dead! Oh, the unfeigned devotion of his own manly sons! Oh, the sad faces and pathetic tears of their little ones! All—wife, brothers, nieces, children, and grandchildren—lived, as they have lived for many years, under one expansive roof.

The memory of it all—of all the sweet confidence, companionship, helpfulness, and love of the home-life of my departed friend—returns to me now, mellowed and sanctified by the soft radiance of something too beautiful and too sacred to tell in speech, and which, as I saw it and heard it, lifted me up, and still lifts me up, as if I had felt the electric touch of something divine and heavenly! Bore him away from this beautiful world and this wonderful life! We laid him down sleeping where the dead sleep, and left him. When the spring comes the oak and the maple will put on their green garniture again, the flowers will unfold their many-tinted beauties to the sun, and the willow will go on sighing to the end. But his heavy eyelids will never lift again that his eyes may brighten at the sight of beauty or grow moist at the sound of a sigh.

Is this the end? Is this sleeping, nerveless, crumbling statue the end of this remarkable man, who lived, loved, wrought so much? Oh, how that question has been sent wailing down all the ages! How, through all the cycles since man was born, has he stood in the light of the present, and of the past also, as it comes shadowing up—stood upon the verge of the future, peering into the darkness wistfully, questioning, ever questioning, "Is this the end?" Stand here and cry into the future as you may, no answer will ever come back to you. None ever has come back from the darkness of the future. Our only answer is in the present—in what we see about us, in what we feel, and think and are—and in the testimonies of the past. Climb to any height you will, dig to any depth you can, stretch wide your wings and soar—

> From star to star,
> From world to luminous world, as far
> As the universe stretches its flaming wall—

and pour your plaintive cry through all the spheres, and the same dumb silence will greet you. But we know and feel that if this is the end, then life is a sorry thing indeed. Is it hardly worth the living? I do not know. I am not sure. This I do know, that there is in me, as in you, a feeling, which is independent of mere desire—a strange consciousness that is not connected with any sense of fear or hope—that there is something in us that is not "of the earth earthy;" that is not of this mortality, mortal. I take hold of this. And because of this divine principle in our being we should recall with increased reverence the memories of our mothers, and thank them for the strange stories, the wonderful stories, of the past and of the hereafter which they taught us at their knees.

I do not believe that the great life of our lamented friend ended for all time when we laid that casket away at St. Joseph amid the tears and lamentations of the people. He lived nobly, achieved greatly, died bravely. The awful mystery of death has been solved to him. In a little while we shall pass over also, and may be we shall clasp hands again.

> O holy hope! and high humility—
> High as the arching heavens above!
> These are your walks, and you have shown them me,
> To kindle my cold love.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, the duties which crowd upon us here afford me but a moment to speak of my departed friend. Of his birth, of the incidents of his youth, of the struggles, privations, and vicissitudes of his young manhood, of his achievements in private life and the larger successes of his public career, of those qualities of heart and mind which brightened his home and signalized his relations to his neighbors and to his friends, others here to-day have spoken in terms of just appreciation.

Were the time at my command, I also would gladly dwell upon these pleasing recollections, for it is a pleasure, even under the most afflicting circumstances, to recall what was good and great in the character and personal traits of those whom we loved and honored in life. It may fairly be said of him who is gone that from youth to death his daily life was an illustration of qualities that extort admiration, and which would, if emulated, encourage the rising generation in the pursuit of the most exalted objects of ambition, modulated by prudence and supported by dauntless courage and tireless industry.

Memorial exercises would be but idle ceremonies if they were merely to afford opportunity for public expression of personal sorrow for the loss of some dear friend or the sudden quenching of some cherished spirit. They are held for another and a wiser purpose. Commemorating thus publicly eminent qualities, whether of soul or of intellect, or of both united, they become an incentive to the emulation of the living, making them better men and women. They stimulate in youth and dawning manhood a worthy ambition to thrive, to achieve, to excel. They are calculated to contribute to the fashioning of a higher order of society, and to a greater, stronger, nobler nationality. Guided by an unseen but potent influence, they become an inspiration, and the world is made the better for them.

I might speak in tearful tones of the warm friendship that existed between the distinguished dead and myself. I might properly refer to the fact that for several years we were assigned to the same committee and followed the same paths of duty, and that our pleasant relations during these years were never for a moment interrupted, though we often disagreed touching public methods and policies. Then, too, I might recall the agreeable conversation, now so indelibly impressed upon my memory, that I had with him about 10 o'clock of the morning of the day he was stricken—the vigor of his strictures upon certain abuses, the vivacity, humor, and sparkling satire that marked his utterances.

I might remind my colleagues of the committee of the characteristic force and clearness with which he discussed pending matters up to nearly if not quite noon of that fatal day. Moreover, I might give expression in words to the intensity of the emotions I experienced when, being informed by my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] that he was lying ill in the committee-room, I immediately hastened to him and found him, as I then feared and as the sad event proved, fatally stricken. To dwell upon these and kindred incidents and reflections would be grateful to my own feelings, but it would hardly subserve those higher and better purposes to which I should gladly hope these brief observations might contribute.

The character of Mr. Burnes was rich in qualities which commend themselves to the approval and admiration of the worthiest of mankind, and so become a pattern for imitation. Chief among these were ambition, industry, and courage. From early boyhood he was inspired by a restless ambition. To advance—to make secure the victory of to-day and strive for another to-morrow—to hold the eminence attained by patient endeavor or heroic struggle until there were none to dispute, and then to strike out for higher ground—this was the dominating feature of his character, as seen and known by those with whom he had been associated for the greater part of his active life. As usual with ambitious men, he felt himself equal to whatever he undertook, and thus he succeeded where other men of equal talents, but with less of the force and genius to impel and guide them, signally failed.

This ruling trait of his mental and moral organization was successfully and always ministered to by an industry that was as tireless as it was phenomenal. His was indeed a busy life. Whether struggling for the first successes which laid the foundation of wealth and honors, or holding in his strong and capable hands the reins which controlled his widely-expanded affairs, or striving for the honors and opportunities which political triumphs sometimes but not always bring, he was the soul of patient, persevering, unresting industry. He had no faith in a future to be evolved from the "chapter of accidents," or to be secured through the smiles of a blind but propitious destiny; but he had confidence in his good right arm and active brain, and through their constant and skillful employment he nobly succeeded.

Possibly, however—for who can assign to each ingredient in the grand alchemy of human achievement its precise share of credit?—the ambition and the industry of our late associate might have failed to bring him victory had not these qualities been supplemented and reenforced by a courage that was equal to any and every emergency.

In the crude and unripened civilization of what was in the early days of Mr. Burnes the frontier, there was constant occasion for the useful exercise of this martial element of his nature; and no one who knew him can doubt the fullness of the measure in which it was developed in him, nor the calm determination with which it was applied to all the exigencies of his career.

Not yet an old man, scarcely even beyond the prime of manhood, we may only conjecture as to the heights he might still have gained, the triumphs he might still have secured had his life been extended to the Psalmist's limit. Abandoning this field of speculation, we may take pride in what he accomplished, in that influence for good which a successful life impresses upon the community in which it is spent and the world with which it is brought in contact, as well as indulge in tender recollections of the generosity, kindliness, and good-fellowship that made association with him here delightful. In the long hereafter these grateful recollections will remain to comfort us in some degree for his too early departure.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, James Nelson Burnes is dead. The loved home and family shall know him on earth no more. The community that honored him while living laments his loss as that of her foremost citizen. The great council of the nation is in session, and with touching words and appropriate ceremonies bears honorable testimony to the wisdom, the ability, the prudence, and political purity of the life of their late associate. Thrice fortunate was he—in the accumulation of wealth, in the attainment of political honors, and in the manner of his death.

Born in Indiana, he was taken when a child to the Platte purchase in Missouri. No educational facilities being in existence there, he was selected from a band of brothers by their sire to be their leader in learning as he was in intellect. The father, a rugged man of the frontier, was one of great intellect—if tradition be true, even more so than the son—and possessed of a will as firm, as unyielding, as tenacious as that of Andrew Jackson, with a superb courage that had no superior on the Western border, yet of little learning; his fame will forever live in the memory of the old pioneers of the Platte purchase as an unfading glory. All these traits of character were inherited, and, coupled with the learning of Harvard College, belonged to James Nelson Burnes. From his start in life he was a leader.

For twenty-five years he gave himself to the accumulation of a fortune. He was a success. He died a millionaire. To win this on the border of civilization means the ability to win ten times that in Wall street or Boston. In the pursuit of wealth he suffered no obstacle to turn him aside, and in this period of life he made whatever of enemies his career knew; but in spite of enemies and obstacles he strode his pathway to fortune, a veritable giant among his fellows, building railroads, erecting iron bridges over the "Great Muddy," founding towns, creating banks, and developing his region round about, whether in Kansas or in Missouri. Possessed of a magnificent physique, great good health, and the build and strength of an athlete, he strode his pathway only to conquer and win.

When about forty-five years of age a great change came over him. His fortune was made. Financially he was a great leader in his whole region. He now became ambitious of political honors. It was at this period of his life I first became acquainted with him. In his new field of conquest he revolutionized his life from the stern, unyielding taskmaster, demanding the ounce of blood to the uttermost that the law gave to him, and from knowing no friend, except as self-interest dictated, he became the reverse of all this, and was the kind, considerate friend, the lover of humanity, the polite, affable gentleman and entertainer, and wise counselor that you, his associates here, knew him to be. I first met him at the capital of Missouri in the struggle for Senator in the winter of 1874.

Possessed at that time of a reputation as broad as the State for a haughty temper, an almost cruel tenacity of purpose, an imperial will, and an uncertain friend, yet such was the charm of his manners, his unswerving courteousness, his unvarying politeness, and his tact and hospitality in the open rooms kept by him that he had become the most lovable among men. So that on his advent practically in State politics, after the late war, in three weeks' time this (former) reputation was so overthrown and the new one so established in the minds of those at the capital, his popularity so developed and established, that on the night the Democratic caucus was held in the chamber of the representatives, which resulted in the first nomination of Senator FRANCIS MARION COCKRELL, on a mock caucus for Senator being called and held in the senate chamber at the other end of the capitol, by the third house, popularly so called, composed of the lobby, with adherents present of all rivals for the then pending Democratic Senatorial nomination, as well as officers of the State government, of all grades and honors, with distinguished men of all political parties from all sections of the State present, all anxiously awaiting the result of the real caucus at the other end, whereupon all present resolved themselves into a caucus of the third house to elect a United States Senator; and upon the second ballot, if I remember correctly, Hon. James Nelson Burnes was declared the candidate of the third house for the United States Senator. Although little regarded at the time, yet, in the light of all his past life and prior existing prejudice, in my opinion Hon. James N. Burnes never achieved a greater victory than this.

From that time forward his position in our State politics as one of our great leaders was assured. In all the State conventions of his party, as well as in his Congressional district, he became a leading factor, and since then he has undoubtedly been the true friend, tried leader, consummate statesman, and accomplished gentleman we all know him to have been. Thenceforward he was a power in the State. In 1882 he was elected to the Forty-eighth Congress, and successively thereafter to the Forty-ninth, the Fiftieth, and the Fifty-first Congresses, and each time by an enlarged majority. I shall not speak of his life and services as a member of this House, except to declare our State, our people, and our party alike were proud of him, but shall leave his services in Congress to be a topic for those who knew him longer and more intimately in these associations than I have.

A kind disposition and charitable heart may be instanced in two matters and directions: First, a brother dying with little wealth left a large family of children; their Uncle James adopted them as his own; reared them; educated them; treated them in all respects as his own children. They know him to be the kind, considerate, thoughtful friend and father he was to them.

Again, while at St. Joseph I saw among the floral offerings on his bier and in the room one sent with a card from a grateful widow and her children, whom our friend had in a time of great necessity aided and saved from much distress. But why further dilate on these phases of his character? All his associates at Washington know him to have been possessed of these graces that so highly adorn human character.

He above the rest,
In shape and gesture proudly eminent,
Stood like a tow'r.

At times there was a quiet touch of humor in his composition, of which I think I was the last victim. On the Monday before his death there was a question pending on a roll-call of vital importance to the fate of the bill to organize Oklahoma Territory, a bill in which I have taken more interest than any other pending in this Congress. As the roll-call proceeded I watched it with great interest. When his name was called, although in his seat, he did not vote on the first call. Full of anxiety, I went to him and said, "Colonel, why did you not vote?" He looked up into my face, for he was seated and I was standing, and said, "No one has told me yet how to vote." I said, "Pshaw! Colonel, you know how to vote. You do not need to be told how to vote." Observing my anxiety, he again and laughingly said, "It is a fact; no one has told me yet how to vote." At this I thought he was chaffing me and left him. An hour or two afterward, like the courteous gentleman he was, he purposely came across the Hall to my seat and said, "Charlie, you thought I was joking you awhile ago. The truth is, I had just taken my seat, and did not know what bill was pending when you came to me, and hence at that time no one had told me how to vote." To the truth of which I laughingly assented.

I have said he was fortunate in his death. Like all vigorous-minded, stout athletes, rejoicing at all times in health and strength, the fear of a long, lingering illness, to result in death, was peculiarly distasteful, and he often expressed the desire that when his time to die came it might be quickly and without physical suffering. His wish was granted. Stricken in a moment, to become forever unconscious, in this building where his greatest fame was achieved, and to die in a few hours thereafter. His last words were: "I have much to do; I hate to quit the battle now."

Of heroic mold and imperial will, there is to be found no trace of fear of death in this lament. It is a simple expression, drawn from his consciousness of ability yet to do and achieve much, if permitted by Providence to live out the full span of life decreed to man. On the contrary, he had no fear of death. To his more intimate friends, during the last year of his life, he frequently spoke of his being sure that he was even in the "valley of the shadow of death." And this so frequently that his friends now know that premonitions, amounting in him to almost positive knowledge, of his early death were in his mind at all times during the latter months of his life; divers times he so expressed himself to me. A marked instance of it is found in the note sent to Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, on the Saturday prior to his death, when in the chair on the occasion of our obsequies to one of our late associates, wherein he said to his friend RANDALL that it would not be long before he would be called on to perform a like service for him.

Yet these premonitions did not interfere with his sense of duty nor his work. Nor did this abate his cheerfulness or cloud his temper, and to the last he was the considerate statesman, the polite gentleman, and the courteous friend.

In his death he is lamented by all men. He was buried in the open presence of nearly every inhabitant of the proud city in which he lived, on the coldest, bleakest day of the passing winter—a most touching testimonial of the universal esteem in which he was held.

In memory—

Thou art not in the grave confined;
Death can not claim the immortal mind.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, it was Lord Bacon's aspiration that his name and memory might be left to men's charitable speeches, to foreign nations, and to the next ages.

More fortunate than he, James N. Burnes could have invoked the verdict of those who have lived where he has lived, and who know the record of his life as well as the judgment of the members of this House with whom he was most intimately associated. The action of the Legislature of his own State, when his death was announced, the beautiful tributes of affectionate regard for his memory paid by the people of all classes in the great Commonwealth he loved so well, the unbroken voice of grief that has found expression in every newspaper in the State show that there his name and memory are forever safe, while the touching eulogies pronounced to-day are an assurance that he gained for himself the place in the affections of his later associates that he so deservedly held in the hearts of the people at home.

As was said of Lord Palmerston, Colonel Burnes's great attraction in public was the blending of social ease, kindliness, and humor with the temper of a strong, hard man of the world. He was an able lawyer, a successful financier, and a masculine politician.

It is seldom that a man appears on the world's stage who possesses the elements of character which enable him to achieve success in more than one pursuit. There is a passage in one of Lucian's Dialogues where Jupiter complains to Cupid that he has never been beloved; and Cupid advises him to lay aside his ægis and his thunderbolts, and to place a garland on his head and to walk with a soft step and assume an obsequious deportment. Jupiter replies that he is unable to resign his dignity. Then Cupid tells him he must leave off desiring to be loved; he can not be Jupiter and Adonis. But Colonel Burnes was singularly endowed. He won distinction as a lawyer, afterwards became one of the most successful financiers in the country, and later on an eminent statesman.

Whether as a lawyer, a banker, or a politician he was the same affable, agreeable, courteous gentleman. And to the possession of these attributes may in large degree, I think, be ascribed his success. His courtesy and kindliness of manner manifested themselves at all times and everywhere. He was as regardful of the feelings of the newsboys on the street or the servants at the hotel as he was of those of the most distinguished member of this House. His friendships were strong and uncalculating, and he inspired their objects with a responsive feeling.

In them were embraced persons in all stations and positions in life, the rich and the poor, the old and the young. Some of us noted the beautiful friendship between him and little Sammy Randall, the son of our distinguished friend from Pennsylvania. All of us who were present at Willard's Hotel in this city, where he had lived for six years, will recall the scene of anguish among the servants when his death was made known. In his intercourse with equals and inferiors he was the most amiable gentleman I ever knew.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is near the city of St. Joseph, in Missouri, a little spot our friend used to call "home;" and to him and his dear ones there it was all that word implies. Here it was that his amiability and his love shone forth in all their splendor and sublimity.

In this happy home—it was a happy home until so recently invaded by the great destroyer—are to be found six children, the sons and daughters of a deceased brother, who, upon the death of their father, were made members of Colonel Burnes's household, and since he has gone, I am informed, it has been ascertained that these orphaned ones are to enjoy in equal parts with his own children Colonel Burnes's magnificent estate.

Colonel Burnes, like the younger Adams, as was said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], fell at his post of duty in this House.

He passed away almost in our sight.

Life! I know not what thou art,
But this I know, that thou and I must part;
And when or where or how we met,
I own to me's a secret yet.

* * * * * * *

Life! we've been long together,
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather.
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear,
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear—
Then steal away—give little warning,
Choose thine own time, say not "Good night!"
But in some brighter clime bid me "Good morning!"

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, "the silver cord is loosed and the pitcher is broken at the fountain." The clay of James Nelson Burnes "is covered thick with other clay;" 'twas but—

The vase of earth, the trembling clod,
Constrained to hold the breath of God—

but his immortal spark has been borne back to its divine origin, there, let us hope, to be relumed by the "Living Light" and, with all the ills of earth expunged, to shine in ineffable glory through eternity.

The beautiful and commendable custom that devotes a day to the memory of a deceased member has been long established, and while it is true that it can no way add to the virtues of the dead, yet it softens the hearts of the living and fills their minds with earnest thoughts of the life after death. To-day the legislative business of this great body is suspended that we may bear faithful and willing witness to the merits of James Nelson Burnes and to his usefulness as a member, though nothing we may say can add to the high esteem in which he is held by the members of this House.

Missouri mourns his loss. In life he served her faithfully, ably, and with honor, and in death, though missed, he will not be forgotten. His virtues were positive and aggressive, seeking to establish truth and to destroy error. As a partisan he was strong, persistent, praiseworthy, and he admired the same traits in the opposition.

In every conflict in Congress between parties he fought with a courage and skill rarely equaled and seldom surpassed. His life and its achievements are an excellent example of the splendid possibilities of American citizenship. Born in Indiana, a State that has produced many distinguished sons, he possessed in a large degree the firmness and faithfulness of Hendricks, the unbending will and defiant daring of Morton, and much of the persuasive eloquence of VOORHEES.

Taken to Missouri when a little boy, he early learned to love the State of his adoption and to labor for her advancement with an ever-increasing zeal and an energy that never flagged. His character was cast in the broad mold of the boundless West—in the great State of Missouri, a State possessed of empire. Within her limits grow the hardy grains of the North and the sun-kissed flowers of the South. Here the kings of American agriculture, corn, cotton, wheat, hold joint sway with the queens of American enterprise, commerce, manufacturing, and mining. Here, too, the constant touch and rub and commingling of cavalier with puritan has brightened the best of each and produced characteristics more nearly American perhaps than can be found elsewhere. When to such characteristics we add the ennobling influence of education we can easily see why Mr. Burnes was so superbly fitted to represent in the Congress every interest of his constituency, his State, and his country. He was sympathetic, charitable, generous, and just. To his friends he was faithful and from his foes he did not shrink.

Here in this House, where there is so much of wit and learning, so much of wisdom and of law, here where the fiercest political battles are fought, here where the intellectual giants of the Republic struggle for political supremacy, Mr. Burnes, in his short service of six years, won a position, wielded a power, and attained a distinction accorded to but few. Judged by fair standards, his life was a well-rounded success. In the great battle for worldly competence he was a master. His firm grasp of economic principles and financial problems fully attested the high order of his abilities.

In politics he strove for place, not to gratify personal pride, but as a means whereby he could better serve his people and his country. He had ambition, but it was an ambition to improve the condition of man; an ambition to more firmly establish in the hearts and minds of the people the great principles by which he thought this country should be governed, and of which he was such an able champion. His faith in Jeffersonian theories was never shaken. He believed that the prosperity of our country and the perpetuity of our institutions depended upon them, and so believing he supported earnestly, logically, and powerfully with purse, pen, and voice the great cause of Democracy.

Mr. Burnes was tolerant, even considerate, of the opinions of those who were opposed to him politically, and many of his warmest personal friends are on the Republican side of this Chamber. When his eyes closed in death they rested on that filial and affectionate son, who had come but a few days before from his distant home so that he might be with and watch beside his father, that father having had premonitions of approaching dissolution. The message he had to send was the saddest the son can send the mother, the death of the father, but her great grief must have been lessened by the thought that her husband was "sustained and soothed" in the hour of his departure by the presence of one of their children.

> On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
> Some pious drops the closing eye requires.

Mr. Speaker, I saw him lying cold in death, and upon his lips—

> The spoiler had set the seal of silence.
> But there beamed a smile,
> So fixed, so holy, from that manly brow,
> Death gazed, and left it there.
> He dared not steal
> The signet ring of heaven.

Of the many sad associations that cling about this historic Hall, none cast such sadness athwart my memory as the sudden stop, the abrupt ending of the earthly career of James Nelson Burnes. His chair is empty, his deep voice is hushed forever, his name is dropped from the roll, he is dead; but he will live in the hearts of those who knew him best, for "they are they" who loved him most.

Heaven's justice in the sudden shock that parts us from a friend is veiled from human ken, but when we remember "So 'twas willed where will and power are one," we bow with unshaken faith in the goodness and wisdom of "Him who doeth all things well." Knowing that however incomplete and imperfect our earthly career may be, that "if in the heart there is naught condemns us," we shall attain in the life to come a completeness and a perfection beyond the conception of earthly wisdom, for while "it doth not yet appear what we shall be, we know we shall be like Him."

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, all well-informed and intelligent men are admonished by a maxim older than our language that they should say nothing of the dead except that which is good. No man who knew James N. Burnes or who was accurately informed as to his worth and his walk in life could truthfully say anything that would be harsh of him, living or dead. Of huge physical mold, the qualities of his mind were in singular consonance with his physical power. Well known to every member of this body without exception, and by reputation not an unknown man in this great country, of which he was a distinguished citizen, when he is judged by the standard which humanity has set up for itself it will be admitted that in every respect he was a man and a gentleman.

Often, seeing him rise in this Chamber and being recognized by the Speaker as "the gentleman from Missouri," have I looked upon him and felt the full significance of the term as applied to him. Kind, true, modest, and brave, he stood in this Hall with perhaps few peers and certainly no superiors. Able, devoted to the interests of his constituents and to the traditions and institutions of his country, having high hopes for its future, while for months the shadow of his impending doom hung over him like a pall, he never faltered in pursuing the line of what he conceived to be his duty. He had, as we all know, an admonition that his life of usefulness was soon to terminate; but he went unfalteringly forward and met the arch enemy of the human race with that same fortitude and fearlessness with which he had met and overcome the difficulties of an eventful, useful, and charitable life.

I think that I was placed in a position where I could judge of the qualities of a man like Mr. Burnes. Coming to the Forty-ninth Congress as one of its younger members, I frequently sought his advice, which was always cheerfully given. And I can say now that so long as I kept in the line of the policy which he suggested I think I made few, if any, mistakes.

Honest, upright, not fearing to look any man in the face, he did not fear to meet the hereafter. He has crossed over the river. Though taken from us suddenly, I believe that no man has been taken from this House by the ruthless grasp of the hand of death who has been more sincerely regretted than James N. Burnes. When his great heart ceased to beat every honest man had lost a friend. When the intelligence of his death flashed along the wires of the great West, of the civilization and citizenship of which he was so fair a type, it carried sorrow to many hearts, because, by virtue of his great qualities, he was not an unknown man; and in time to come, when those who knew him and knew of him pass by the spot sacred as the resting place of the mortal remains of James N. Burnes, they will pause and "memory will drop a tear among the flowers as affection strews them over his grave."

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Speaker, in the presence of the great dead whom we have honored and loved in his lifetime words seem very weak. A profound and holy silence is more fitting to the occasion than any speech.

I became a member of this body in the Forty-eighth Congress with the deceased, James Nelson Burnes; and from that day until the moment of his death I was honored in no small degree with his friendship, and to some extent with his confidence. He was really a great man. You would single him out in a multitude by his strong, attractive face. With a tremendous physical frame—a fit temple for the magnificent enginery of his mind—he was marked in his life, so far as I could observe and from what I have heard of him, by an unusual singleness of purpose, by an indomitable will, by a perseverance seldom equaled among men. He was a very frank and sincere man, and was characterized by a bluntness of speech when opinions were drawn from him. He was a hater of cant and insincerity in all its forms. Were hypocrisy enthroned as high as the Himalayas, with the whole of mankind prostrate before it, the sturdy, honest limbs of James Nelson Burnes would not "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee."

He would stand erect in his iron manhood, unbent and unbending. He had remarkable sagacity and took clear, practical views of all questions. He had withal a subtle mind; but misty, metaphysical disquisition had little part in his stormy, rugged, manly life. His aim was to get, as it were, at the marrow of things, and measure his labor by results. He was in a proper way a very proud man. You could burn him over a slow fire at the stake before he would profess a friendship he did not feel or recant a conviction he held. Storms may rage, but only God can move mountains. Every idle wave may play with the vagabond sands, but the sea in a million years may lash itself with little impression against the granite rocks. He was like a good, strong, iron-ribbed ship, deep in whose hold pulsate the giant, relentless, untiring, undaunted, monster engines that drive her through gale and and calm to a destined port. His firm hand never wavered for hurricane or fierce lightning-bolt, but steadily kept her headed for whatever haven his deep purpose had chosen. Only God and his messenger, Death, could relax that grip in the wheel-spokes.

When he became a member of this House he showed in his labors here the characteristics which had made up his fortune and his fame in his adopted State. He was an honest workman. He undertook the business of membership of this House and of his committee as the hard, practical task of an honest servant of the people. His work here speaks for itself. He was, as has been stated, placed upon the Committee on Appropriations, a committee which deals with all the vast details of this tremendous Government.

From the first day he entered that committee until the day he died he undertook the mastery of those minute details. He labored hard and faithfully, and he gave to this House and the country, as the result of those labors, honest workmanship and a magnificent example. No superficial, sham workmanship for him. When he said he knew the facts of a case it meant that he had laboriously mastered the same. He seemed to be constantly impressed with the divine injunction to work while it was day, as "the night cometh, when no man can work."

I am not surprised at these splendid tributes to his memory. In a mad world of paste-board idols the very angels must look down with something akin to admiration at a great, true, soulful, earnest, honest man, with warm, red blood in his big heart, and a deep, unchangeable purpose in his firm, unyielding mind, doing his full duty to his God, his country, and his fellow-men. Next to a Pharisee he detested a snob, and was intensely American. His heart and sympathies were not confined to any narrow circle, but went out in deep, strong currents to the masses of his countrymen. He thought first of them and their welfare, and cared little for the opinions of self-assertive little penny-whistlers who claim to make public opinion.

Mr. Burnes, although of rugged temperament and strong convictions, was a man very tender and kind of heart. I have myself been frequently the recipient of kindnesses at his hands. As has been said so aptly and eloquently by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], underneath the iron exterior and the strength of his will there was a simple sweetness and a depth of profound pathos that few except those who knew him intimately could fathom or understand.

Mr. Burnes died, as it were, sword in hand on the field of battle. For months before his death he walked the path of duty accompanied knowingly by the dread messenger. He never flinched in the face of the summons which he knew awaited him. During those months we saw him here going in and out every day, his face a little more firmly set, those iron jaws clinched a little more strongly; but the same courtesy, the same kindness, the same charity for those that differed with him, the same urbanity characterized all his actions. This great giant man, with his massive frame, with his powerful, leonine head, with his sturdy intellect, with the iron in his blood, went day by day drudging at the details of the business of this House, faithful to the last.

"I hate," he said, "to leave the field." Ay, big heart, so much work yet to do! So many evils yet confronting your great sword in your strong arm. The hosts of dishonesty, cant, and darkness still pouring in the field, taking the places of those you have felled with those giant arms. Your soul sighs regret to leave such a field. Oh, for one more blow at the father of lies; once more to pull down the banner of fraud and error, and pave the way for God's truth, and make life more sweet and pure for honest, earnest men. Peace, warrior, fighting wrong and idleness, peace! Heaven's bugles call you off the field. The great Commander summons you quickly to His awful presence. You have earned release. Henceforth you shall have sweet repose. You have "fought the fight." Earth is better that you have lived, and your battle shall not cease, for God recruits His legions more rapidly than any earthly king.

Our words are weak, O comrade, to tell how much we miss you. We saw you in the calm—sweet, modest, and tender as a woman; we saw you in the struggle, when your great depths were stirred—fierce as the lion, majestic and irresistible as the awful forces of nature; and best of all, we saw you in calm and storm a brave, true man. We shall grasp our own swords with stronger grasp that you have lived so well, fought so hard, and died so bravely. Your life was a splendid lesson flaming in the very skies. The verities still live. Justice and truth are yet in heaven and do finally obtain on earth. The powers of light are stronger than those of darkness, and the path of duty is nobler and grander than the path of pleasure.

No man can stand here and tell me that this was solely the result of human ambition. I know nothing about the religious convictions of Mr. Burnes; I know not what form his faith took; but I do know that a brave, strong man like that, who can calmly pursue his duty day by day and night by night, though bearing in his hand the summons of the great Executioner, that man had evidently a strong, abiding, everlasting faith. I can believe that he was like the prophet who said that—

> Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls:
> Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, Tennyson, in his "In Memoriam," in a touching tribute to his friend, wrote: "That he wept a loss forever new." In my service here I have had to meet so many bereavements that although not unaccustomed to their recurrence and to the sadness of such occasions, I feel that in the loss of my personal friend, Mr. Burnes, we weep a "loss forever new."

I left him to go home to New York for a needed respite, and stopped off at Philadelphia to fill an appointment. That morning, when about to pursue my journey home, I found in the morning journals the news of the sudden and irreparable loss of my friend. I retraced my route in order to lay my heart near that which so lately throbbed in the body of my beloved friend and in sympathy with his colleagues, family, and friends.

It is no time now, sir, to speak of the sterling public and private virtues of the late member from Missouri. Other members will review his life in its beginnings and surroundings. He was of robust and manly mold, in character as well as frame. He was dutiful beyond most men. He fell at his post as the people's sentinel of the Treasury. He fell where it is meet men in his public relation should fall—whether in field or forum.

I could not, without misconception, fail to make some expression of private sorrow, for he was my dear friend, affectionate and gentle and was ever solicitous of my success and comfort in all that makes up life here, and I may say my little diplomatic life abroad.

When I resolved to go away upon a different service, and a long tour, he smoothed by his legislative as well as by his kindly care my departure; and in my absence, by his cheerful and radiant humor in his correspondence, he made exile tolerable and my return delightful.

His views of public affairs were discriminating and large. His qualities were those of frankness and honesty. His decision of character was linked with a tenderness of heart which none knew better than his colleagues on the Appropriations Committee and his other friends in this Chamber. We can do no less here and now than to bestow proper eulogy, and thus warm the hearts of his bereaved friends, and by a pause in our proceedings contemplate his goodness and thus honor his memory.

Mr. GROSVENOR withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. WADE withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. FORAN withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HEARD withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I now ask a vote on the adoption of the resolutions already submitted.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and in accordance therewith (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6612) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes, and agreed to the same.

The message also announced that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7186) to authorize the Leavenworth and Rio Grande Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, and agreed to the same.

The message further announced that the Speaker had appointed Mr. LONG as one of the managers of the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, in the place of Mr. HENDERSON, excused.

The message also announced that the House non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12485) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. DAVIDSON of Alabama, and Mr. CONGER the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 328) for the allowance of certain awards made by a board of claims to certain citizens of Jefferson County, Kentucky, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 11782) to approve and ratify the construction by the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company of the bridge over the Red River at Shreveport, La., and the bridge over the Ouachita River at Monroe, La., and to authorize said railroad company to maintain said bridges over said water ways, subject to certain stipulations and conditions; and

A bill (H. R. 12515) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at the most accessible point between the mouth of the Femme Osage Creek and a point 2 miles above the city of St. Charles, in the county of St. Charles, in the State of Missouri."

CONSIDERATION OF BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. VEST. I desire to give notice, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, that I shall ask to-morrow, after the morning business has been terminated, for the consideration of bridge bills upon the Calendar.

LIGHT-HOUSES, ETC.

Mr. FRYE. I have here quite a number of bills relating to light-houses, lights, life-saving stations, etc., many of which require further action on the part of the House on account of amendments to be made by the Senate, none of which will lead to any discussion whatever. I have been instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back the bills and ask unanimous consent that they may receive immediate action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine, from the Committee on Commerce, reports favorably certain bills for which he asks immediate action.

Mr. FRYE. I report first from the Committee on Commerce, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 12310) providing for the establishment of certain lights on the coast of Mississippi.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to establish range-lights to guide into the mouth of the Pascagoula River, Mississippi, at a cost not to exceed $1,000, and to establish a light on the east bank of Pearl River, Mississippi, opposite the draw in the railway bridge, at a cost not to exceed $250.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I also report from the Committee on Commerce, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11342) providing for the re-establishment of the light-house at Point Isabel, Texas.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to re-establish the light-house at Point Isabel, in the State of Texas, at a cost not to exceed $8,000.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate not to exceed $85,000 to construct a steam-tender for light-house duty on the Northwestern Lakes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. The bills so far reported and passed have been placed on the sundry civil appropriation bill. I now report bills that have not appeared there. I report first the bill (H. R. 12324) for the establishment of a light-house station on St. Catharine Island, State of Georgia, with amendments.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce were, in line 3, after the word "that," to strike out:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to establish.

And insert:

The sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the establishment and erection of.

And in line 6, after the word "eligible," to strike out "at a cost not to exceed $20,000;" so as to make the bill read:

That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the establishment and erection of a light-house station on St. Catharine Island, State of Georgia, at the point which the Light-House Board may select as the most eligible.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PALMER, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

Mr. FRYE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 12430) providing for the establishment of the light and fog-signal at Humboldt, Cal., upon a more secure site, and for the establishment of a light-ship at or near the wreck of the steam-ship Oregon, in New York Harbor.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the establishment upon a more secure site of the light and fog-signal at Humboldt, Cal.; and that the sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the establishment of a light-ship, with a steam fog-signal, in the vicinity of the wreck of the steam-ship Oregon, entrance to New York Harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to extend the limits of the present port of Memphis, Tenn., from Beale street southward to Jackson street, and to extend the east line southward until it intersects Jackson street.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I report from the Committee on Commerce favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11216) to authorize the Union Gas Company to lay conduit pipes across the Ohio River.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to give the assent of Congress to the Union Gas Company to lay pipes for conducting natural gas, petroleum, or salt water across the Ohio River at such points as may be deemed necessary, between the mouth of Buck Creek, in Harrison County, Indiana, and the city of Jeffersonville, Ind., and points opposite thereto in the State of Kentucky, from any point in that State to the upper boundary of the city of Louisville, Ky.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I report from the Committee on Commerce favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11643) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at mouth of Coquille River, Oregon.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $8,000 for the purpose of establishing a life-saving station and providing a life-saving crew at mouth of Coquille River, in Coos County, in the State of Oregon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CRIB IN LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. FRYE. I report favorably from the Committee on Commerce, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11901) to authorize the city of Lake View, Ill., to erect a crib in Lake Michigan for water-works purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to give the consent of Congress to the city of Lake View, county of Cook and State of Illinois, to extend a tunnel, or inlet pipes, into Lake Michigan as far as may be deemed necessary to insure a supply of pure water, and to erect a pier or piers and crib in the navigable waters of the lake, for the making, preserving, and working of the aqueducts or pipes or tunnel, the plan and location thereof to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMER GEORGE H. PARKER.

Mr. FRYE. I report favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (H. R. 7028) to admit to registry the steamer George H. Parker.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce returns thanks to the Senate for its courtesy.

DIAMOND SHOAL LIGHT-HOUSE.

Mr. RANSOM. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1283) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina, to recommend that the Senate concur in the amendments.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That a light-house be established on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina, at a cost not to exceed $500,000: Provided, That the contractors for doing this work shall be the lowest responsible bidders and best fitted by reason of skill and experience to do the work: And provided further, That payments shall be made therefor as the work progresses, in the discretion of the Light-House Board, and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the erection of a light-house on or near Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

EDWIN W. WARNER—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill No. 3561, entitled "An act granting a pension to Edwin W. Warner."

A claim for pension on behalf of the beneficiary named in this bill was filed in the Pension Bureau May 6, 1867; it has been examined and re-examined and always rejected until on the 29th day of December, 1888, as the result of a personal and thorough investigation by the Commissioner, a pension was allowed and a certificate issued under which the claimant will be paid $18 a month hereafter, and arrearages amounting to something near $2,000.

As the special act for the benefit of this claimant was passed by the Congress upon the supposition that nothing had been done for the beneficiary therein named, I deem it best, in his interest and probably consistent with the intent of the Congress, that the bill herewith returned should not become a law.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 25, 1889.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12485) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill, and accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. FARWELL, and Mr. CALL were appointed.

RAILWAYS THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. DAWES. I submit two conference reports, which do not require any action on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be read.

The reports were read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6612) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

H. L. DAWES,
JAMES K. JONES,
FRANCIS B. STOCKBRIDGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. W. PEEL,
B. W. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7186) to authorize the Leavenworth and Rio Grande Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

H. L. DAWES,
JAMES K. JONES,
FRANCIS B. STOCKBRIDGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. W. PEEL,
B. W. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports do not require any action by the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION AND ARID LANDS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. STEWART February 21, 1889, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, appointed under authority of a resolution of the Senate of February 14, 1889, is hereby authorized, in pursuing the investigation in said resolution ordered, to hold its sessions and take testimony at any place in the United States, and to employ a stenographer and a messenger, the expenses of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. The committee is also authorized to cause its proceedings and the testimony taken before it to be printed from time to time as it may see fit, exclusively for its use. Any subcommittee appointed by said committee may exercise the same powers as the full committee.

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] January 25, 1889, relating to an investigation by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed, either by full committee or such subcommittee as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, to continue during the recess of Congress the investigation authorized by the resolution of March 1, 1887, with the authority and in the manner and to the extent provided in said resolution, and also to visit any reservations, bands, or bodies of Indians under the jurisdiction of the United States to which, in the opinion of said committee, it may be necessary to extend their investigations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was to add to the resolution:

And the expenses of said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE introduced a bill (S. 3993) to amend section 1963 of the Revised Statutes, and to provide for the better protection of the fur-seals and salmon fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3994) for the relief of the estate of Salmon B. Colby; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL and Mr. COLQUITT submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TURPIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee to Examine the several Branches of the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

CHEROKEE LEASES.

Mr. FARWELL. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish the Senate, without delay, any information in his Department touching the bribery of the Cherokee Council, by the use of whisky and money, by cattlemen and their agents, for the purposes of obtaining leases and renewal of leases of lands of the Cherokee Nation, and especially to transmit to the Senate a copy of the report of Special Agent Owens touching such alleged bribery.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois to strike out the words "by the use of whisky and money." That phrase seems to be rather undignified, and it is unnecessary.

Mr. FARWELL. I have no objection to that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois modifies the resolution by omitting the words indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the question is on agreeing to the same as modified.

The resolution was agreed to.

LAND OFFICES.

Mr. SABIN submitted the following resolutions, which were read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to report for the information of the Senate, what, if any, action has been taken by him towards the discontinuance of United States land offices, the number and the names of public land offices, the aggregate number of acres of public land in each original, the number of acres heretofore actually sold by the Government, and in what manner disposed of, whether by sale for cash or entries under the homestead, pre-emption, timber-culture, or desert-land acts, and what part of the same have been actually patented, and thus segregated from the body of the public lands.

And be it further resolved, That the President be, and hereby is, requested to withhold the order, if any is contemplated, or suspend its operation if made, for the discontinuance of such offices, until the facts and reasons upon which such action, or contemplated action, is based shall have been fully communicated to the Senate.

Mr. SABIN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolutions be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be printed and lie over under the rules.

CONDITION OF MARINI'S BUILDING.

Mr. PLATT. If this be the proper time I should like to move to refer to a committee a communication which lies on the table. On the 22d of February the commissioners of the District transmitted their reply to a resolution which I offered on the 1st of February relative to the condition of Marini's building. I move that their communication be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to this subject.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGES IN DISTRICT EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. CHANDLER. There has been referred to the Select Committee to Examine into the Condition of the Civil Service a letter from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, dated February 20, in reference to changes in District employés, which was so referred without being printed. I move that the communication be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

IRENE RUCKER SHERIDAN.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which it declined to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of General P. H. Sheridan, and also to reconsider the vote by which a committee of conference was asked, with a view to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" and at the end of the bill to strike out the words "during her natural life, from and after the 5th day of August, 1888," and insert "subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of Philip H. Sheridan, late General of the Army of the United States, and pay her at the rate of $2,500 per year, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The amendments were concurred in.

SIOUX RESERVATION.

Mr. DAWES. I ask leave of the Senate to report, with amendments, for action at this time, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, the bill (H. R. 11970) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the Senate now proceed to consider the bill, which can be done only by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and will be read at length.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs, while the bill is being read, may be acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs may be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the text of the bill. The Chair hears no objection.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 1, line 11, after the words "mouth of," to strike out "Battle" and insert "Rapid;" and in line 12, after the word "thence," to strike out "due east to White River; thence down White River to the mouth of Black Pipe Creek on White River" and insert "in an easterly direction along the northern edge of the bad lands to the mouth of Pass Creek on White River; thence up Pass Creek southerly to the source of its principal branch;" so as to read:

That the following tract of land, being a part of the great reservation of the Sioux Nation in the Territory of Dakota, is hereby set apart for a permanent reservation for the Indians receiving rations and annuities at the Pine Ridge agency, in the Territory of Dakota, namely: Beginning at the intersection of the one hundred and third meridian of longitude with the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska; thence north along said meridian to the South Fork of Cheyenne River, and down said stream to the mouth of Rapid Creek; thence in an easterly direction along the northern edge of the bad lands to the mouth of Pass Creek on White River; thence up Pass Creek southerly to the source of its principal branch.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 8, after the word "point," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That the following tract of land, being a part of the said great reservation of the Sioux Nation, in the Territory of Dakota, is hereby set apart for a permanent reservation for the Indians receiving rations and annuities at the Standing Rock agency, in the said Territory of Dakota, namely: Beginning at a point in the center of the main channel of the Missouri River opposite the mouth of Cannon Ball River; thence down said center of the main channel to a point 10 miles north of the mouth of the Moreau River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 2, after the word "Nebraska," to insert "not having already taken allotments;" so as to read:

SEC. 7. That each member of the Santee Sioux tribe of Indians now occupying a reservation in the State of Nebraska not having already taken allotments shall be entitled to allotments upon said reserve in Nebraska as follows.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, beginning with line 1, to strike out:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to cause a patent to issue for each of the reservations established by this act to the respective tribes to whom they are set apart. Each of said patents shall be recorded in the General Land Office and the Indian Bureau, and shall be delivered to and placed in charge of some person designated therefor, on the reservation affected thereby, for inspection and use at all times to any one interested therein, which patent shall not, however, operate as a grant to any individual Indian.

And in line 16, after the word "treaty," to strike out "of eighteen hundred and sixty-three, which requires the consent of three-fourths of the adult males of the tribe," and insert "or statute under which such reservation is held;" so as to read:

SEC. 12. That at any time after lands have been allotted to all the Indians of any tribe as herein provided, or sooner, if in the opinion of the President it shall be for the best interests of said tribe, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with such Indian tribe for the purchase and release by said tribe, in conformity with the treaty or statute under which such reservation is held, of such portions of its reservation not allotted as such tribe shall, from time to time, consent to sell, on such terms and conditions as shall be considered just and equitable between the United States and said tribe of Indians, which purchase shall not be complete until ratified by Congress.

The next amendment was, in section 16, line 1, to strike out as follows:

That upon the passage and approval of this act all titles and interest on the part of the Indians receiving rations and annuities on each of the said separate reservations to the lands described in each of the other separate reservations so created shall be released and extinguished, and this act shall confirm and ratify in the Indians entitled to receive rations at each of said separate reservations, respectively, to their separate and exclusive use and benefit, all the title and interest of every name and nature secured therein to the different bands of the Sioux Nation by said treaty of April 29, 1868.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the acceptance of this act by the Indians in manner and form as required by the said treaty concluded between the different bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians and the United States April 29, 1868, and proclaimed by the President February 24, 1869, as hereinafter provided, shall be taken and held to be a release of all title on the part of the Indians receiving rations and annuities on each of the said separate reservations to the lands described in each of the other separate reservations so created, and shall be held to confirm in the Indians entitled to receive rations at each of said separate reservations, respectively, to their separate and exclusive use and benefit, all the title and interest of every name and nature secured therein to the different bands of the Sioux Nation by said treaty of April 29, 1868.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, line 39, after the word "agreements," to strike out "with so much land as may be necessary for station and depot purposes not to exceed 10 acres" and insert "with not to exceed 20 acres of land in addition to the right of way, for stations for every 10 miles of road;" so as to read:

This release shall not affect the title of any individual Indian to his separate allotment on land not included in any of said separate reservations provided for in this act, which title is hereby confirmed, nor any agreement heretofore made with the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad Company or the Dakota Central Railroad Company for a right of way through said reservation; and for any lands acquired by any such agreement to be used in connection therewith, except as hereinafter provided; but the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company and the Dakota Central Railroad Company shall, respectively, have the right to take and use, prior to any white person, and to any corporation, the right of way provided for in said agreements, with not to exceed 20 acres of land in addition to the right of way, for stations for every 10 miles of road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, line 52, after the word "decided," to insert "to have been agreed upon and paid for by said railroad, and;" so as to read:

Also, the former company so much of the 188 acres, and the latter company so much of the 75 acres, on the east side of the Missouri River, likewise embraced in said agreement, as the Secretary of the Interior shall decide to have been agreed upon by said railroad, and to be reasonably necessary upon each side of said river for approaches to the bridge of each of said companies to be constructed across the river, for right of way, side-track, depot and station privileges, machine-shop, freight-house, round-house, and yard facilities, and no more.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, line 69, after the word "including," to insert "stock-yards, warehouses, elevators;" and in line 70, after the word "railways," to insert:

But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any such railroad company from building upon such land houses for the accommodation or residence of their employés, or leasing grounds contiguous to its tracks for warehouse or elevator purposes connected with said railways.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the said railway companies shall have made the payments according to the terms of said agreements for each mile of right of way and each acre of land for railway purposes which said companies take and use under the provisions of this act, and shall satisfy the Secretary of the Interior to that effect: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be sold or conveyed except by way of sale of, or mortgage of, the railway itself. Nor shall any of said lands be used directly or indirectly for town-site purposes, it being the intention hereof that said lands shall be held for general railway uses and purposes only, including stock-yards, warehouses, elevators, terminal and other facilities of and for said railways; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any such railroad company from building upon such lands houses for the accommodation or residence for their employés, or leasing grounds contiguous to its tracks for warehouse or elevator purposes connected with said railways.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty;" and in line 24, after the word "cash," to insert "to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in aiding such Indian to erect a house and other buildings suitable for residence or the improvement of his allotment;" so as to read:

Provided, That each head of family or single person over the age of eighteen years, who shall have or may hereafter take his or her allotment of land in severalty, shall be provided with two milch cows, one pair of oxen, with yoke and chain, or two mares and one set of harness in lieu of said oxen, yoke, and chain, as the Secretary of the Interior may deem advisable, and they shall also receive one plow, one wagon, one harrow, one hoe, one ax, and one pitchfork, all suitable to the work they may have to do, and also $50 in cash, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in aiding such Indian to erect a house and other buildings suitable for residence or the improvement of his allotment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 41, section 17, page 22.

Mr. DAWES. In section 17, line 41, before the word "millions," I move to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

And in addition thereto there shall be set apart, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000,000, which said sum shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sioux Nation of Indians as a permanent fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 17, line 56, after "self-support," to insert:

And the Santee Sioux, the Flandreau Sioux, and the Ponca Indians shall be included in the benefits of said permanent fund, as provided in sections 7 and 13 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, line 70, after word "act," to strike out:

One-third of the permanent fund of said Indians then on hand shall be retained for the support of free public schools for said Indians, and the other two-thirds to be distributed per capita between said Indians—

And insert:

Said fund shall be expended for the purpose of promoting education, civilization, and self-support among said Indians, or otherwise distributed among them as Congress shall from time to time thereafter determine—

So as to read:

And at the end of fifty years from the passage of this act, said fund shall be expended for the purpose of promoting education, civilization, and self-support among said Indians, or otherwise distributed among them as Congress shall from time to time thereafter determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 18, line 20, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "fifty" and insert "one dollar and twenty-five;" so as to read:

And for the purpose of such educational or missionary work any such society may purchase, upon any of the reservations herein created, any land not exceeding in any one tract 160 acres, not interfering with the title in severalty of any Indian, and with the approval of and upon such terms, not exceeding $1.25 an acre, as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 21, line 18, after the word "sums," to strike out:

Provided, That all lands undisposed of under this act at the expiration of ten years from the taking effect of this act shall be paid for by the United States at 50 cents per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 21, line 45, after the word "survey," to strike out, as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to reserve on any public land embraced in this act town sites for any existing or prospective town, city, or village, in area not exceeding 640 acres each, in compact form, or such additional area in governmental subdivisions as may be wholly or in part occupied as a town, city, or village site; and no application to enter any land shall be allowed until approved by the Secretary of the Interior of any tract of land, first, where any exterior line of the land is within one-half mile of the line of any railroad which is constructed or of the line of any railroad not constructed but where its map of location shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior at the date of the application to enter; or, second, of any tract of land upon which at the date of the application to enter is a town or village settlement; and no settlement in advance of survey by proper authority shall give any right as against the power to reserve town sites hereby given; it being the object of this provision to secure to the inhabitants of all towns, cities, and villages in said Territory the benefits and profits arising from the sale of lots therein; and to that end where town sites shall be located upon any public lands opened by this act, the provisions of Chapter 8, Title XXXII, Revised Statutes, entitled "Reservation and sale of town sites on the public lands," shall apply except as otherwise provided herein. The Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lots in any sites now existing or to be located to be offered, sold, and conveyed as provided in sections 2382 and 2383 of the Revised Statutes. The money so received from the sale of lots in each town site, less such amount as shall be required to be paid to the Indians as provided in this act, shall be held by the Secretary of the Interior as a separate school-fund for the benefit of the inhabitants of such towns, and shall be expended under his direction for the erection of school buildings on any lot not sold and the support of public schools therein. This control of sites and proceeds of sales shall continue only until the legal incorporation of the respective towns, cities, or villages, when the title to the unsold portion of such sites shall vest in the municipality and the proceeds thereof, as well as any balance in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid over to the local authorities, all to be devoted to public purposes within the corporate limits. All needed regulations to carry out the details hereof not provided to be provided by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That all surveys of town sites on the lands embraced in this act shall contain reservations for parks of substantially equal area, if more than one park, and other public purposes, embracing in the aggregate not less than 10 nor more than 20 acres; but no deduction shall be allowed on this account in the amount to be paid for said town sites as provided in this section; and patents for such reservations, to be maintained for such public purposes, shall be issued to the towns respectively, when organized as municipalities.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 24, line 11, after the words "sum of," to strike out "fifty" and insert "one dollar and twenty-five;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That the United States shall pay to said Indians, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1.25 per acre for all lands reserved under the provisions of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 26, line 2, after the word "act," to strike out "to" and insert "shall;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 26. That all expenses for the surveying, platting, and disposal of the lands opened to settlement under this act shall be borne by the United States, and not deducted from the proceeds of said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after section 26, to insert as section 27 the following:

SEC. 27. That the sum of $28,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay to such individual Indians of the Red Cloud and Red Leaf bands of Sioux as he shall ascertain to have been deprived by the authority of the United States of ponies in the year 1876, at the rate of $40 for each pony; and he is hereby authorized to employ such agent or agents as he may deem necessary in ascertaining such facts as will enable him to carry out this provision, and to pay them therefor such sums as shall be deemed by him fair and just compensation: Provided, That the sum paid to each individual Indian under this provision shall be taken and accepted by such Indian in full compensation for all loss sustained by such Indian in consequence of the taking from him of ponies as aforesaid: And provided further, That if any Indian entitled to such compensation shall have deceased, the sum to which such Indian would be entitled shall be paid to his heirs at law, according to the laws of the Territory of Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after section 28, to insert the following as section 29:

SEC. 29. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, which sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for procuring the assent of the Sioux Indians to this act provided in section 27.

Mr. DAWES. I move, in line 3, after the words "twenty-five thousand dollars," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as section 30 the following:

SEC. 30. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. One moment. I inquire if all the amendments have been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). All the committee amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge if the description on page 2, section 1, of the bill, the area or tract in Northwestern Nebraska to be embraced within the limits of the reservation under this bill, is an enlargement of the area embraced within the limits of the reservation at the present time, or is it the same? Is the area here described the same as that already in the reservation?

Mr. DAWES. Precisely the same, unless the committee made a mistake.

Mr. PADDOCK. The intention was not to enlarge the reservation at a further expense to Nebraska?

Mr. DAWES. The provision for its reversion to Nebraska is precisely the same as in former laws.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to this bill and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

Mr. BOWEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3894) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying the same into effect.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BOWEN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of the Indians attached to the agreement may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move that the doors be closed and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BOWEN. I hope the Senator will allow the reading to be concluded and the bill acted upon.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am willing to allow the bill to be disposed of if it will not take too long. Eulogies have to be pronounced; the Senate ought to understand that; and I wish to have a matter disposed of before they begin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Virginia to withhold his motion for the present?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to insert as section 2 the following:

SEC. 2. That all lands adapted to agriculture, with or without irrigation, so sold or released to the United States under said agreement shall be held by the United States for the sole purpose of securing homes to actual settlers, and shall be disposed of by the United States to actual and bona-fide settlers only in tracts not exceeding 160 acres to any one person, on such terms as Congress shall prescribe, subject to grants which Congress may make in aid of education: And provided further, That no patents shall issue therefor except to the person so taking the same as and for a homestead, or his heirs, and after the expiration of five years' occupancy thereof as such homestead; and any conveyance of said lands so taken as a homestead, or any contract touching the same, or lien thereon, created prior to the date of such patent, shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to insert as a separate section, on page 43, what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That Article X of the treaty and agreement herein proposed to be ratified shall be construed as validating the claims of all persons upon any of the lands the subject of the same——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the pardon of the Chief Clerk. He is reading that very carelessly. I do not understand that thing, and I wish he would read it over again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read from the beginning, and the Chair appeals to the Senate to be in order, so that the reading may be heard.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That Article X of the treaty and agreement herein proposed to be ratified shall be construed as validating the claims of all persons——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Right there I beg pardon. What does the Senator mean by "hereinbefore?"

Mr. PLUMB. "Hereinbefore" is the opposite of "hereinafter."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should like to know the difference between "hereinbefore" and "hereinafter."

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator can get a dictionary by applying to the Secretary.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I find that I can not get a dictionary by application to a United States Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. No, sir; I beg pardon. I want to know what that means, and I think it becomes the Senator from Kansas to say whether he means hereinbefore the treaty of 1842. I think it proper that he should answer me respectfully.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I call for the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That Article X of the treaty and agreement herein proposed to be ratified shall be construed as validating the claims of all persons upon any lands the subject of the same which may have been entered upon or improved with the view of their entry under the mining or other land laws of the United States, and all such claims may be prosecuted to final entry under the provisions of the proper existing statute as though said agreement had not been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on this amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I dislike very much to throw any obstacle in the way of this agreement, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the purport of the amendment now offered. Here is an agreement which has been entered into by commissioners appointed by the United States with certain Indians by which, upon certain conditions, they surrendered their lands in Colorado for certain other lands in Utah. Without going into the merits of the agreement, it is before us, and now having been agreed upon by the Indians and the United States the amendment proposes to enact that it means so and so. I do not think that, whether that be correct or not, it would look very well upon the statute-book. I say let the agreement stand for itself. But because peradventure one party who made this agreement did not understand it so for us the moment we turn our backs upon the party with whom we made this agreement to enact our construction of it without consulting them, I for one do not like.

I do not wish to discuss the question whether this bill puts a different meaning upon it from what I should put upon it; but the question is whether it puts a different meaning upon this agreement from that which one of the contracting parties puts upon it, and it is not for me to say what that contracting party understood by it.

Mr. COCKRELL. To which amendment does the Senator refer, the one reported by the committee or the amendment of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. DAWES. The tenth article attempts to provide for certain claims upon the land which is now proposed to be set apart for these Indians. There are certain claims upon this land. The commission report that claims to the amount of $87,232.28 were made upon this land before they left it. Without doubt a great many of these are swollen claims; without doubt they are not legal claims; but whether these are good claims or bad claims, extravagant or reasonable, no man here can tell.

There are certain cattle-men upon the land who have some sort of claim, whether good or bad, to the water upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the resolution reported by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate alleged election outrages in certain States, upon which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] is entitled to the floor.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay aside the pending order in order that I may call up the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move that, or ask unanimous consent?

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask unanimous consent, to begin with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside to enable him to move the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. DANIEL. I had expected at this hour to-day to resume my remarks upon the resolution in regard to the investigation of elections in Louisiana, but I recognize the fact that the public business is of a more important character than that, and I am perfectly willing to enter my consent that it may be unanimous that the appropriation bill referred to by the Senator from Iowa may be taken up, with the understanding, which I suppose it is hardly necessary to state, that if either the Louisiana or the Texas resolution should at any time at this session be called up I may be recognized as entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the right of the Senator from Virginia to resume the floor when the consideration of the resolution is again proceeded with by the Senate. The title of the bill the consideration of which is moved by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12383) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. BOWEN. I ask the Senator from Iowa to give way in order that the bill which has been under consideration may be completed.

Mr. ALLISON. After the Army bill is before the Senate I will yield in order that the Ute bill may be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Iowa to yield for the consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield when the Army bill is taken up in order that the pending business may be disposed of, which is the Ute agreement bill, that I understand is nearly completed and will take but a few moments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill (H. R. 12383) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I consent that the Army appropriation bill may be informally laid aside that the bill called up by the Senator from Colorado may be proceeded with.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (S. 3894) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying the same into effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. DAWES. When interrupted at 2 o'clock I was going on to say that the article is not very clear, and the Senator from Kansas is desiring to make it clear. In so making it he, in my opinion, trenches upon the first idea of justice and right between two contracting parties. He should not, behind the back of one of these parties, undertake to make it clear as he understands it.

Now I want to call attention to two or three features of the bill which make it apparent to me that we should, if we adopt this agreement at all, take it just as it is.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that these Indians are giving up a million acres of land, 300,000 acres of which the commission report is exceedingly excellent, exceedingly good farming land, and they are moving across the line into Utah and taking 3 acres for 1 in which there is no farming land. My opinion is that they ought to be removed, that the conditions in which they are in their present location render it necessary for them to be removed; but I do not think they ought to be removed upon this land unless one or two things are perfectly certain. It can be put to no use by them except as grazing land, and the commission report that there is no water upon this land except in a certain quarter and that that water would be sufficient for their purpose provided they could command it.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will state to him that there is a large strip of country upon the San Juan River that is better farming land and where there is more water than on any portion of their present reservation.

Mr. DAWES. Of course I do not know anything about it, but I take the commission's report in relation to it, and they say they went all over it, and they say that unless these Indians can have the water they are in a helpless condition over there.

There are cattle-men over there who have some sort of occupation of this land. There are very queer laws, as they seem to us Eastern men, about the appropriation of the water of the streams in that new country. That man who first takes possession of the water can appropriate the whole of it without regard to any riparian proprietor below him. If these cattle-men have any such title as that to this land, the Indians would be put upon a desert, leaving good farming land. It was not the intention of the commission and it was not the intention of the committee to put them in any such position.

I should like in that connection for the Secretary to read the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Kansas which declares that the agreement means so and so. If the Secretary will read it, I ask the Senate to listen to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 5. That Article X of the treaty and agreement herein proposed to be ratified shall be construed as validating the claims of all persons upon any of the lands the subject of the same which may have been entered upon or improved with the view of their entry under the mining or other land laws of the United States, and all such claims may be prosecuted to final entry under the provisions of the proper existing statute as though said agreement had not been made.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senate fully understands that, if you enact that section, so far as the United States can enact what this agreement means, when cattle-men have got possession of that water, we put these Indians upon land that is wholly useless to them, because they can not have water upon it.

Mr. PLUMB. Article X of this agreement I think was designed to accomplish exactly what my amendment accomplishes. On the first reading of it I thought myself it did exactly what the article would do as construed by my amendment. I have no doubt that both the commissioners and the Indians intended it should have exactly that construction. But when once this treaty has been ratified it will be committed to the construction of the Interior Department, and the doubt I have in regard to the construction on a more careful reading of the article has grown out of the fact that there was an apparent separation of persons who were entitled to recognition on account of settlement on these lands. I feared there might be a junction of phrases whereby all the designations that go to the indication of right would apply to all.

This tenth article provides that all persons who have no legal right to remain thereon shall be removed.

But if there are any person or persons who have obtained title or claim of title, by virtue of entries made under an act of Congress dated March 3, A. D. 1877, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," or under any other act of Congress.

That relates to something that has been done which under the contemplation of the general land laws amounts to an entry of lands. That, according to the construction which has always been put upon the settlement laws of the United States, means not only the entering upon the land, but the filing of a paper in the Land Office describing the land and setting out the character of the entry which is contemplated. This land, not having been surveyed, has not been the subject of entry according to the technical phrase, but the commissioners and the Indians themselves saw the land which is the subject of this agreement and must have witnessed these persons upon the land and the character of the improvements, and so on, and had them in contemplation. I have no doubt that the last clause of this article was intended to cover them, because it says:

Or under any other act of Congress and now have rights or titles which are legal and binding on the United States, then and in that case such person or persons and all their rights, titles, and claims are hereby excepted, exempted, and reserved from the effects of this treaty.

I simply want to make that clear. There are persons on that land who reside in my own State who have gone there for the purpose of making mining entries on the same, who have constructed mining ditches, and who have put up mining machinery, and they did it under the general invitation contained in the Revised Statutes which invites all citizens of the United States to enter upon the mineral lands of the Government for the purposes of exploration and entry. They are therefore entitled to protection.

If that were all, I might concede that the objection the Senator from Massachusetts makes would be effectual and that they were not in contemplation; and of course it would not be fair to put them into the excepted classes in this bill; but I believe, by reason of the fact that they are there, that they must have been seen, and that they themselves must have been witnessed by both the Indians and the commissioners, that they were intended to be covered by this article; and I do not want them turned out by the possible construction which may be put upon it by some Secretary of the Interior who may have to administer it. All I want is that while the Indians are to go there by what I regard as an exceedingly good bargain for them, they may have the lands which have not already become the subject of initiative proceedings by persons desiring or expecting to acquire title under the general land laws of the United States. I can not conceive that there can be any possible objection to the amendment.

I admit, looking the treaty over, if it were not one of great importance to the people of the State of Colorado I should oppose it. It is a bungling piece of work, and the phraseology in it shows that the commissioners entirely misconceived their functions. They speak of this as a "treaty," when if they had read the Revised Statutes, as they should have done, they would have known that treaties, as such, with Indians are absolutely prohibited. It also provides in Article II:

That the improvements now on the Southern Ute reservation in La Plata County, Colorado, and now occupied by said Southern Ute Indians, be appraised and sold to the highest and best bidder, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. It is also agreed that when said improvements are sold the Indians owning the same shall be paid the valuation price of said improvement.

Not the selling price, and no arrangement is made for their appraisal. It leaves the question open as to whether they are to have the price at which some one may value them ex parte, or whether it shall be the price at which the improvements are sold.

That is the necessary penalty we pay for employing men of inferior intelligence to make agreements with Indians. The Indians no doubt were a great deal smarter than the commissioners were, because they have overreached them in every degree. Out of this general wreck I want to save the rights of the people whom the United States has invited to go upon these lands and who have made improvements upon them in contemplation of the acquisition of title to which they are in equity, if not in law, entitled.

Mr. TELLER. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas, in my judgment, means no more and no less than the agreement made with the Indians. It certainly means no more than the Indians understood as to what the agreement was, and I do not myself see any objection to it. I do not think it is any infringement upon the agreement or any violation of it in the slightest degree; and knowing something about the Indians in this matter, I think they will be very glad to accept this agreement. They have been anxious to leave this strip of land and go over into that country and were only kept from going by the opposition of the agent some two or three years ago. They are amply protected in the bill, and it is largely to their interest, as it is to the interests of everybody in that section of country, that they should go.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Colorado know that I do not desire to interfere with the removal, because I think the Indians must be removed, and if there was nothing in this amendment that reached beyond the mining interests that the Senator from Kansas speaks of, I would not care anything about it, because those mining interests there would not be of any great value.

But, if there be some inchoate claim upon the water there which has not developed into record, but may hereafter be developed into a claim, I think that ought to give way to the Indians because it is a right, if any at all, which a man makes before land is open to settlement at his own risk. It is always regarded, I know, when the land is opened to settlement, not because we are obliged in law to do so, but because we think that is fair treatment of those people. But if we go on and sell this land to the Indians with no apparent claim upon the water, a claim which can be developed into a record, I want to see that the Indians can have water there because they will be in a destitute condition upon that land if the water is appropriated by others.

If the Senator desires only to protect the mining and such kind of interests and will change the phraseology of his amendment so as to leave the water there beyond the reach of any lurking claim, I shall not say anything against it, although I do not like to make an agreement with anybody and then turn around and say, "This is the meaning of my agreement;" but if the Senator will fix the amendment so that the water may be left for the Indians I shall acquiesce.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that there is no trouble about the water. These people do not want the water. That is not what they are after.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. I understand him to say that he is indifferent as to the mining claims, and that the people intended to be protected by this amendment are people who have gone on the lands while they were part of an Indian reservation.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no.

Mr. DAWES. They are unsurveyed public lands in the Territory of Utah.

Mr. DOLPH. What is the object, then, of any present legislation?

Mr. DAWES. To make a new reservation.

Mr. PLUMB. I will modify the amendment.

Mr. BOWEN. Let the amendment be read as the Senator from Kansas has modified it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed new section as modified, as follows:

SEC. 3. That Article X of the treaty and agreement herein proposed to be ratified shall be construed as validating the claims of all persons upon any of the lands the subject of the same which may have been entered upon or improved with the view of their entry under the mining laws of the United States, and all such claims may be prosecuted to final entry under the provisions of the proper existing statute as though said agreement had not been made.

Mr. DAWES. I make no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he is not willing to temporarily lay aside the appropriation bill for a minute or two that I may call up the House bill No. 10614, to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes. I think it will not take very long. It is an important bill and ought to be, in my judgment, passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I have been told that that bill will lead to considerable debate. It is important that the appropriation bills should be disposed of, and in the intervals between them we can be occupied with important bills, such as that suggested by the Senator from Illinois; but I do not think I can yield at this moment.

Mr. CULLOM. I will inquire of the Senator if he has any judgment how long it will take to pass the appropriation bill now before the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we may pass it before 3 o'clock.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to give notice now that immediately after the passage of this bill, unless interfered with by an arrangement that I understand has been made for the afternoon, I shall move to take up the Oklahoma bill and press it to a vote.

PROHIBITORY CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he will not give way to a measure which will not take time any further than the reading of the measure and perhaps the reading of the report; and that is Order of Business 1768, being a joint resolution proposing an amendment of the Constitution of the United States in relation to the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of alcoholic liquors.

As this resolution has been pending many years, and has been reported at least in two Congresses and no action has been had upon it, I desire to move its consideration and allow the report to be read and a vote taken. I do not care to enter upon discussion unless the Senate should desire to do so; but I am anxious to have action of some kind. The Senator will see that this will occupy a very brief period of time. I ask him to give way for that purpose.

I will say further, that if discussion results from the taking up of the measure, I shall withdraw it if the Senator desires me to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator that the Army appropriation bill is the most pressing matter now before the Senate. The matter which the Senator has in hand, and which ought to be taken up as soon as possible, can be taken up after the Army bill is disposed of. Therefore, with every disposition to accommodate the Senator from New Hampshire, I must decline to yield.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator bases his action, as I understand him, upon a question of fact, supposing the Army bill to be more important than this measure. I beg leave to differ with the Senator and join issue with him upon the question of fact.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not discuss the question of fact. I did not say it was more important, but it is necessary that the appropriation bills shall pass in order that the Government may go on, and these other measures can have their day at any time after the appropriation bills have been disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. Knowing that the Senator is friendly to the measure, I will not press it any further now, but give notice that I shall move it at every convenient and proper opportunity until I secure action upon it.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, when it is his intention to call up the bill (H. R. 8990) to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations? This is a most important bill.

Mr. DAWES. I have made the request of the Senate on two or three occasions for permission to consider that bill. I agree with the Senator that it is a bill of great importance to a large section of this country. It has passed the House of Representatives and has been under consideration in the Committee on Indian Affairs and has been amended and upon the Calendar for some time. I have been constantly urging its consideration. I can only assure the Senator that I shall take every possible opportunity to call the attention of the Senate to that bill for action, and I invoke the aid of the Senator and all those interested in the bill in reaching its early consideration by the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish the Senator would now give notice to the Senate that immediately after the Army appropriation bill is disposed of, if the state of the business of the Senate will permit, he will call up the bill for consideration, in order that it may be perfected and passed yet during the present session.

Mr. DAWES. I shall most certainly ask the early action of the Senate upon it.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1721) establishing a customs-collection district in Florida, to be known as the collection district of Tampa, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3285) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tensas River, at or near Daniel's Ferry, Louisiana;

A bill (3560) for the relief of William S. Rosecrans; and

A bill (H. R. 1659) to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill moved by the Senator from Iowa is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12383) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as they are reached in the reading of the text of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations will be considered as they are reached in the reading of the text of the bill, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand that the reading of the bill has been dispensed with?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request was that as the bill is read the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations be acted on as they are reached, to which the Chair hears no objection.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "miscellaneous," on page 6, line 3, after the word "surgeons," to insert "for pay of;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay and traveling expenses of not exceeding fifty contract surgeons, for pay of not exceeding one hundred and sixty hospital matrons, and not exceeding fourteen veterinary surgeons; in all, $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 16, before the word "witnesses," to strike out "citizen clerks and;" and in line 17, after the word "courts-martial," to strike out "military commissions;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of witnesses attending upon courts-martial and courts of inquiry, $7,595.73.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, to strike out the clause from line 14 to line 16, inclusive, as follows:

For a riding and training master for the more thorough instruction of officers and cadets, a sum not exceeding $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 6, after the word "That," to strike out "hereafter;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of horses for the cavalry and artillery, and for the Indian scouts, and for such infantry as may be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, $132,000: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number on hand, shall not at any time exceed the number of enlisted men and Indian scouts in the mounted service; and that no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract, after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster's Department, and an inspection by such department, all under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask consent to make a motion which will tend to facilitate the progress of another appropriation bill. I move that the bill (H. R. 12485) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, be printed with the Senate amendments numbered, so that it may be in convenient form for the use of the conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The Senator from Kansas moves that the agricultural appropriation bill be printed with the Senate amendments numbered.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARY T. DUNCAN.

Mr. SPOONER. Now that the reading of this Army bill has been interrupted, I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for a moment to call up a bill which I am certain will take no time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator reluctantly, if his bill leads to no debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin that the bill under consideration be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. ALLISON. If it takes any time I shall call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. The bill is Calendar No. 2604.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 325) for the relief of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "eleven" and insert "eight;" in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "seventy-six;" in the same line, before the word "cents," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "five;" in line 8, after the word "property," to strike out "and damage thereto;" and in line 9, after the word "covered," to strike out "in" and insert "into;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Blanton Duncan, trustee of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan, of Louisville, Ky., the sum of $8,176.05, for the use and occupation of her property during the war, and for moneys covered into the Treasury of the United States from rents of property belonging to the said Mrs. Duncan which were seized and held by the United States Government.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PASCO, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. MITCHELL were appointed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12383) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUTLER. Will not my amiable friend from Iowa yield to me just one moment to get a bill through?

Mr. ALLISON. I regret to say I can not. I promised the other day to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin and failed to keep my promise, and I am redeeming now my promise to him with reluctance.

Mr. BUTLER. Will not the Senator make a promise of that kind to me?

Mr. ALLISON. At some future time I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BURNES.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, communicated to the Senate the resolutions of that body commemorative of the life and services of the Hon. James N. Burnes, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the resolution just received from the House of Representatives be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH). The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. James N. Burnes, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities and distinguished public services, the House at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. James Nelson Burnes, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Missouri, and tenders to the family of the deceased the assurance of sympathy in their sad bereavement.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended that opportunity may be given for fitting tributes to the memory of the deceased and to his eminent public and private virtues, and that as a further mark of respect the Senate, at the conclusion of such remarks, shall adjourn.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, it becomes our painful duty to pay the last sad tribute of respect, friendship, and honor to the memory of our late distinguished colleague in the House of Representatives, Hon. James Nelson Burnes.

His father, James Burnes, was born on February 14, 1779, near Fredericksburgh, in Spottsylvania County, Virginia, and was married on December 29, 1805, in Culpeper County, Virginia, and afterward removed to the State of Indiana, where James Nelson Burnes was born on August 22, 1827.

By the act of Congress approved June 7, 1836, it was provided—

That, when the Indian title to all lands lying between the State of Missouri and the Missouri River shall be extinguished, the jurisdiction over said lands shall be hereby ceded to the State of Missouri, and the western boundary of said State shall be then extended to the Missouri River, reserving to the United States the original right of soil in said lands, and of disposing of the same: Provided, That this act shall not take effect until the President shall, by proclamation, declare that the Indian title to said lands has been extinguished; nor shall it take effect until the State of Missouri shall have assented to the provisions of this act.

By a convention between the authorities of the United States and of the Sac and Fox tribe of Indians, held September 27, 1836, and proclaimed February 25, 1837, the Indian title was extinguished.

By an act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri of December 16, 1836, Missouri assented to the provisions of said act, and on March 28, 1837, the President of the United States, by proclamation, duly declared the Indians' title had been extinguished. And Missouri had assented to the provisions of said act, and thereby there was added to the State of Missouri a large tract of land unsurpassed in the whole United States in agricultural resources, in the fertility of its soil, the variety of its products, the healthfulness of its climate, and its topographical beauty. It was called the "Platte purchase," and was quickly settled.

To this "Platte purchase" James Burnes removed with his family from Indiana in 1837 and located in Platte County, where James Nelson Burnes was reared, and resided until 1872, when he removed to the city of St. Joseph, in the adjoining county of Buchanan, and resided there at the time of his death. He received the education then obtainable in the common or public schools of Missouri, and graduated from the Platte City high school, and then attended the Law School of Harvard College or University, and graduated therefrom in 1853, and then returned to Platte County and began the practice of his chosen life pursuit, the law.

In 1856 he became the circuit attorney in his judicial district, and was elected Presidential elector for his district, and with his co-electors cast the vote of Missouri for Buchanan and Breckinridge for President and Vice-President. In 1878 he became judge of the court of common pleas for his county and served as such until 1882.

In 1882 he was unanimously nominated for Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress by the Democratic Congressional convention, composed of delegates from the six counties of Andrew, Atchison, Buchanan, Holt, Nodaway, and Platte, into which the tract or district called the "Platte purchase" has been divided, and was elected by a handsome majority. He was in like manner renominated and reelected to the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses. He was appointed a member of the Committee on Appropriations in the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses by Mr. Speaker CARLISLE, and served with great efficiency and distinguished ability.

On the morning of January 23, 1889, in the absence of Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Colonel Burnes presided at the meeting of the committee, and upon its adjournment proceeded to the floor of the House, where about 3 o'clock p. m. he was stricken with paralysis whilst in the discharge of his official duties, and was accompanied by Hon. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH to the east front of the Capitol to get fresh air, and thence to the consultation room of the Appropriation Committee. He refused to have a physician called, and exerted all the wonderful powers of his giant-like physique and indomitable will to check and prevent the rapidly increasing and extending paralysis, of which he alone was sensible, and realizing all the while the hastening doom, said to General BUTTERWORTH: "Ben, it is hard to quit the battle now; I hate to leave the field now." His last sentence was: "I have much to do, and I hate to quit the battle now."

He was soon taken to his rooms at Willard's Hotel, and all that human skill and experience and friendly, loving hands could do was done, but to no avail. He soon became unconscious, and at forty-six minutes after 12 o'clock on the morning of January 24, 1889, quietly and peacefully passed to that bourne whence no traveler returns, and entered upon that sleep that knows no waking. The silver cord was loosed, the golden bowl broken, the pitcher broken at the fountain, the wheel broken at the cistern, and his dust returned to the earth as it was and his spirit "unto the God who gave it." How truly the language of Revelation is verified:

Ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away.
As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field. So he flourisheth. For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone, and the place thereof shall know it no more.

Truthfully did the poets write:

Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust,
And live we how we can, yet die we must.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour;
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Colonel Burnes inherited from a worthy father and good mother the richest legacy parents can transmit to children, a body and mind sound, healthful, and vigorous. He possessed a most wonderful physique, capable of very great activity, endurance, and constant labor. His mental powers were of the very highest order, quick, active, analytical, discriminating, and broad. His memory was retentive and his will imperiously strong. His voice was strong and pleasant; his manners and general bearing very agreeable and attractive. His personal presence in any assembly would attract attention and command respect.

As a lawyer he was well equipped and gained much reputation in his part of the State as an advocate, and in every capital case secured an acquittal for his client. In business and financial matters he was remarkably apt and displayed great executive and administrative abilities and was eminently successful, having accumulated a large fortune. He was the organizer and first president of the Weston and Atchison Railroad Company, the second road built in that section of country. He was the moving spirit in the building of the Chicago and South Western Railroad from Leavenworth, Kans., to Fairfield, Iowa, now forming part of the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific Railway system.

Largely by him and his efforts the construction of the bridges across the Missouri River at Leavenworth and Atchison, Kans., was secured. He was a member of the original town companies of Leavenworth and Atchison, Kans., and still interested in them when he died. He was president of the St. Joseph Water Works Company, and the principal stock-owner in the same, and also a large stock-holder in several important banks. His business aptitude, financial ability, and resources were severely tested in 1877. He was then principal security upon the official bond of Col. Elijah Gates, then treasurer of the State of Missouri.

Prior to the term of Colonel Gates the State funds had been kept on deposit in the National Bank of the State of Missouri at St. Louis and the Mastin Bank at Kansas City, Mo., and were transferred to him by checks on these banks from his predecessor, the banks being considered entirely solvent.

Unexpectedly both these banks failed, having on deposit over a million of dollars of the State funds, and large sums of money were soon becoming payable by the State. Treasurer Gates, being of limited financial resources of his own, had to rely upon Colonel Burnes to provide for the State liabilities and to aid in securing as much money as possible from the banks, and to make good any deficit not so secured. Colonel Burnes was equal to the emergency. He met all liabilities of the State and maintained its credit untarnished, and paid back into the State treasury every dollar with interest, although neither bank ever paid depositors in full. While the banks did not pay depositors, and Colonel Burnes paid every dollar with interest to the State, it is believed that he so managed the affairs that he retrieved his losses to a very large extent.

Colonel Burnes was laudably ambitious. He was a graceful, fluent, and effective speaker, and in the political campaigns of 1856 and 1860 was the leading speaker in his part of the State, and gained a reputation for oratory scarcely equaled by any efforts in later years. After the commencement of the late war and up to 1870 Colonel Burnes affiliated with the Republican party, and was a member of the State Republican convention of 1870, which separated and placed two full tickets for governor and State officers before the people, one headed by Gov. Joseph W. McClurg and the other headed by Gov. B. Gratz Brown, and known as the Liberal Republican ticket.

Colonel Burnes supported the Liberal Republican movement, and in that convention, in advocating the liberal policy of enfranchising those disfranchised by reason of action or sympathy in behalf of the South, gave utterance to the expression that "Love is stronger than hate," which became the tocsin of that canvass.

From 1870 to his death he was an active supporter of and worker in the Democratic party. He was a member in good standing of all the Masonic orders, including that of the Mystic Shrine, and also of the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Red Men, and of the Elks. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and built for that church a house of worship in Weston, Mo., and gave to its Sunday-school a large library.

He was married to Miss Mary Patton Skinner, of Kentucky, a noble, gentle, cultivated, Christian lady, who has been a confirmed invalid for many years, and survives him, and by whom he had six children, only two of whom are now living, D. D. Burnes, one of the leading attorneys of St. Joseph, Mo., and C. C. Burnes, vice-president of the National Bank of St. Joseph. As a husband, he was tender, loving, and devoted. As a father, he was kind, considerate, affectionate, and companionable. As a citizen, neighbor, and friend, he was pleasant, kind, liberal, generous, and warm-hearted. Out of his abundance he distributed liberally, yet unostentatiously, to charitable objects and to the poor.

He and his two brothers, D. D. and Col. Calvin F. Burnes, were always associated together in their lives and business, and their fondness and devotion to each other were most conspicuous and striking. The death of his brother, D. D. Burnes, in 1867, left his six minor children orphans, who were adopted by him and his brother, C. F., and have been reared in his family as his own children, and are to-day co-sharers of his estate with his own children. As a legislator and Representative in Congress he was careful, painstaking, thorough in his investigations, constant and laborious in his work, sound in judgment, able, concise, forcible, and convincing in presentation, earnest and accurate in reasoning, and gifted in speech and debate. In the House of Representatives he soon moved forward to the front rank, won and maintained a high and enviable position among the ablest of the many distinguished leaders in that honorable body.

His constant and exhausting labors, devolving upon him in the strict performance of his necessary duties, weakened his splendid physique and doubtless hastened his sudden demise in the prime and vigor of his manhood, and honorable and distinguished career, beautifully emblemized in language of the poet—

A flower that does with opening morn arise,
And, flourishing the day, at evening dies;
A wing'd eastern blast, just skimming o'er
The ocean's brow, and sinking on the shore;
A fire, whose flames through crackling stubble fly,
A meteor shooting down the summer sky;
A bowl adown the bending mountain roll'd;
A bubble breaking, and a fable told;
A noontide shadow, and a midnight dream,
Are emblems which with semblance apt proclaim
His earthly course.

To show the high appreciation of the distinguished career and services of Colonel Burnes by the States of Missouri and Kansas and the affectionate regard, warm friendship, and love cherished for him by those in whose midst he had spent his life, and with whom he had been so closely associated in all the affairs and pursuits of an active and busy life, I present the resolutions adopted by the senate and house of the General Assembly of Missouri, by the senate of the State of Kansas, by the city council of St. Joseph, by the Independent Order of Red Men, by the St. Joseph Turnverein, by the Trades Assembly, by the bar of St. Joseph, by a largely-attended meeting of the colored citizens of St. Joseph, and by the Democratic Congressional convention in meeting to nominate a successor, and an editorial from the St. Joseph Daily Herald, the leading Republican paper of Northwest Missouri, and ask that they be printed. No higher tributes of respect, friendship, and affectionate regard could be bestowed.

All who ever visited the house of Colonel Burnes in the suburbs of St. Joseph, as I have done, will join with me in unstinted praise of his modest, generous, warm-hearted hospitality and genial courtesy. It was the home of the kindliest greeting, the warmest and tenderest affection among all its inmates.

While Colonel Burnes will be mourned and missed, and his loss keenly felt in nation and States, it is upon his family, his devoted wife, children, adopted children, and surviving brother, the heaviest blow has fallen. To them I can only commend the language of inspiration: "Now he is dead. Wherefore should I fast? Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." And these beautiful lines:

The dead are like the stars by day,
Withdrawn from mortal eye,
But not extinct, they hold their way
In glory through the sky.
Spirits from bondage thus set free
Vanish amidst immensity,
Where human thought, like human sight,
Fails to pursue their trackless flight.

APPENDIX.

The senate and house of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri each unanimously adopted the following resolutions, prepared by a joint committee:

Resolved, That this house has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. James N. Burnes, late a Congressman from the Fourth Congressional district of this State, and extend to his afflicted family sincere sympathy and condolence in this sad bereavement.

Resolved, That by his death the country has sustained a severe loss. He was an able legislator, a gifted orator, a tribune of the people, whose rights he defended with unselfish devotion. A man of ripe judgment and great experience in affairs, he resolutely devoted every energy of his mind to a thorough investigation of whatever business he was engaged upon, and always with a laudable ambition to promote the best interests of all classes of our people. To the discharge of his public duties he applied the resources of a mind richly endowed by nature with rare intellectual gifts. Cautious, he seldom committed a mistake; honest, he always looked to the advancement of the general welfare; diligent, his industry knew no limits but a complete mastery of every subject under consideration; patriotic, he exhausted the strength and resources of his great nature by overwork, and with heroic courage sacrificed his life on the altar of public duty. The people of Missouri will ever reverence his name and treasure the memory of his many virtues.

Resolved, That the clerk of the house be directed to transmit to the family of the deceased an engrossed copy of these resolutions.

TOPEKA, KANS., January 24.

In the senate to-day Mr. Carroll, of Leavenworth, introduced the following resolutions, which passed unanimously:

Whereas the people of Kansas learn with profound regret of the death of Congressman James N. Burnes, of Missouri: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Kansas, That in the death of Colonel Burnes this State has lost a warm supporter, the West a loyal friend and leading legislator, and the country at large an honest, wise, and consistent statesman.

Resolved, That the sympathy and condolence of this body be extended to the family of Colonel Burnes in this affliction.

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased statesman.

Messrs. Osborne, Kelly of McPherson, and Elliston made brief speeches eulogistic of Mr. Burnes before the resolution was voted upon.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Whereas we have learned with profound sorrow and regret of the death of Hon. James N. Burnes, our Congressman and fellow townsman; and

Whereas we deem it well and proper to give an expression of the loss which this community has suffered by his death: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we, the common council of the city of St. Joseph, recognize in the death of Col. James N. Burnes that the city has lost one of its most valued, progressive, and honest citizens; the district a watchful and faithful servant, and the country a wise and patriotic statesman, for whose loss a nation mourns; and,

Be it further resolved, That we, in behalf of the citizens of St. Joseph, extend to his family sincere condolence in this hour of its greatest affliction.

Resolved, That the common council and city officials attend the funeral of the deceased in a body; and that the flags upon the public buildings of the city be placed at half-mast until after the funeral.

Be it further resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the common council, and that the clerk be instructed to furnish the family of the deceased with a copy.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At a special council of Pocahontas Tribe, No. 10, I. O. R. M., held on the 27th sun of cold moon, G. S. D. 398, the following resolutions were adopted in memory of their deceased brother, James N. Burnes, whom the black hunter of Death took from their midst on the 24th sleep of cold moon, G. S. D. 398:

"Whereas it has pleased the Great Spirit of the universe to call our beloved and distinguished brother, James N. Burnes, to the happy hunting grounds of his fathers: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That while we deeply mourn the loss of our brother, we humbly submit to the dispensation of the Great Spirit, believing that in leaving this forest of care and trouble he was received to enjoy the reward of his labors in that happy hunting ground, whence no traveler returns.

"Resolved, That in the death of our esteemed brother the nation has lost an honored statesman, the State a beloved son, the district an able Representative, these hunting grounds a faithful friend, and this tribe a true and brave chief.

"Resolved, That we submit with humble obedience to the will of the Great Spirit, who has removed from the forest of life our beloved brother.

"Resolved, That our charter be draped in mourning for two moons, and these resolutions be inserted in the daily papers, a copy furnished to his bereaved family, and be engrossed upon the records of the tribe.

"C. B. CLAGGETT,
"E. PADBURG,
"WM. LEITCH,
"Committee."

ST. JOSEPH TURNVEREIN.

Whereas the St. Joseph Turnverein and the Germans of the city of St. Joseph have lost in the deceased a warm friend and a man of honorable and lofty principles, the family a true and affectionate father and husband, and the citizens of the Fourth Congressional district of Missouri an eminent, highly gifted, and faithful Representative of national reputation, and the cause of personal liberty an energetic defender: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we assure to the afflicted family our profound sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered on the records of this association and a copy be transmitted to the family and to the press for publication.

THE TRADES ASSEMBLY.

We, the members of the Trades and Labor Assembly, recognizing that a great calamity has befallen the community in the sudden and sad death of Col. James N. Burnes, member of Congress from the Fourth district, and regarding him as always a true friend of the laboring classes, an able Representative, and an honorable citizen, we hereby extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy in their sad bereavement; and that this meeting do now adjourn to attend the funeral ceremonies of the deceased.

The following resolutions were reported by Judge O. M. Spencer, chairman of the committee on resolutions appointed at a previous meeting of the bar, and unanimously adopted at the meeting, over which ex-Governor Silas Woodson presided, as the expression of the universal sentiment of the St. Joseph attorneys-at-law over the untimely death of the late Colonel Burnes:

James N. Burnes, a distinguished citizen, for many years a loved and honored member of the bar of Buchanan County, having been removed by death, we who are permitted still to remain desire to express our respect for his eminent character and ability, our appreciation of his distinguished public services, and our sympathy with his stricken family in their sudden and terrible bereavement.

His character was such that those in whose sight he lived gladly committed to his keeping their most vital interests. With such ability and integrity did he acquit himself in the discharge of the public duties imposed upon him that he was counted one of the nation's greatest men, and reflected honor and credit upon all who so trusted him; so that we, his brothers of the bar, are to-day proud to read his illustrious name upon our roll.

Those of us who have enjoyed his personal friendship and confidence, and who have therefore loved him, are in his death truly bereaved; but we can only faintly realize the depth of the shadow of the great affliction which has fallen upon his family. While it is grateful to us to say to them that he whom they loved is enshrined in the heart of a nation, we know that God's angels, bearing His promises, will bring their only real consolation.

In order that it may be held in perpetual remembrance:

Be it resolved, That a certified copy of the proceedings of this meeting, including the foregoing tribute, be transmitted by the secretary to the family of the deceased; that another copy thereof be delivered by the secretary to the chairman of this meeting, to be by him presented to the circuit court for Buchanan County, with a request that the same be spread upon the records of said court; and that a third copy thereof be delivered to a committee of one or more, to be appointed by the chairman, to be by said committee presented to the supreme court of Missouri, with the request that the same be spread upon its records.

MEETING OF THE COLORED CITIZENS—APPROPRIATE RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED ON THE DEATH OF COLONEL BURNES.

In response to a call a large number of prominent colored citizens assembled at the Union Hall on Second street last evening to take action on the death of Colonel Burnes. W. H. Jones was elected chairman of the meeting, and Thomas S. Morris secretary.

The following committee on resolutions was appointed: Dr. J. M. Williams, Harry Robinson, W. M. Sheldon, E. M. Ewing, and George Cunningan.

The committee drafted the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the Great Arbiter of the affairs of man has seen fit in His infinite judgment to remove from our midst one whose career was surrounded by so much to call forth the praises of his fellow companions in that high branch of the national Government of which he was a most honored member, by so much to place, in this removal, a pall over the hearts of the people of this great State of Missouri, by so much to make it felt by his constituents of this Congressional district that his place in their profound respect can not again be so fully filled, and by so much of kindly feeling toward the Afro-Americans of this community to make his memory to them ever green, in the person of Hon. James N. Burnes; be it

"Resolved, That we, the Afro-American citizens of the city of St. Joseph, while we humbly bow in submission to the will of the All-wise One, do hereby express our heartfelt regrets at the sudden demise, and that in his death we lose a friend for whom the warmest feelings shall ever live; and be it further

"Resolved, That to the bereaved family of the deceased we extend our deepest sympathy and send them the hope that it has been said of their beloved one, 'Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter now in the joys of thy Lord;' and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be suitably engrossed and presented to his family."

Resolutions of the Democratic Congressional convention, assembled in St. Joseph, Mo., on February 11, 1889, to nominate a successor to Colonel Burnes, presented by Hon. Elijah H. Norton, late chief-justice of the supreme court of Missouri, and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we are unwilling to enter upon the duties of this convention without pausing on the threshold of its proceedings to express our sorrow and profound regret for the cause which has occasioned our assembling together. More than six years ago the Democracy of this district, with a unanimity unparalleled, placed its honor and battle flag in the hands of Hon. James N. Burnes. How well he preserved the one and advanced the other through all the vicissitudes of victory and defeat in the Presidential campaigns and various local contests, has passed into the political history of the district, State, and nation to which we can all point with exultation and pride. It is a consolation to us to know that he fell at his post with his harness on, doing all that man could do for the welfare of his own immediate constituency and of the country at large. Though he added greatly to his name and fame in the public service and died as the patriot loves to die, yet we deplore his untimely loss in the fullness of his powers, as one difficult to repair, and we hereby tender the stricken family the sympathy and condolement of each and every member of this convention.

Editorial from the St. Joseph Daily Herald of January 25, 1889, the leading Republican paper of Northwest Missouri:

JAMES N. BURNES.

The death of Congressman James N. Burnes removes from the stage of action perhaps the most prominent man in the Fourth district. What Moses was to the children of Israel he was to the Fourth district Democracy, and under his leadership it had gone from victory to victory. His was the master hand that directed the party movements, and so universally successful had he been that he came to be looked upon by many as almost the party itself. It is not too great a compliment to say that his place can not be filled. Another leader will be found, it is true, but he will not combine in himself the elements that made James N. Burnes the unquestioned dictator of his party affairs.

In point of politics the Herald had never agreed with Colonel Burnes, and each time he was a candidate for Congress did what it could do to defeat him. But while this was true, we had never questioned his ability, his loyalty, his zeal, or said he wore his honors unworthily. He was in every point a man among men, earnest, aggressive, fearless, possessing great strength and force of character, and commanding esteem wherever he went by his uniform fairness and kindliness of manner, as well as by his intellectual attainments.

It is useless to say he was a legislator of whom this people has had reason to feel proud. Had he not been, even his superb generalship could not have averted party defeat.

St. Joseph was proud of him as a citizen, this district was proud of him as its Representative in Congress, and the State was proud of him as one of her most promising sons. It is not fair to presume that his life-work was accomplished. The future seemed to have in store for him much that was bright, and the measure of fame already attained seemed only a stepping-stone to something higher and grander.

In expressing sorrow that he is dead the Herald believes it is voicing the sentiment of every man of this great district. It is doing no more in paying a tribute to his memory. No community can afford to lose men of this character. The world has too few of them, and when death calls them away the loss seems a personal one to thousands.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, these are the culminating hours of a closing scene in the drama of national life. When this day returns one political party will relinquish and another assume the executive functions of government. On every hand are visible the preparations to welcome the coming and speed the parting guest. At the eastern portico already stands the stage on which the great actors will play their parts, in the presence of a mighty audience, amid the mimic pomp and circumstance of war, with the splendor of banners, music's martial strains, and the hoarse salutations of accentuating guns.

Enterprises of great pith and moment wait upon the event of the brief interval. While pleasure wanders restlessly through the corridors of the Capitol, hope and fear, ambition, cupidity, and revenge sit in the galleries, or stand at the gates, eager, like dying Elizabeth, to exchange millions of money for the inch of time upon which success or failure, wealth or penury, honor or obloquy depend.

At this juncture and crisis, when each instant is priceless, disregarding every inducement, resisting every incentive and solicitation, the Senate proceeds, by unanimous consent, to consider resolutions of the highest privilege, reported from no committee, having no place upon any calendar, but which take precedence of unfinished business and special order, upon which the yeas and nays are never called, and no negative vote is ever recorded, and reverently pauses, in obedience to the holiest impulse of human nature, to contemplate the profoundest mystery of human destiny—the mystery of death!

In the democracy of the dead all men at last are equal. There is neither rank nor station nor prerogative in the republic of the grave. At this fatal threshold the philosopher ceases to be wise, and the song of the poet is silent. Dives relinquishes his millions, and Lazarus his rags. The poor man is as rich as the richest, and the rich man is as poor as the pauper. The creditor loses his usury, and the debtor is acquitted of his obligation. There the proud man surrenders his dignities, the politician his honors, the worldling his pleasures; the invalid needs no physician, and the laborer rests from unrequited toil.

Here at last is nature's final decree in equity. The wrongs of time are redressed. Injustice is expiated; the irony of fate is refuted; the unequal distribution of wealth, honor, capacity, pleasure, and opportunity, which make life such cruel and inexplicable tragedy, ceases in the realm of death. The strongest there has no supremacy, and the weakest needs no defense. The mightiest captain succumbs to that invincible adversary, who disarms alike the victor and the vanquished.

James Nelson Burnes, whose death we deplore to-day, was a man whom Plutarch might have described or Van Dyke delineated: massive, rugged, and robust; in motion slow; in speech sonorous and deliberate; grave in aspect; serious in demeanor; of antique and heroic mold; the incarnation of force, energy, and power.

Not perplexed by moral abstractions nor mental subtleties, he possessed that assemblage of qualities which makes success in practical affairs inevitable. Great enterprises were natural to him. Breadth, grasp, and comprehension characterized his projects. Early perceiving the enormous possibilities of the valley of the Missouri, longer than the Amazon and more fertile than the Nile, he immediately identified himself with the forces which have developed the empire of the Northwest; made the American desert an oasis, and abolished the frontier. At the bar, on the bench, in business and politics, he was foremost for a quarter of a century.

When we first met, St. Louis was an outpost of civilization, and Jefferson City the farthest point reached by railroad. In all that vast region, from the sparse settlements along the Missouri to the Sierra Nevada, from the Arkansas to the Yellowstone—now the abode of millions, soon to be represented in this Chamber—there was neither husbandry nor harvest, habitation nor home, save the casual encampments of the Bedouins of the plains, more savage than the beasts they slew.

We were neighbors—as that word goes in the West. Twenty miles to the northward, across the turbid stream, the level bars of tawny sand, and the vast expanse of primeval forest, were visible from my door, in the morning and evening sun, the spires and the towers of the city where he dwelt, and with whose history his name will be indissolubly associated. Here in a stately home, with ample fortune, equipage, and retinue, surrounded by a family he adored, by friends devoted to him, and by enemies whom he had overcome, he confidently anticipated larger triumphs and loftier honors yet to be.

As I looked for the last time upon that countenance from which for the first time in so many years no glance of kindly recognition nor word of welcome came, I reflected upon the impenetrable and insoluble mystery of death. But if death be the end, if the life of Burnes terminated upon this bank and shoal of time, if no morning is to dawn upon the night in which he sleeps, then sorrow has no consolation, and this impressive and solemn ceremony which we observe to-day has no more significance than the painted pageant of the stage. If the existence of Burnes was but a troubled dream, his death oblivion, what avails it that the Senate should pause to recount his virtues, and that his associates should assemble in solemn sorrow around his voiceless sepulcher? Neither veneration nor reverence is due the dead if they are but dust; no cenotaph should be reared to preserve for posterity the memory of their achievements, if those who come after them are to be only their successors in annihilation and extinction.

Unless we survive, the ties of birth, affection, and friendship are a delusive mockery; the structure of laws and customs upon which society is based, a detected imposture; the codes of morality and justice, the sentiments of gratitude and faith are empty formulas, without force or consecration. If in this world only we have hope and consciousness why should their inculcations be heeded? Duty must be a chimera. Our passions and our pleasures should be the guides of conduct, and virtue is indeed a superstition, if life ends at the grave.

This is the conclusion which the philosophy of negation must accept at last. Such is the felicity of those degrading precepts which make the epitaph the end. If these teachers are right, if the life of Burnes is like an arrow that is spent, then we are atoms in a moral chaos; obedience to law is indefensible servitude; rulers and magistrates are despots tolerated only by popular imbecility; justice is a denial of liberty; honor and truth are trivial rhapsodies; murder and perjury are derisive jests, and their harsh definitions are frivolous phrases invented by tyrants to impose on the timidity of cowards and the credulity of slaves.

If the life of Burnes is as a taper that is burned out, then we treasure his memory and his example in vain, and the latest prayer of his departing spirit has no more sanctity to us, who soon or late must follow him, than the whisper of winds that stir the leaves of the protesting forest, or the murmur of waves that break upon the complaining shore.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, on a farm composed of the rich and beautiful bottom lands of White River, in Morgan County, Indiana, the strong man and able Representative from Missouri whose death we mourn was born, on the 22d day of August, 1827. There, amidst the great primeval forests, scarcely touched as yet by the picket lines of civilization, he first opened his eyes to the light and glory of this world. His father's pioneer spirit, however, was not long content to remain even at this advanced outpost of emigration and enterprise. He belonged to that bold and determined class of men who have in all ages blazed the pathways of progress and broken down obstacles to the march of empire. Ten years after the birth of his robust, stalwart son, this Indiana farmer, with all beneath his roof, removed still farther west and sought another frontier home on the Platte purchase in the gigantic State of Missouri. There, amidst the boundless resources of material wealth and the active transactions of a vigorous and aggressive race of men, James N. Burnes grew to manhood, and there entered upon his profession as a well-educated, cultivated, and self-reliant lawyer.

I do not need at this time and place to dwell on the details of his brilliant and successful life. From the first hour he entered the lists of combat until he met "the black knight with visor down" who vanquishes all his career speaks for itself, and displays at every step a commanding intellect, a generous soul, and an iron will. He was born a leader among men. He was at once conceded a foremost place in affairs by those who came in contact with him. His massive head and powerful frame, with a face in which strength and tenderness were wonderfully combined, riveted the stranger's attention and caused people to look back at him after he had passed.

I well remember the first, and, indeed, almost the only time, I heard Mr. Burnes speak to a public audience. He was on the floor of the House, and I have rarely been more impressed with the appearance, manner, ability, and eloquence of a speaker than I was on that occasion. With a voice exceedingly rich in its varied strains of music, ranging from the deep notes of the organ to the stirring call of the bugle; with a manner self-contained and imposing, yet full of action, and with a familiar and unfaltering grasp of his subject and all its details, he appeared to me as a well-trained, giant gladiator in the arena of public discussion. Combining such eloquence with his well-known business ability necessarily rendered him a most potent factor in the conduct of affairs whether at home or in the halls of legislation, whether in managing and pushing forward great public improvements in Missouri or in standing as a recognized leader on the floor of the House of Representatives.

The social qualities of Mr. Burnes were most delightful to those who were closest to him. His heart was warm as summer sunshine, and there was the sweet charm of a loving, gracious spirit in the grasp of his hand, in the glance of his eye, and in the melody of his tone as he extended his greeting to a friend. He was especially kind to the young, and the youngest members of the House where he so recently fell are to-day his deepest mourners.

Mr. President, much more I might say, but others have spoken my thoughts, and more aptly and eloquently far than I could do. This brief tribute, however, I could not forbear paying to a son of Indiana, who rose to the foremost rank amongst men in another State. The history of Missouri is illuminated with the renown of great, historic names, and into the pantheon of her illustrious dead the name of James Nelson Burnes will now be admitted. He died like a hero; he fell at his post.

What better ending of a human life could there be With all his harness on, in the immediate discharge of his duties, his brilliant faculties still in their full meridian, the summons came, and, without pain, he slept with his fathers.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I had intended to speak at some length upon the resolutions, but the condition of my voice to-day forbids, and I must content myself with a very few formal words.

I have known Mr. Burnes for several years, and his service and mine upon the Committees on Appropriations in the two Houses have brought us considerably together. In all the various matters embraced in the appropriation bills, some of the most important coming under his immediate charge and supervision and covering subjects of great public interest, Mr. Burnes always displayed ability of a very high order. He studied his facts thoroughly, and those of us who served with him found that in all the controversies which arose on the floor and in the conference committee-room, he was well able to maintain his own side. His manner was earnest; he was forcible in expression; and these, together with his long legislative experience, made him a most effective debater. He had already become a leader in the House of Representatives, and there he can not fail to be greatly missed.

So far as his life outside of public service is to be considered, I can only join in the testimonials that have been rendered by other Senators who knew him better than I. But his strength of will and native force of character always impressed me deeply. In many matters that came up where he and I were concerned upon opposite sides, and where sometimes sharp conflicts resulted, I never came away from those conflicts but with an increased respect for the power and grasp of the man to whom I had been opposed.

When death, Mr. President, invades these Chambers and takes away such a strong spirit, such a manly presence, such an enforcing will the gap that is made can never be easily filled.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, these sad occasions which so often cause the Congress to lament the departure of some valued associate serve to remind us how fleeting are the honors we all prize and how much grander is the ambition that aspires beyond human concerns.

The soldier who dies in the blaze of battle, environed by the pomp and pride and circumstance of war, is canonized as a hero. In the peaceful shades of private as in the open walks of public life there are countless moral heroes whose sublime courage and noble virtues pass unnoticed. In age, in physical form, and in outward characteristics our departed friend had the promise of a long and successful career. His fine faculties were in the prime of vigor, and gave assurance of higher distinction than he had yet attained. But he knew the sword of the Destroyer hung suspended by an invisible hair over his head and might fall—as it did fall—with the suddenness of a flash of lightning.

This knowledge of an impending fate neither alarmed him nor interrupted the course of his accustomed life. He noted the signals of an unseen danger with as calm a nerve as he might have registered the weather signs of a barometer. Indeed, it may be said he counted the pulsations of ebbing life to the hour when sternly summoned from the post of duty. What battle-field has exhibited grander heroism?

It was my privilege to know Hon. James N. Burnes in two capacities.

First, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations with whom I, as a member of the same committee of the Senate, was brought in frequent contact.

Second, as a leading member of that great party to whose service the best years of his life were earnestly devoted.

He did not aspire to be a statesman in the broad sense of originating public policies. But it was his honorable pride when he came to Congress to make his mark as a sound legislator. How well he earned and deserved this distinction, by ability, uprightness, fidelity to every trust, and with general acceptance to the people is familiar knowledge to all in and out of Congress who have followed the course of legislation since he became a Representative six years ago.

Mr. Burnes was usually charged with the management of one of the great supply bills of the Government. While liberal for all the just needs of the public service, he was a scrupulous guardian of the people's interests; a decided opponent of extravagance in every shape and an advocate of retrenchment wherever reform could be properly applied. He could not be persuaded because there was a huge surplus in the Treasury to abate a jot of the principle that governed his legislative action. His success was remarkable in resisting the pressure for appropriations.

In maintaining his cherished policy of a wise economy in national expenditures he was always able, patient, forbearing, and even gentle to opponents and admirably poised in discussion. He made even friends of defeated antagonists.

In political life Mr. Burnes was a Democrat of the Jeffersonian school who believed in the enduring principles which have carried that party through many trials, only to confirm their strength and their wisdom. Above all he was an American who loved our institutions with a heartfelt devotion and who believed they were destined by precept and by practice to exercise a commanding influence on the civilization and destiny of mankind.

Coming up himself from humble beginnings and having carved his own way to various distinctions, he was grateful for the opportunities and proud of the methods by which these honors were reached. He had seen five Presidents taken from the ranks of the "plain people," as Mr. Lincoln described that great body of citizens who are the backbone of the Republic, all of whom in early life were subjected to the strain of poverty and privation without a seeming prospect of future advancement.

He had seen this powerful nation during a period of profound anxiety go on with its mighty operations as if adjusted by an automatic system. While the President lay for months prostrate and helpless sixty millions of free people ruled themselves by a moral force of which the world has furnished no other example.

Had God spared his life a few weeks longer he would have seen the last of these Presidents returning to the walks of private life and resuming his former calling without this extreme change of conditions making a ripple on the surface of public affairs.

These experiences and these grand possibilities made him, and should make us all, firm in the faith that such institutions are destined for the benefit of mankind. Let us strive to cherish them in the generous spirit and large beneficence for which they were designed by the fathers who recognized no narrow nor geographical lines in planting deep the foundation of the Republic.

In his public career, as in private station, Mr. Burnes was exemplary, manly, loyal in his friendships, and unswerving in duty. The processes of his strong mind were not alert, because he slowly and closely investigated every subject of national interest, and his judgment rarely failed to inspire confidence in his conclusion. He did not follow Lord Bacon's example in leaving his name "to the next ages and to foreign nations." His reputation was made in the sunlight of active affairs and survives as an encouraging instruction to the young and a model worthy to be preserved. When our turn comes in the solemn procession to the grave let us hope that we may be able like him to leave an untarnished fame and that Divine mercy will deal tenderly with our frailties.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President, when Pericles was appointed to pronounce the eulogy over the Athenians who had fallen in battle he began his memorable oration, which has come down to us through the long centuries, stirring now as then all hearers, in the following words:

> Most of my predecessors in this place have commended him who made this speech part of the law, from the feeling that it is well that it should be delivered at the burial of those who fall in battle. For myself I should have thought that the worth which had displayed itself in deeds would be sufficiently rewarded by honors also shown by deeds, such as you now see in this funeral prepared at the people's cost. And I could have wished that the reputations of many brave men were not to be imperiled in the worth of a single individual to stand or fall according as he spoke, ill or well. For it is hard to speak properly upon a subject when it is even difficult to convince your hearers that you are speaking the truth. On the one hand, the friend who is familiar with every part of the story may think that some point has not been set forth with that fullness which he wishes and knows it to deserve. On the other, he who is a stranger to the matter may be led by envy to suspect exaggeration if he hears anything above his own nature. For men can endure to hear others praised only so long as they can severally persuade themselves of their own ability to equal the actions recounted. When this point is passed envy comes in and with it incredulity.

Among all peoples, savage as well as civilized, in all ages, it has been the custom to do honor to the memory of those who fall in battle while in the service of their country, and this universal feeling springs from the noblest and tenderest instincts of the human heart. Men feel that they honor themselves when they honor those "whose voice or sword has served mankind." We revere the memory of the brave soldier who while wielding his sword in defense of his country gives his life to that country; we bear him to his grave with every mark of honor, of respect, and of grief; and we dedicate monuments to his memory to show to all succeeding generations a people's gratitude. It is natural and proper that we should do these things; but, Mr. President, it seems to me that no less is due to the memory of those who in civil life devote their talents, their time, their energy, to the service of their country, and who, like the distinguished subject of this impressive ceremonial, when the Senate of the United States, turning from its daily routine of business, laying aside all spirit of party, and recognizing that "one touch of nature makes the whole world kin," devotes its time to pay fitting tribute to one who fell in life's hard fight at his post of duty. It is true that he did not fall on the battle-field, when the "joy of battle" inspires heroic deeds and robs death of its sting; it was not his fate to hear, as the last sound that reached his ears on earth, the exulting shouts of victory and to feel that his blood was poured out in defense of his country's rights; but he nevertheless gave his life willingly, freely, and knowingly to the service of that country.

> No marshaling troops, no bivouac song,
> No banner to gleam and wave!
> But, O, these battles! they last so long—
> From babyhood to the grave.

He knew that he was constantly standing in the shadow of death, for he had felt the approach of that fatal and insidious disease which struck him down, and he had with steady hand and brave spirit recorded every warning he had received, marking thus every mile-stone on the road which led only to death. A man of a spirit less brave and of devotion to duty less conscientious would have sought a reprieve from his impending fate by deserting his post of duty, but he stood to it with the faith of a martyr and the courage of a soldier; and when the dread summons came it found him at the post where duty called him. In the common estimate of the world his death was not a heroic one, for he did not fall amid the glorious clash of arms; but is not a man who died as he did entitled to be called a hero?

Who in life's battle firm doth stand
Shall bear hope's tender blossoms
Into the silent land.

The lesson taught by a death like that of Mr. Burnes will prove, if taken to heart, invaluable to those who are soon to follow us and into whose hands the destiny of this great Republic will be committed. It will teach them that the duties of life are greater than life itself, and that the laurel wreath of the conqueror is not worthier than the crown of the martyr. It should teach them that devotion to duty, in whatever field of action it may be demanded, is the noblest impulse which can inspire the heart, the highest consummation of laudable ambition. And it is well for the reputation of any man of whom it can be said that his life gave an example of earnest devotion to duty and his death a lesson which should incite every man who wishes to serve his country to emulate that example.

It was not my good fortune, Mr. President, to know Mr. Burnes intimately, and it does not become me to speak of his personal character or of his private domestic virtues. I leave this grateful duty to be discharged by his close friends who knew him long and well. I speak of him only in his public, official character and with reference to his great public services. These are known of all the world, and are appreciated by all who are familiar with them. He discharged his duty honestly, fearlessly, and efficiently, and he fell a sacrifice to his high sense of duty. No higher praise can be given to a public servant than this, no nobler epitaph could be inscribed on the tomb of the dead. And, after all, sir, what is that which we call death? When this comes, as come it must to all of us, we who are left on earth grieve for the loss of those whom we have loved and lost for a brief time, but when we call to mind the blessed hopes and promises held out to us by revelation we can say:

There is no Death! what seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call Death.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I knew Col. James N. Burnes very slightly, except as a distinguished member of the House of Representatives. His abilities and force of character as displayed in that body made him from his first entrance into it a conipicuous member. He was a man of great labor and great capabilities. Since I have been conversant with the membership of the House of Representatives I have known no man who has achieved a greater distinction or wielded a wider or stronger influence among his fellows. His services as a legislator entitle him to the gratitude of the country, and his memory to an honored and enduring recognition.

No one who has ever met Colonel Burnes could fail to be impressed with the man. His well-knit frame, massive head, his face beaming with intelligence and marked in every lineament by courage, strength, and will-power proclaimed him a ruler among men.

Gifted with uncommon sagacity in the management of affairs, both in private and public life, his career in life was eminently successful. As a man and a citizen among the people of his Western home he was without a rival in the affection and esteem with which he was regarded. As a public man in the national councils he stood abreast with the foremost in ability and force and efficiency, and in the confidence and esteem of his associates.

In the death of Colonel Burnes the State of Missouri, grand as she is in the character of her noble people, has sustained the loss of one of her greatest sons; and the Congress of the United States one of its ablest and most trusted leaders. Who shall estimate the loss to his family, his neighbors, and his friends? It fell to my lot to be one of those who accompanied the mortal remains of Colonel Burnes to his home in St. Joe, Mo., and I shall never forget the impression received there where he had lived for many years of the man. The governor of the State with his staff, many members of the Legislature then in session at Jefferson City, persons of distinction from every portion of the State of Missouri, flocked to St. Joe to do honor to his memory, but better than all the people of that beautiful city, of all ages, sexes, colors, and conditions among whom he had lived, and to each one of whom he was known, turned out en masse and attested their devotion to him; facing for hours the biting rigor of a Western snow-storm which prevailed on the day of his burial.

Mr. President, genius and eloquence have laid their choicest tributes on the bier of this great Missourian "in thoughts that breathe and words that burn," but this grand ovation from the hearts of tens of thousands of noble and gallant people who knew him as friends and neighbors, though voiceless, is more eloquent in his praise than any sentiment that can be formulated in human language. To have lived and died in a way to command this great heart-offering was the rare fortune of Colonel Burnes. He has gone from among us. In the meridian of his life and powers, when he seemed to have many years of usefulness and honor before him, he has been stricken down.

He died with the harness on, and to the last moment was the faithful and devoted public servant. He has not lived in vain. His life has erected a noble standard of excellence in the performance of public and private duty for the emulation of those who remain, and his death gives to all an earnest admonition of the uncertainty of life and of the hollowness of its most glittering prizes. While we mourn his loss we feel that the influence of his noble example will still live among us, an incentive to an honorable ambition to discharge well our duties to family, friends, neighbors, and country.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, in what is now St. Charles County, Missouri, immediately west of St. Louis, the Indians made a last desperate struggle for their homes and hunting grounds.

Pontiac, the great Ottawa chieftain, who had commanded at Braddock's defeat, and afterwards Black Hawk, the inveterate enemy of the whites, here vainly attempted to stem the resistless tide of that aggressive civilization which had driven their people from the region east of the Mississippi, and was still relentlessly pressing them westward. Here the pioneers of the dark and bloody ground, under the leadership of Daniel Boone, again met the savage in deadly conflict, and not until the last hostile Indian had been driven from the soil of Missouri did the old hunter close his simple and dauntless life upon the banks of the river across whose waters his solitary canoe had so often glided.

Of all the region between the Mississippi and Missouri, and south of Iowa, the Indians held, after 1820, only a triangular territory between the western border of Missouri and the river of that name. In 1837 this was bought by the United States and added to the State, being known as the Platte purchase, and comprising the counties of Atchison, Andrew, Buchanan, Holt, Nodaway, and Platte. A fairer or more fertile land is not kissed by the sun in all his journey, and when opened to settlement it was at once filled by an immigration coming mainly from that Scotch-Irish blood whose intellect and courage have impressed so indelibly the Middle and Western States. They are a virile race, strong in frame and prejudice, strict in their ideas of justice and summary at times in enforcing it, deeply religious, intensely patriotic, and absolutely fearless. To quick and vigorous intellect they add the instinct of resistance to tyranny in all its forms, and especially to outside and unwarranted interference with what they consider their own business.

It is not strange that men of this lineage should give direction and character to communities, and especially when great emergencies bring out the individuality and self-reliance which make leaders for a people. With other families of Scotch-Irish descent there came to the Platte purchase in 1838 that of James Burnes, the father of Col. James N. Burnes. Their home was in Platte County, upon the banks of the Missouri, and here, in a region overflowing with the opulence of nature and surrounded by the strong, adventurous pioneers of the frontier, James N. Burnes passed his boyhood. In his surroundings there was everything to develop intellect and energy. In this young and vigorous community there was no room for the idle or timid, and the fresh, pure air strung every nerve of mind and body to its best. The wide prairie, stretching to the boundless west, the silent, solemn forest, the great river rolling in resistless volume to the Gulf, all nature in vast and majestic mould, quickened and elevated ambition.

Never did young knight put on armor for the lists with higher aspiration or more dauntless courage than did James N. Burnes for the battle of life. In every fiber he was a combatant. With him existence meant battle. Strong, self-contained, cool, and watchful, he fought for the prizes of life as fought the gladiators when all Rome looked down upon the arena. After men die we hear in stereotyped phrase much of their negative virtues and passive goodness, but to me the proudest epitaph that can be written is:

Here lies one much hated and much loved, but never despised by friend or foe.

James N. Burnes had many enemies, for he fought with mailed hand and without asking quarter, but no man ever looked on him with contempt, or ever met him in conflict without remembering it to his last hour. He was a born leader, and could not have been placed where he would not have dominated those around him. In a mining camp or a salon, in a banking house or the halls of Congress, he was the same—aggressive, untiring, ambitious, and successful. I knew Colonel Burnes during thirty-five years of active personal and public life. There were two marked and perilous passages in his career when events brought us together very closely.

In 1877 the banks in which were deposited the funds belonging to the State treasury of Missouri suspended payment, and for this reason there was a deficit of $198,000 in the State treasurer's accounts, of whom Colonel Burnes was the principal bondsman. The disaster was so sudden and unexpected that it found him totally unprepared, and his ruin seemed inevitable. His enemies, personal and political, seized with avidity upon opportunity for securing his downfall, and a partisan press exhausted epithet in denunciation of him and his party. The State treasurer—than whom a more honest and incorruptible officer never held a public trust—was indicted in the courts and proceedings begun in the General Assembly for his removal. In the litigation which ensued I was of counsel for the treasurer and his bondsmen, and was authorized by Colonel Burnes to propose to the State authorities that if the right of action against the defaulting banks should be assigned to him and his associates upon the treasurer's bond he would pay the deficit into the State treasury. The offer was accepted, and every cent paid without loss to the Commonwealth. Never did any man pass through a more terrible ordeal; but when the storm was fiercest, and others cowered before it, Colonel Burnes exhibited such courage and fertility of resource as won even from his enemies admiration and respect.

In 1882 he was elected to the National House of Representatives from the Fourth district of Missouri, which had been represented for the two preceding terms by a Republican. The canvass was bitter, and disfigured by personalities which invaded every part of his career, and recognized no limit to the license of vituperation. The district was made the clearing house for personal and political grievances that had accumulated during thirty years of active and aggressive life, in which Colonel Burnes had avoided no adversary. It was at this time, when we canvassed together for many days, that I first came to know how tender and loving as husband and father was this strong and combative man. The attacks upon him were so cruel and brutal that even old and experienced politicians recoiled from their savagery, but no word of complaint came from his lips for himself.

His only solicitude was for his family, and especially for her, the wife of his youth, for many years an invalid, from whose sick chamber he endeavored to shut out the hoarse and discordant cries of the combat.

Coming from out the heat and filth of rage and calumny, I saw him one summer night kneel at her side, as if before a shrine, whilst the shadows of that anxious fight passed away, and the look of a bridegroom rested upon her.

It is not in the world's daily strife, when armed and masked we meet as foes, that men are rightly judged. When the armor is put off, and the mask has fallen, the soft light of home brings out in many a rugged life the tints and hues of heaven.

The shadow of death rested upon Colonel Burnes for months. The stealthy and deadly disease which finally triumphed often gave notice of its progress. In the last campaign we spoke together in Platte County, where he had grown to manhood, and in his address he declared his candidacy the last, and told his old friends and neighbors, many of whom had known him from childhood, that he proposed to devote his few remaining years to arranging his private business, and in preparing for the inevitable hour which must soon close his career.

When we reached my room I attempted to rally him upon his solemn words, but he repeated them so earnestly that I could not doubt his sincerity. He alluded to many alarming symptoms which warned him of a fatal result, and then reverently spoke of that great question which no human wisdom can solve. Like all intellectual men he avoided such discussion and shrank from that empiric dogmatism which can not be mistaken as to the infinite hereafter, but he relied implicitly upon the Divine mercy.

Here ends his journey. The weary feet and brain are at rest. Another of our race, strong in mind and purpose, an intellectual athlete in the world's arena, and crowned with its wealth and honors, blessed with the love of home and friends, and beckoned onward by all the possibilities of ambition, has passed through the portal of the unknown.

Helpless we stand at the dark gateway and vainly ask the dead to tell us of the shadowy realm to which we also hasten.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the resolutions be agreed to?

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously; and in accordance therewith the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 26, 1889, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 25, 1889.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal as read will stand approved.

Mr. BLAND. I understand it requires a quorum to approve the Journal.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment to ask consent——

The SPEAKER. The Journal has not been approved, and that of course is the first business in order.

The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that the gentleman can not raise the point of no quorum until by a vote or count of the House the absence of a quorum is disclosed. There has been no count or vote yet.

Mr. DOCKERY. Pending that, can not I submit a request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the rules of the House the first thing in order is the approval of the Journal before the House can proceed to the transaction of any business whatever. The question is on the approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair does not know that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. BLAND. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 6.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. BLAND and Mr. BIGGS as tellers.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to move to dispense with the present business?

The SPEAKER. No motion can be entertained while the gentleman from Missouri is insisting that there is no quorum present; and the first matter pending before the House, which the rules require to be disposed of, is the approval of the Journal, which has not yet been done.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that the gentleman from Texas desires to proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bills. If that is the understanding, I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. But the difficulty is that there is a special order which requires the Speaker, immediately after the reading of the Journal, to cause the names of the members, in their alphabetical order, to be called until 11 o'clock for leave by unanimous consent to consider measures in the House, and unless that order of business is also dispensed with by unanimous consent the Chair can not proceed to recognize the gentleman from Texas to make the motion to consider the appropriation bill.

Mr. SAYERS. It is my purpose to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the calling of the names of the members to ask consideration of bills, so as to proceed with the appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the calling of the names of members for the purpose of proceeding at once to the consideration of the general appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. ABBOTT. I object.

Mr. BLAND. For the present I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So (no further count being demanded) the Journal was approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, on the 19th of the present month Hon. C. F. Booher was duly elected to fill the vacancy in the Fourth Congressional district of the State of Missouri, in the Fiftieth Congress, occasioned by the death of Hon James N. Burnes. He is now present, and in the absence of his certificate of election, which has not yet been received, I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to take the oath of office.

I will state that his majority is unquestioned; there is no contest, and I make this request after a conference with several of our friends on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. PERKINS. Has the vote been canvassed?

Mr. DOCKERY. It has been in the counties, as I understand, and the majority in favor of Mr. Booher is about 1,100.

Mr. WARNER. There is no contest.

There being no objection, Mr. BOOHER appeared at the bar of the House and was duly qualified, taking the oath prescribed by law.

SEMINOLE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States:

To the Congress:

I herewith submit for your consideration a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a proposition made on behalf of the Seminole Nation of Indians for the relinquishment to the Government of the United States of their right to certain lands in the Indian Territory.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 19, 1889.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the message and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. LYNCH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order the Chair will now cause the roll to be called for the consideration of measures by unanimous consent on request of members as their names are reached.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Pending that motion I would like to ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as this day is set apart for business from the Committee on the District of Columbia, that instead of wasting the time we go on with some measures that are now ready by that committee. If there be no objection to the request, I will state that the measures I propose to call up are those which will not create any disturbance in the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would suggest that the gentleman had better get the consent of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DORSEY. Yes, for there is no necessity to appeal to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. LYNCH. I object.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. As that interferes with a deliberate order of the House, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can do nothing until 11 o'clock under the rule except to cause the roll of members to be called and entertain such motions as are in order under the general rules of the House.

The question was put, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 31.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

During the count,

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the agricultural appropriation bill, to non-concur in the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY). The Chair has grave doubt whether this request is in order during the hour, but will submit it to the House. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LAWLER. I object.

After a further count,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] who made the objection has withdrawn it. Is there further objection?

Mr. BURROWS, Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana, and Mr. BUCHANAN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is just advised that the Speaker a few moments since held that during the hour from 10 to 11 requests for unanimous consent could only be entertained on a call of the roll, as the rule provides.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that that body had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

It also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the following bills:

A bill (S. 2759) granting a pension to James M. Frost;

A bill (S. 1390) granting a pension to Anna Slater; and

A bill (S. 3421) granting a pension to Mary B. McVean.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask by unanimous consent the remainder of the hour be vacated, and it be now considered 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] asks unanimous consent to vacate the remainder of the hour. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it not a fact that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] called the attention of the House to the fact that no quorum is present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is true.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Can any business be done without a quorum?

Mr. BLAND. We had better go on in the regular order.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish the gentleman would modify his request so as to vacate the rule.

Mr. BLAND. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The hour of 11 o'clock has arrived.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the motion to take a recess.

Mr. CRISP. I rise to a privileged matter.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 12485) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, ask unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks to non-concur in the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference as requested. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The report, then, will go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] calls up a question of privilege, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] also presents a matter of privilege.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the California contested-election case of Sullivan vs. Felton.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, what was done with the agricultural appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. It goes to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union unless the report is withheld.

Mr. HATCH. I ask that it be withheld.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to know whether in this hour I can raise the question of consideration upon this contested-election case?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can raise the question of consideration on anything that is presented.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I desire to raise the question of consideration, for the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the general deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia calls up the contested-election case from the State of California, and the gentleman from Texas raises the question of consideration. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] also calls up a conference report, which is of higher privilege than the contested-election case.

Mr. CRISP. On that I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to inquire whether business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia is not in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the situation. This being Monday, except for the intervention of privileged matters, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the presentation of bills and resolutions. The next thing in order is the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia; but these are privileged matters which have precedence over all other business. The gentleman from Georgia raises the question of consideration against the conference report. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7186) to authorize the Leavenworth and Rio Grande Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia raises the question of consideration on the conference report.

Mr. PEEL. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] will not insist on that.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I have thought that if this election case were urged forward it would come in contact with the pending appropriation bill, and therefore I have waited four or five days, but it is now so late in the session that I feel I must press the case to a vote.

Mr. REED. I wish the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] would let his sense of private duty give way to his sense of public duty a little longer.

Mr. BLAND. It is a public duty to do public justice to a member-elect of this House.

Mr. CRISP. I hope I shall have the co-operation of the gentleman from Maine in this effort to do public justice.

Mr. REED. My co-operation will be as sincere as the gentleman's effort. [Laughter.]

The question was put on proceeding to the consideration of the conference report; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PEEL. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 27.

Mr. CRISP. No quorum. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Arkansas how long it will probably take to dispose of this conference report.

Mr. PEEL. The report has already been taken up and read, and it can be disposed of in a few minutes. Then there is another conference report upon a right-of-way bill in which the late Judge Burnes was interested. It is a bill granting the right of way from St. Joseph, Mo., down to and through the Indian Territory. In almost the last conversation I ever had with Judge Burnes I promised him to endeavor to get the bill through. The conference report upon it can also be disposed of in a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, if there could be found any practical way of facilitating matters I should be glad to withdraw the point of no quorum. I will ask the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw his motion for the present.

Mr. PEEL. I can not do that. I have been holding this matter back for a week. The consideration of it has been already commenced, the report has been read, and it can be disposed of in a very short time. We can dispose of both the reports in twenty minutes.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman can get unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the conference report with the understanding that we are to take a vote in ten minutes, I shall withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. MCKENNA. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The tellers took their places and proceeded with the count.

Mr. MCKENNA (pending the count). I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will suspend. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the conference report called up by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] be limited to ten minutes. The gentleman from California withdraws his objection. Is there further objection?

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the tellers will proceed with the count.

Mr. CHEADLE (pending the count). I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] also objected.

The count was completed, and the tellers reported—ayes 127, noes 43.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, only 23 members voting in favor thereof.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. I move that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND, and there were—ayes 6, noes 88.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL].

The tellers took their places.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER (pending the count). The Chair is advised that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], who objected to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the agricultural appropriation bill, withdraws his objection. If there be no further objection that order will be made, and the Chair will appoint as managers of the conference on the part of the House the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DAVIDSON], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL (pending the completion of the count). The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] withdraws his point of no quorum on condition that unanimous consent is given to proceed with the consideration of these two conference reports and that they shall be disposed of within half an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. O'NEALL] made the point.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. O'NEALL] will withdraw the point on that condition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] proposes to withdraw his motion and consent to the consideration of the report called up by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] without further dilatory proceedings upon condition that the consideration of the two reports indicated shall not occupy more than thirty minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVENWORTH AND RIO GRANDE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, the conference report in the first case has already been read, and I do not think it is necessary to read it again, as there is nothing material in it.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the House conferees is brief and had better be read.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House, to whom was referred Senate amendments to H. R. 7186, granting right of way to the Leavenworth and Rio Grande Railway Company through the Indian Territory, after a full and free conference with the managers on the part of the Senate, beg leave to submit the following report:

We find that the Senate amendments do not materially change the purposes of the bill, consisting, as they do, in corrections of language, etc. Therefore we recommend the adoption of the report.

S. W. PEEL,
B. W. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PEEL. I demand the previous question on agreeing to the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the previous question be ordered there will be, under the rules, thirty minutes for debate on the report.

Mr. PEEL. I did not intend to demand the previous question. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken, the report was adopted.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ST. LOUIS AND SAN FRANCISCO RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. PEEL. I now ask the consideration of the privileged report which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6612) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, having met, after full and due conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

S. W. PEEL,
B. W. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. L. DAWES,
JAMES K. JONES,
FRANCIS B. STOCKBRIDGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement, submitted in accordance with the rule, was read:

The managers upon the part of the House, having had a free and full conference with the managers upon the part of the Senate on Senate amendments to House bill 6612, granting right of way to St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company through Indian Territory, beg leave to report that all the Senate amendments submitted to us we find entirely correct; they do not in any material way change the object of the bill, but conform its provisions more closely to the main object; that, is protecting the rights of the Indians and restricting the rights of the road to its legitimate business. Therefore we respectfully ask that the report be adopted.

S. W. PEEL,
B. W. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose the amendments are brief. I ask that they be read.

The amendments were read.

Mr. PEEL. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is now, Will the House proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case called up by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]? Before that question is put the Chair desires to lay before the House several requests for unanimous consent.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON HON. JAMES N. BURNES.

Mr. DOCKERY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 266) authorizing the printing of eulogies pronounced in memory of James N. Burnes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. DIBBLE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the RECORD revised remarks on the French spoliation claims, withheld for revision during the last session.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HATCH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for this day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is now, Will the House proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case called up by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. That question has already been raised; the Chair has just stated it to the House.

Mr. CRISP. I hope my friend from Texas will not raise that question. With the object of making way, if possible, for the appropriation bills, we have waited since last Wednesday for an opportunity to proceed with the consideration of this case. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I desire now that this case shall be brought to a decision by the House.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] to withdraw the call for the regular order for a moment, so that I may make a statement. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER (having put the question on proceeding to the consideration of the contested-election case). The noes seem to have it.

Mr. CRISP. I call for a division.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 41, noes 62, more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 115, nays 102, not voting 106; as follows:

So the House agreed to consider the contested-election case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Under the rule not only have gentlemen who rise for the purpose of having their votes recorded after the roll-call has been gone through with to be in the Hall when their names were called, but they have also to state that they did not hear their names called.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Do these gentlemen say they did not hear their names called?

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House is very explicit in its terms, that the Speaker shall not entertain a request for unanimous consent after the second roll-call. But that rule has been frequently relaxed to members on the floor who in the midst of confusion failed to hear their names called, but for that reason only. The Chair thinks it can not be carried beyond that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to make a point of order on the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]. When he was asked whether he was in the House when his name was called he did not say that he did not hear his name called, and he was permitted to vote on that statement.

Mr. CANNON rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only recognize gentlemen one at a time. The gentleman from Kentucky raises the question of order upon the vote of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]. Was the gentleman from Kansas in the House when his name was called?

Mr. PERKINS. I failed to hear my name called, although I was in the Hall at the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman failing to hear his name called, although he was in the Hall, has the right to vote.

Mr. HOLMES. I ask to have my name recorded in the negative. I was in the Hall, but failed to hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote will be recorded.

Mr. BOWDEN and Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, also stated that they were in the Hall, but did not hear their names called, and their names were recorded in the negative.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, my name was not called on the first roll-call, although I was in my seat.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has the right to vote.

Mr. STRUBLE. I was not in the Hall, and did not hear my name called. [Laughter.] If I had been here, I would have voted in the negative.

Mr. ARNOLD. I was in the Hall, but failed to hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to vote.

Mr. ARNOLD. I vote in the negative.

Mr. GAINES, Mr. BOWEN, and Mr. COGSWELL also stated they were in the Hall, but failed to hear their names called, and they severally voted in the negative.

Mr. STEELE. I heard my name called on the first roll-call, but failed to respond.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present on the second roll-call and did he hear his name called?

Mr. STEELE. I was present on the second roll-call, but I did not hear my name called, and my vote was not recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to vote.

Mr. STEELE voted in the negative.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I heard my name called on the first roll-call, but I did not hear my name called on the second roll-call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to have his vote recorded.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, voted in the negative.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I heard my name called on the second roll-call.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman within the Hall?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I was just about to step out of the Hall on the first roll-call and did not hear my name called. I was in the Hall on the second roll-call and heard my name called but did not vote.

The SPEAKER. On the gentleman's statement he has not the right to vote. He was in the Hall on both occasions and heard his name called and did not vote.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I decline to vote. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not proceed unless members will resume their seats and preserve order on the floor. Gentlemen are stating reasons why they did not cast their votes, and it is important for the Chair to hear them.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Speaker, I was in my seat and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to vote.

Mr. GUENTHER voted "no."

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas. I did not hear my name called, although I was in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to have his vote recorded.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, voted "no."

Mr. McKENNA. I wish to change my vote from "no" to "ay."

Mr. SNYDER changed his vote from "no" to "ay."

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I change my vote from "ay" to "no."

Mr. CHEADLE. I change my vote from "no" to "ay."

The names of those who voted were read.

The following pairs were announced on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. NUTTING.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. WHEELER with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LEE with Mr. DAVENPORT.
Mr. HOGG with Mr. SYMES.
Mr. GRANGER with Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut.
Mr. BURNETT with Mr. GOFF.
Mr. NEAL with Mr. HOUK.
Mr. MCSHANE with Mr. LAIRD.
Mr. PHELAN with Mr. BUTLER.
Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. LYMAN.
Mr. COLLINS with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.
The following pairs were announced for this day:
Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. MCCULLOGH.
Mr. FORD with Mr. BRUMM.
Mr. THOMPSON, of California, with Mr. JACKSON.
Mr. WILKINS with Mr. MCCOMAS.
Mr. COX with Mr. WHITING, of Massachusetts.
Mr. ROGERS with Mr. DINGLEY.
Mr. HATCH with Mr. RYAN.
Mr. CRAIN with Mr. MCCORMICK.
Mr. MORGAN with Mr. MILLIKEN.
The following were announced as paired on this vote:
Mr. RUSK with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. SENEY with Mr. PUGSLEY.
Mr. ENLOE with Mr. GALLINGER.
Mr. DOUGHERTY with Mr. BAYNE.
Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. ADAMS.
Mr. HEARD with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. MCRAE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. ROGERS] is absent on account of sickness, and I ask that he be excused for the present.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, was delivered to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message also announced the approval of House bills of the following titles, namely:

An act (H. R. 2261) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny;
An act (H. R. 8) to replace Mrs. R. S. Horton upon the pension-rolls;
An act (H. R. 10691) to increase the pension of Mary A. Bedel;
An act (H. R. 765) granting a pensionto Annie May Pifer;
An act (H. R. 2861) granting a pension to Mary Thorn;
An act (H. R. 3167) granting a pension to Elizabeth L. Nott;

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the House determined to proceed with the consideration of the election case.

Mr. CRISP. I move to lay that motion on the table, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays none, not voting 189; as follows:

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. MCKENNA. I object.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my colleague [Mr. LEE] excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. On motion of my colleague [Mr. MCRAE] I was excused on the last roll-call at my own request on account of sickness. Later in the day, feeling better, I have attended the House. I find that I am paired with Mr. DINGLEY, but have asked that that pair be removed and reserve the right to vote to make a quorum; hence I have voted.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. DINGLEY, for the rest of the day.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. JACKSON, for the rest of the day.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. MILLIKEN, on this vote.

Mr. HERMANN with Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts, on this contested-election case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas are 134, the nays none. No quorum has voted.

Mr. MCKENNA. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. CRISP. I move there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Allen, Mass.	Felton,	Lee,	Post,
Bacon,	Fitch,	Lind,	Pugsley,
Barry,	Flood,	Lyman,	Randall,
Blount,	Ford,	Maffett,	Rusk,
Brewer,	Funston,	Mason,	Seymour,

Davenport,	Jones,	Owen,	Williams.
De Lano,	Kilgore,	Payson,
Dingley,	Lagan,	Phelan,
Ermentrout,	Laird,	Pidcock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The names of the absentees will now be called for excuses.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. I ask that my colleague, Mr. NUTTING, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WADE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MASON, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask that Mr. STAHLNECKER be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I ask that my colleague, Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I do not know whether my colleague, Mr. LEE, has leave of absence or not. If he has not, I ask that he be indefinitely excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HITT. Mr. SYMES is sick at his room, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I ask that my colleague [Mr. COX] be excused on account of illness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My colleagues, Mr. WHITTHORNE and Mr. NEAL, are detained from the House on account of sickness, and I ask that they be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. BURNETT, be excused on account of illness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask that Mr. DINGLEY be excused, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following members were absent with leave of the House:

Burnett,	Hatch,	Lyman,	Payson.
Granger,	Laird,	McComas.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how many gentlemen have answered to their names?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and fifty-one.

Mr. CRISP. I move that all further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with.

Mr. MCKENNA. Pending that, I move the House adjourn.

Mr. SAYERS. It is very evident that nothing possibly can be done in reference to this election case, and now I ask unanimous consent that it be laid aside in order to proceed with the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. FORAN. I will object to that.

The question was put on the motion to adjourn; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCKENNA. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 106.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] to dispense with further proceedings under the call of the House.

The question was put; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCKENNA. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 2.

So further proceedings under the call of the House were dispensed with.

Mr. CRISP. I now ask for another vote on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays none, not voting 201; as follows:

YEAS—122.

Abbott,	Dargan,	Landes,	Rowland,
Allen, Miss.	Davidson, Ala.	Lane,	Sayers,

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote. I can not say that

I was in the Hall when my name was called, because, although I was in the Hall at the second call, I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman is not entitled to vote under the circumstances.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of the members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. McKENNA. I object.

The names of members voting were read by the Clerk.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. STEPHENSON, on this vote.

The vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS (pending the call). Mr. Speaker, it is very evident the House will not consider this election case to-day, and it is exceedingly important that the deficiency bill should be passed. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the election case be set aside, and that the House now proceed to the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. CRISP. I will say to my friend that that can not be done until there has been a vote or a call showing the presence of a quorum. The vote just taken shows that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum is present and nothing is in order except a call of the House or a motion to adjourn. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams,	Davenport,	Laird,	Oates,
Allen, Mass.	Dingley,	Lee,	O'Neill, Pa.
Arnold,	Fitch,	Lodge,	Phelan,
Barry,	Flood,	Lyman,	Phelps,
Bayne,	Ford,	Macdonald,	Pidcock,
Brumm,	Gibson,	Maffett,	Rayner,
Bryce,	Glover,	Maish,	Rusk,

Campbell, Ohio	Hatch,	McComas,	Symes,
Cockran,	Hermann,	McShane,	Weaver,
Collins,	Hogg,	Merriman,	Whiting, Mass.
Cooper,	Houck,	Morse,	Whitthorne,
Cox,	Jackson,	Neale,	Wilkins,
Cutcheon,	Jones,	Nutting,	Williams.

The following members were absent on leave:

Burnett,	Hatch,	Lyman,	Payson.
Granger,	Laird,	McComas,

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, is confined to his room, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STOCKDALE). On this call 260 members have answered to their names.

Mr. CRISP. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are now absent without leave of the House.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, has the result of the call been announced?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCREARY). It has been announced. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SAYERS. As I said awhile ago, it is clearly evident that nothing can be done by the House to-day upon this election case. It is of extreme importance that the deficiency bill shall be disposed of, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the election case be now laid aside and that the House proceed to the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask a vote on the resolution which has ust been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum is present, and nothing is in order except a motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call or a motion to adjourn. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, is a quorum present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair was not in the Chair when the result was announced, and did not know whether the call showed the presence of a quorum.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, if there is a quorum present, I demand of the Chair that my request shall be put to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first thing in order is a motion to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I make that motion.

Mr. CRISP. I hope that will not be done.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. SAYERS, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRISP. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 84.

Mr. CRISP demanded tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. CRISP and Mr. McKENNA.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 87.

So the House refused to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are absent without leave of the House.

Mr. McKENNA. I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question on the motion to adjourn) said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. McKENNA. Division.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 18, noes 73.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is the motion to adjourn considered as business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not in this connection. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. McKENNA. Division.

The question was again put; and there were—ayes 181, noes 2.

Mr. McKENNA. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 36 voting in favor thereof—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 143, nays 39, not voting 141; as follows:

YEAS—143.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. CRISP. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. MCKENNA. I object.

The Clerk read the names.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HATCH with Mr. KELLEY, for the rest of the day.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. MASON, for the rest of the day.

Mr. RAYNER with Mr. WADE, for the rest of the day.

Mr. SOWDEN with Mr. DORSEY, on this vote.

The vote was announced as above stated.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1722) establishing a customs collection district in Florida, to be known as the collection district of Tampa, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 3285) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tensas River, at or near Daniel's Ferry, Louisiana;

A bill (S. 3560) for the relief of William S. Rosecrans; and

A bill (H. R. 1659) to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask, by unanimous consent, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAND. I believe, unless further proceedings under the call are dispensed with, nothing is now in order except some matter pertaining to the call.

Mr. SAYERS. I move, then, to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule is explicit that pending a call of the House nothing is in order except a motion to adjourn or to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask, by unanimous consent, to dispense with the call and that we shall proceed with the deficiency appropriation bill.

The question was put on Mr. SAYERS's motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. CRISP demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 110, noes not counted.

Mr. CRISP. On this vote I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 124, nays 105, not voting 94; as follows:

So all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

During the call,

Mr. CRISP moved to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. MCKENNA objected.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SAYERS. I rise for the purpose of submitting a proposition to the Chair.

Mr. CRISP. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask by unanimous consent—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

Mr. SAYERS. I am upon the floor asking unanimous consent.

Mr. DIBBLE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SAYERS. It is perfectly evident to the House, Mr. Speaker, that no business can be done to-day on this election case, and therefore I ask we shall proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. REED. That is right. It is a sensible proposition.

Mr. MCKENNA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair entertain the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman will wait he will see the Chair does not, the regular order having been demanded.

Mr. MCKENNA. I move that the House take a recess until 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. DUNHAM. Make it a motion to adjourn instead of a motion for a recess.

The question was put on the motion for a recess; and the Speaker pro tempore declared the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCKENNA. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 24.

Mr. MCKENNA. No quorum.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that that body had passed without amendments bills of the House of the following titles, namely:

A bill (H. R. 5032) to extend the limits of the port of Memphis, Tenn.;

A bill (H. R. 7028) to admit to registry the steamer George H. Parker;

A bill (H. R. 7066) providing for the establishment of a light-house at Heceta Head, near the mouth of Siuslaw River, in the State of Oregon, and not to exceed in cost the sum of $80,000;

A bill (H. R. 11216) to authorize the Union Gas Company to lay conduit pipes across the Ohio River;

A bill (H. R. 11342) providing for the re-establishment of the light-house at Point Isabel Texas;

A bill (H. R. 11527) to establish lights on the western end of Coney Island, New York;

A bill (H. R. 11643) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the mouth of the Coquille River, Oregon;

A bill (H. R. 11901) to authorize the city of Lake View, Ill., to erect a crib in Lake Michigan for water-works purposes;

A bill (H. R. 12113) for the establishment of a light-house and steam fog-signal on the outer breakwater at the harbor of Chicago, Ill.;

A bill (H. R. 12310) providing for the establishment of certain lights on the coast of Mississippi; and

A bill (H. R. 12431) providing for the construction of a steam-tender for service on the Great Lakes.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate bills of the following titles, namely:

A bill (S. 1283) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house at the end of Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina; and

A bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of General Philip H. Sheridan.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments in which concurrence was requested bills of the House of the following titles, asked a conference, and had appointed confeeres in each case, as follows:

On the bill (H. R. 10832) for the establishment of a light-house with fog-bell on Oyster-Beds Shoal, in the Hudson River, New York—Mr. PALMER, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. RANSOM.

On the bill (H. R. 11678) providing for the erection of sundry light-houses and fog-signals in Lakes Erie, Huron, Michigan, and Superior—Mr. PALMER, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. RANSOM.

On the bill (H. R. 12334) for the establishment of a light-house station on St. Catharine Island, State of Georgia—Mr. PALMER, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. RANSOM.

On the bill (H. R. 12430) providing for the establishment of a light and fog-signal at Humboldt, California, upon a more secure site, and for the establishment of a light-ship at or near the wreck of the steam-ship Oregon, in New York Harbor—Mr. PALMER, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. RANSOM.

On the bill (H. R. 12414) to amend section 2579 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—Mr. DOLPH, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. COKE.

It further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12485) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, agreed to the conference asked thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. FARWELL, and Mr. CALL conferees on its part.

It also announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3818) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at Old Orchard Shoal, in Princess Bay, New York, asked a conference thereon, and had appointed Mr. PALMER, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. RANSOM as conferees on its part.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). The gentleman from California makes the point of order that no quorum has voted upon his motion, and the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. MCKENNA and Mr. CRISP were appointed tellers.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. CRISP. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 3, nays 190, not voting 130; as follows:

So the House refused to take a recess.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. CRISP said: I ask, by unanimous consent, to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. MCKENNA. I object.

The vote was recapitulated.

The following additional pairs were announced:

So the House refused to take a recess.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. CRISP said: I ask, by unanimous consent, to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. MCKENNA. I object.

The vote was read over.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. CLARDY with Mr. LODGE.

Mr. YODER with Mr. BOOTHMAN.

Mr. MANSUR with Mr. WARNER, on this vote.

Mr. HOOKER with Mr. ROCKWELL, on this vote.

The vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MCKENNA. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Wednesday next at 10 o'clock a. m.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that motion will not prevail. There is but a short time remaining until the close of the session.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] if he will give way temporarily for me to ask the House to consider the general deficiency bill?

Mr. MCKENNA. I will; or any other appropriation bill.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it is my intention, if the House will stand by me, to continue this session until we can try this case, unless the fact is demonstrated that it is a physical impossibility to do it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FARQUHAR. You will have an opportunity to try the physical possibility.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask gentlemen on the other side what will be the chance to get a vote on a contested-election case in the Fifty-first Congress if they do not permit a vote in this case?

Mr. MCKENNA. We are not in the Fifty-first Congress at present. I will withdraw my motion temporarily to allow the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to make a request to call up the deficiency bill.

Mr. BLAND. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. MCKENNA. I insist upon my motion to adjourn until Wednesday if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] does not make his request.

Mr. SAYERS. As the gentleman from California seems to have understood that I would follow the temporary withdrawal of his motion to adjourn till Wednesday by a request that the House lay aside this case I shall do so now, and I ask that this case be laid aside and the House proceed to the consideration of the general deficiency bill.

Mr. GLOVER. I object.

Mr. CRISP. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MCKENNA. Then I insist upon my motion that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Wednesday next at 10 a. m.

The question was put, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCKENNA. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 91.

Mr. MCKENNA. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] as tellers.

Mr. CRISP. On that question I demand the yeas and nays. [After a pause.] I will withdraw the motion, and take the vote by tellers, as it will relieve the clerks to that extent.

Mr. COWLES. I ask by unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, be granted leave of absence until to-morrow morning, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ATKINSON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for the rest of this day.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. RAYNER, be excused for the rest of the day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. NEWTON, be granted leave of absence.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The tellers reported—ayes 10, noes 70.

Mr. MCKENNA. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted, and the tellers will resume their places.

Mr. CRISP. I demand the yeas and nays.

A MEMBER. What is the question, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next at 10 o'clock a. m.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is now nearly 5 o'clock, and I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from California takes precedence of that.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Well, as soon as this motion is disposed of then I ask the Chair to take up mine.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MCKENNA; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 3, nays 160, not voting 160; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn over.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by McCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that it had passed with amendments a bill (H. R. 325) for the relief of Mrs. Mary C. Duncan, requested a conference, and had appointed as conferees on its part Mr. PASCO, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. MITCHELL.

It also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, a bill (H. R. 11970) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota, as a separate reservation and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian titles to the remainder, and for other purposes; requested a conference, and had appointed as conferees on its part Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. JONES, of Arkansas.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

During the vote,

A MEMBER said: I ask, by unanimous consent, that the reading of the names of the members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. McKENNA. I object.

Mr. SPINOLA (to Mr. McKENNA). Do not object to that. Before we adjourn I want to take up another matter in relation to the soldiers' home in your State.

Mr. McKENNA. I withdraw the objection.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of this day:

Mr. HOOKER with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. GROUT.

Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana.

Mr. WALKER with Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. HARE with Mr. ATKINSON.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. McKENNA. No quorum.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The House can not transact any business, as the vote shows that there is not a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken on the motion to adjourn I wish to ask by unanimous consent that instead of adjourning the House take a recess from now until half past 7 o'clock this evening, for the purpose of giving an opportunity to those having in charge the presentation of the statues of Lewis Cass, Fulton, and Muhlenberg this evening, no other business to be transacted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CRISP. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Why does the gentleman object?

Mr. CRISP. Because I want to ask the House to stand by me and press this election to an issue.

Mr. RANDALL. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] has made a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CRISP. I was going to ask the yeas and nays on that, to see whether the House will adjourn or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, well, if the gentleman objects——

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and there were—ayes 74, noes 61.

Mr. CRISP. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 95, nays 85, not voting 143; as follows:

So the House decided to adjourn.

Mr. HERBERT (before the result of the vote was announced). I ask unanimous consent for the passage of the following resolution——

The SPEAKER. No request for unanimous consent can be entertained. The House has just voted (and the result has not been announced) on a motion to adjourn, which, of course, if carried, will terminate all proceedings.

Mr. DUNHAM and Mr. CRISP asked unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The following additional pairs were announced, for the rest of the day:

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. STRUBLE.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. FUNSTON.

Mr. MACDONALD with Mr. TURNER, of Kansas.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.

Mr. RICHARDSON with Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan.

The vote was announced as above stated, and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 12640) granting a pension to John Nagle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LONG: Of 25 citizens of Randolph, Mass.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 26, 1889.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings will be read.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal may be omitted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; we had better have the Journal read. It is too early to begin to dispense with it.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that there is no quorum present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and after some little delay the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Dawes,	Harris,	Reagan,
Bate,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Butler,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Coke,	George,	Paddock,	Teller,
Cullom,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Daniel,	Gray,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Hale,	Plumb,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-nine Senators having responded, a quorum being present, the Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and if there be no motion to correct or amend the Journal, it will stand approved.

DEPUTY MARSHALS IN NORTHERN NEW YORK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 15th instant, a list of the general deputy marshals appointed during the last six months by Walter H. Bunn, marshal of the United States for the northern district of New York; which, on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee to Examine into the Condition of the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Michigan, praying for the submission to the States of a national prohibitory constitutional amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Michigan, praying for legislation concerning certain land grants in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present the petition of Rev. George F. Magoun, of Iowa; Rev. James G. Dougherty, of Kansas; Rev. D. A. Morehouse, of Maine; Rev. William L. Bray, of Michigan, and Rev. Frank G. Clark, of Iowa, constituting a committee appointed by the national council of the Congregational churches of the United States, representing 4,277 churches and 436,379 members and other persons connected therewith, praying for legislation for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors on Indian reservations and all places subject to the legislative jurisdiction of the United States, on military reservations, etc., and subjecting imported and transported liquors to the operation of State laws, and in favor of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of such liquors.

The petition is brief, it comes from a religious body of great force and standing in the country, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the petition which he has just presented may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa desire to have the petition printed as a document?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the petition may be printed as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be printed as a document, and lie on the table, the appropriate committee having reported on the subject.

Mr. BLAIR presented resolutions of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Ringgold, Barton Chapel, and Frostburgh, Jefferson County, Pennsylvania, in favor of the passage of the Sunday-rest bill; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

DISMAL SWAMP CANAL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask leave to present to the Senate, to be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce, a letter addressed to me by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, covering a communication to him from the Register of the Treasury and from the Solicitor of the Treasury, inclosing a document that was printed January 21, 1878, on the subject of the Dismal Swamp Canal, in reference to which I had the honor to introduce a resolution the other day. The matter is, as I think, of so great public importance that I move that these papers be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10721) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Cummings Landing, Lincoln County, Arkansas.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10319) to authorize the Natchitoches Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River in Louisiana, reported it without amendment.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2862) granting a pension to William Ford, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 12604) to restore the pension of Ann G. Barker; and

A bill (H. R. 10725) to increase the pension of Elizabeth M. Allen.

SURETIES OF JAMES W. DEMBY.

Mr. GEORGE. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3737) for the relief of Sterling H. Tucker and others. A similar House bill was passed by both Houses at the last session of Congress and failed to become a law because it was not presented to the President in time for him to examine it. It will take but a minute to pass it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered and put on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. For information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Sterling H. Tucker, William P. Grace, Elhanon J. Searl, Josiah H. Demby, Samuel Bard, and William G. Pennington, or their estates, be, and they and each of them are hereby, released from any and all liability as the sureties upon the official bond of James W. Demby, formerly pension agent, the said release to take effect upon the payment of the legal costs heretofore accrued in the prosecution of said claim by the United States: Provided, That all the rights and remedies of the Government on said bond as against said James W. Demby shall in no manner be affected hereby, but remain in full force and effect in law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the bill may be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] or the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to state briefly the ground on which these sureties should be relieved.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The reason given in asking for the discharge of these securities is that this bond was made immediately after the close of the war; the principal went out of office, and for twenty years perhaps there was no claim made by the Government. I do not recollect the exact length of time, but it was a long period. In the mean time all of the securities became insolvent except one. He has a small amount of money; and the neglect of the United States Government to compel the principal to settle in a reasonable time or to collect from the sureties is the reason why it seems to me unjust that the Government of the United States should ask that the remaining security should be rendered bankrupt by the prosecution of the claim after such a long lapse of time.

Mr. HARRIS. That time was extended to twenty years or thereabouts?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. To about twenty years.

Mr. HARRIS. That statement is satisfactory.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. R. WHEATON AND C. H. CHAMBERLAIN—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands I report back the bill (S. 3646) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California, with the President's veto message, and recommend that the bill be passed notwithstanding the veto.

This bill has twice passed both branches of Congress at the present session. At the first session it failed because it was not signed by the President and was received by him within ten days of the adjournment. At the present session it was vetoed. It was vetoed upon the supposition or fact, whichever the case may be, that the testimony showed that certain clerks had been employed by the claimants, who were register and receiver of a land office in California during a period named, and that when the Government came to act upon the matter and clerks were authorized to be employed $100 a month was allowed by the Government, but that there was no showing that the register and receiver had, during the time for which the compensation was claimed for clerk-hire, paid out that sum.

I have since received an affidavit from one of the clerks who was employed, stating that he did receive during the period mentioned $100 a month, and that another clerk named, who is now out of the country, and whose affidavit can not be obtained, received $100 a month paid by these parties, covering the precise point of objection made by the Executive.

I may say that I report the bill back with this recommendation with the consent, at least, of all the members of the Committee on Public Lands who are in the city. I ask to have the affidavit read and that the vote be then taken upon the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks for the present consideration of the report?

Mr. DOLPH. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The question is, Shall the bill pass notwithstanding the objections of the President of the United States? The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask for the reading of the affidavit to which I referred.

Mr. HALE and others. Let it go.

Mr. DOLPH. Very well; let it go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called on the question, Shall the bill pass notwithstanding the objections of the President of the United States?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], and therefore withhold my vote. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the negative). Is the name of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not recorded.

Mr. GEORGE. I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi withdraws his vote.

Mr. SAWYER (after having voted in the affirmative). Is the name of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not recorded.

Mr. SAWYER. Then I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his vote.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—35.

ESTATE OF J. J. PULLIAM.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 751) for the relief of the estate of J. J. Pulliam, deceased, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment and agree to the same.

GEORGE F. HOAR,
WILLIAM M. STEWART,
JOHN C. SPOONER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. J. STONE,
O. B. THOMAS,
THEO. S. WILKINSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3995) to authorize the Montgomery and Sylacauga Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tallapoosa River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3996) granting a pension to Henry Sturtevant; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That J. Goldsborough Bruff have leave to withdraw his petition and papers in regard to the heraldic arms of the United States of America from the files of the Committee on Printing.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter of the 28th ultimo from the major-general commanding the Army, recommending the purchase of the site of Fort Elliott, Texas, together with a copy of House Executive Document No. 106, Fiftieth Congress, second session, embracing an estimate for the purchase of the site in question.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that that communication lie on the table. That matter is involved in the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending the appointment of a clerk to make a thorough investigation into the records of the Interior Department and of the late corporation of Washington City, with a view to the ascertaining of the title of the United States to certain building lots in the city of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 314) for the relief of Henry M. Rector;

A bill (S. 3778) to establish the Lincoln land district in the Territory of New Mexico; and Joint resolution (S. R. 137) providing for additional telegraphic facilities in the city of Washington during the inaugural ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1889.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 11678) providing for the erection of sundry light-houses and fog-signals in Lakes Erie, Huron, Michigan, and Superior;

A bill (H. R. 12324) for the establishment of a light-house station on St. Catharine Island, State of Georgia; and

A bill (H. R. 12430) providing for the establishment of the light and fog-signal at Humboldt, Cal., upon a more secure site, and for the establishment of a light-ship at or near the wreck of the steam-ship Oregon, in New York Harbor.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the foregoing bills, and had appointed Mr. CLARDY, Mr. LAGAN, and Mr. JOHN R. BROWN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, and had agreed to the one hundred and tenth amendment of the Senate to the bill with an amendment; that it asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RANDALL, Mr. FORNEY, and Mr. RYAN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11970) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. PEEL, Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi, and Mr. NELSON managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 325) for the relief of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan;

A bill (H. R. 3721) authorizing the President to appoint William English an officer in the regular Army of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 12414) to amend section 2579 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11527) to establish lights on the western end of Coney Island, New York; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. PLUMB. On the 20th day of this month there was appointed a committee of conference on the part of the Senate on the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States uuder the provision of the homestead laws only, consisting of Messrs. PLUMB, PADDOCK, and BERRY. On account of the public business which I have charge of in connection with appropriations and otherwise I am constrained to decline to further serve upon that conference committee, and I ask for the substitution in my place of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] also stated to me that he desired to be excused.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask also to be excused from further service on the conference committee, and ask for the appointment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in my place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and appoints in the place of the Senator from Nebraska the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that at the completion of the consideration of the Army appropriation bill to-day the Senate shall devote three hours succeeding to the Calendar of unobjected cases, under Rule VIII.

Mr. BUTLER. That is a good idea.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the Army appropriation bill the Senate proceed with the cases upon the Calendar to which there is no objection, under Rule VIII. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. May I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that that time be devoted to House bills?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think it wise to limit it in that way. There are a few Senate bills and they can be disposed of by objection, if any one wishes to object.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know that I shall object, but my object was to facilitate business by passing bills from the House that might become laws on our action.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to remind the Senator and the Chair that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], yesterday gave notice as soon as the Army appropriation bill was disposed of he would ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Indian depredation claims bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CULLOM. I ask what length of time the Senator desires to devote to the consideration of these unobjected cases?

Mr. PLUMB. Three hours, at the conclusion of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I expected immediately after the disposition of the Army appropriation bill to call up the conference report on the interstate-commerce bill. That has been lying here for some days waiting for a favorable opportunity to take it up, and the request of the Senator from Kansas is going to interfere with the disposition of that bill to-day. I shall feel like objecting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent, then, that the bill I have named be taken up immediately afterwards.

Mr. BUTLER. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. DAWES. I do not wish to interfere with the report of the committee of conference, of course, but I desire to get the consent of the Senate immediately after the consideration of that report for the Indian depredation claims bill. I feel bound to present it at that time if I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can present but one request at a time.

Mr. DAWES. Whether I ought to object to the request now pending depends upon whether the Senate will give me the opportunity to bring up that bill immediately after these orders desired by the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Illinois. What I desire is that the Senate will allow me to present for its consideration the depredation bill immediately after the Senator from Illinois disposes of his conference report.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Massachusetts can not make a contract with the Senate for any such purpose.

Mr. DAWES. So I see.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas that at the conclusion of the consideration of the Army appropriation bill the Senate will proceed for three hours thereafter to the consideration of cases on the Calendar to which there is no objection, under Rule VIII?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to a motion for executive business, I have no objection.

Mr. REAGAN. If that is to postpone the bringing up of the conference report by the Senator from Illinois, I shall object.

Mr. BUTLER. It does not postpone it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas object?

Mr. REAGAN. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], coming over from yesterday.

Mr. VEST. I gave notice yesterday, on behalf of the Committee on Commerce, that I would ask the Senate after the termination of the morning business to-day to consider bridge bills, several of which I reported this morning. There are a number of these bills which should be attended to at once for the reason that the railroads which desire to use these bridges are in process of construction, and that construction is stopped as a matter of course until this legislation shall be had. I suppose that it will be useless now to ask the Senate to take up the bills at this time, but I give notice that I shall move for a recess at the usual hour of adjournment to-day in order to have a night session to consider the bridge bills upon the Calendar and dispose of them.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that ought to be done. It is generally understood by the Senate that these bridge bills are looked over by a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, specially appointed, and all the requirements that have been adjudged by the Senate as important to be put in them are put there, so that there is no probability of any discussion about them. The only time required practically is the reading of the bills, and I shall be glad to see them passed as early as possible.

Mr. VEST. That is so.

Mr. SAWYER. As we meet at 11 o'clock it will be very difficult to get a quorum at an evening session. I suggest to the Senator that he ask unanimous consent to take the bridge bills up now.

Mr. ALLISON. They will take too much time now. I regret exceedingly that the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has objected to the unanimous consent asked for after the conclusion of the Army bill. I think it would facilitate business if these bills could be taken up during the three hours that will be devoted to the Calendar after the Army bill is disposed of. I desire very much to go on with the Army bill this morning in order that the amendments may be returned to the House of Representatives and the bill disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be greatly obliged if the Senate will relieve him from difficulty and embarrassment by agreeing upon an order of business. The importunity for recognition is incessant; the Chair desires to be strictly impartial; but when many Senators rise simultaneously or are standing at the same time, it is obviously impossible that the Chair should observe the rule requiring the Senator first rising to be first recognized. There seems to be no other way except to keep a list of those who apply for recognition, and that practically places the disposition of business under the control of the Chair, which the Chair desires to avoid. It would greatly facilitate the public business and relieve the Chair if the Senate would agree upon an order of business to be observed for the remainder of the session concerning the Calendar.

Mr. REAGAN. At the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois and some others I withdraw the objection I made to the request of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then recurs upon the request of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] that at the conclusion of the Army appropriation bill the Senate proceed for three hours to the consideration of cases upon the Calendar to which there is no objection, under Rule VIII.

Mr. HARRIS. Beginning at what point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the point reached when the Calendar was last under consideration. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

LAND OFFICES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] coming over from yesterday as unfinished business of the morning hour will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to report, for the information of the Senate, what, if any, action has been taken by him towards the discontinuance of United States land offices, the number and the names of public land offices, the aggregate number of acres of public lands in each original, the number of acres heretofore actually sold by the Government, and in what manner disposed of, whether by sale for cash, or entries under the homestead, pre-emption, timber-culture, or desert-land acts, and what part of the same have been actually patented, and thus segregated from the body of the public lands.

And be it further resolved, That the President be, and hereby is, requested to withhold the order, if any is contemplated, or suspend its operation if made, for the discontinuance of such offices, until the facts and reasons upon which such action or contemplated action is based shall have been fully communicated to the Senate.

The resolutions were agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. VEST. I should like very much to supplement the agreement which has been made by adding to it that the bridge bills upon the Calendar shall be taken up first and disposed of; and if I could have unanimous consent to that, it might obviate the necessity for a night session. All we want is to dispose of these bills and ask for committees of conference where amendments are made. I can not state accurately the number of them, but there must be from twenty to twenty-five such bills upon the Calendar. The necessity at this late stage of the session is for the appointment of conferees; otherwise the bills will fail. Other Senators in the Chamber are as much interested in the matter or more so than I am.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I rise to make a suggestion to the Senator from Missouri, who asks for a modification of the agreement which has been made by unanimous consent. I wish to suggest that the bridge bills on the Calendar will probably not be objected to in a single instance by any Senator, and it will only require the time necessary to read those bills; they can be passed as easily at a night session as they could within the three hours which have just been set apart for the consideration of the Calendar. I suggest, therefore, that at 5 or half past 5 o'clock, by unanimous consent, the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock for the purpose of considering to-night the bridge bills.

Several SENATORS. Only.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Bridge bills only.

Mr. HOAR. I think that most of the Senate, when the hour of half past 5 comes, would rather wait here another hour than to take a recess. I think the Senator had better wait until that time comes.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. I was about to suggest that at the conclusion of the three hours which have been agreed to be devoted to unobjected cases on the Calendar we can take up the bridge bills and pass them perhaps in three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It will take a longer time than that to read them. It is only a question of reading the bridge bills. There will be no difficulty about them except the time consumed in the reading, and my opinion is that it will be very much better to have them disposed of at an evening session.

Mr. HOAR. Let us settle that at 5 o'clock, and not now.

LOUISA V. DE KILPATRICK.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill (S. 1488) granting an increase of pension to Louisa V. de Kilpatrick, widow of Maj. Gen. Judson Kilpatrick, United States Volunteers, was passed by the House of Representatives with an amendment, and a committee of conference was asked for by the Senate. I now move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate concur in the amendment made to this bill by the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12383) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 16, to strike out lines 9 and 10, as follows:

For officers' quarters at the post at Columbus, Ohio, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, to strike out lines 18 and 19, as follows:

For the purchase of the site of Fort Elliott, Texas, $17,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Purchase of site for Fort Elliott, Texas: For payment for sections 47, 53, 55, and 67, in block A 5 of surveys made for the Houston and Great Northern Railroad Company, according to the sketch of the surveys in said block No. A 5, certified by the commissioner of the general land office of the State of Texas, January 5, 1877, to be correct, $17,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 9, after the word "including," to strike out "heating apparatus and;" so as to make the clause read:

Construction and repairs of hospitals: For construction and repairs of hospitals, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including hereafter the Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 14, after the word "construction," to strike out "and repairs;" so as to read:

For construction of quarters for hospital stewards, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 14, after the word "depots," at the end of the clause making appropriations for "clothing, camp, and garrison equipage," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the several sums appropriated for the Quartermaster's Department by this act, including their credits, shall be available for three months after the expiration of the fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Engineer Department," on page 19, line 17, after the word "employed," to insert "for periods of not less than ten days;" in line 19, before the word "not," to strike out the word "any" and insert the word "and;" and in line 22, after the word "machinery," to strike out the word "clerk-hire;" so as to make the clause read:

Engineer depot at Willets Point, New York: Incidental expenses of the depot, including fuel, chemicals, stationery, extra-duty pay to soldiers employed for periods of not less than ten days as artificers on work in addition to and not strictly in line of their military duties, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, draughtsmen, printers, lithographers, photographers, engine-drivers, teamsters, repairs of and for materials to repair public buildings, machinery, and unforeseen expenses, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, at the end of the appropriations for "Engineer Department," to strike out line 11, as follows:

In all, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, to strike out lines 11 and 12, as follows:

For the purchase of machine-guns, musket caliber, of American manufacture, $20,000.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he will not allow this clause to stand in the bill instead of striking it out. I desire to say in regard to it that an appropriation of $20,000 for the purchase of machine guns was put on the fortification bill by an amendment in the Senate, which was the same as this item in the present bill. The House of Representatives have put the provision in the Army appropriation bill. The fortification bill has gone into conference. From former experience I am afraid we may not have any fortification bill become a law this year, and that the appropriation which both the House and the Senate desire shall be made may in some way fall. If the committee will allow this provision to stand as it passed the House, that is an end of the matter and there will be no danger of losing it, and in the committee of conference on the fortification bill they can strike it out or not insist upon the amendment, and then the whole matter will be ended. I wish the committee would allow this amendment to be disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Connecticut states truly that this provision was inserted by the Senate as an amendment to the fortification bill. The Senate believed that it more properly belonged to that bill; and as that bill is now in conference I prefer to allow this amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations to stand.

I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that there will be no trouble about this matter. It will be found in one or the other of the bills when the appropriation bills are finally passed.

Mr. PLATT. If that is to be the result, of course I can make no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no doubt that what I suppose I may call the pledge of the Senator from Iowa will be fulfilled in one or the other of the bills. I do not understand his suggestion that the provision is more properly in the fortification bill, because these guns are used more for the Army in general than they are for coast defense. I do not see the propriety of the suggestion and can not comprehend the philosophy of it. To simply leave this thing where the House put it is to settle the matter. If the Senator thinks he has good reason to think it will not be lost I shall give it up, but this is the natural place for it.

Mr. ALLISON. There seems to be a deep interest in this question from many sources, indicating that the provision ought to be on this bill. I have not been able to comprehend that situation; but inasmuch as if it is here, it will not be put in the fortifications bill, I shall withdraw any scruples I have and allow the amendment to be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, line 13, after the word "manufacture," to insert "repair and issue;" and in line 19, before the word "ordnance stores," to insert "ordnance and;" so as to make the clause read:

For manufacture, repair, and issue of arms at the national armories, $400,000: Provided, That not more than $60,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department in all its branches shall be applied to the payment of civilian clerks in said Department: Provided further, That hereafter the cost of the Ordnance Department of all ordnance and ordnance stores issued to the States, Territories, and District of Columbia, under the act of February 12, 1887, shall be credited to the appropriation for "manufacture of arms at national armories," and used to procure like ordnance stores, and that said appropriation shall be available until exhausted, not exceeding two years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, to strike out the clause from line 11 to line 20, inclusive, as follows:

That the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to cause examinations and tests to be made in converting the existing ordnance of the War Department into steel-lined breech-loading torpedo howitzers for throwing high explosives, according to the plans of Stephen Emmons, as stated in his memorial of February 2, 1889, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, to strike out the clause from line 21 to line 23, inclusive, as follows:

For the purchase, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of land convenient to the Watervliet arsenal suitable for proof-firing of seacoast guns, $15,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The Board of Ordnance and Fortification is hereby directed to examine and report upon a site for an ordnance testing and proving ground to be used in the testing and proving of heavy ordnance, having in view in the selection of said site its accessibility by land and water, means of transportation, and suitability for the purpose intended, and also the actual and reasonable cost and value of the land and the least sum for which the same can be procured. Said board shall report thereon to the Secretary of War, to be submitted to Congress at its next session; and in case the said board shall select a site and recommend its purchase, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to secure written proposals for the sale of the tract so recommended, until such time as Congress may act upon the recommendation of said board and of the Secretary of War.

For the necessary expenses under the foregoing provision, $1,000, so much thereof as may be necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out and inserting.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose the question can be divided. I wish a division on striking out the first clause, and I call the attention of my colleague to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand then that it is not possible to have a vote upon the question of restoring the item in lines 21, 22, and 23, on page 22, alone by itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be reached by disagreeing to the entire amendment. The motion being to strike out and insert is not divisible. If the motion of the committee is not agreed to, the lines proposed to be stricken out remain in the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to call the attention of my colleague [Mr. EVARTS] to the provision in lines 21, 22, and 23, on page 22. I understand he has some documents which bear very strongly on the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. I find that the Senators from New York antagonize this amendment because, I suppose, they wish to retain this little provision for the purchase of some ground at the Watervliet arsenal. I do not understand them to antagonize the general provision which we have inserted here respecting the availability and propriety of purchasing a testing ground for the general use of the Board of Ordnance that we now have. I should be glad, if there was any way of doing it, to separate these two provisions and test the sense of the Senate in striking out these three lines. So I am entirely willing, by unanimous consent, that that should be done, because if those three lines are retained in the bill it will be still necessary to insert the other provision which we propose to put in. So, I hope, by unanimous consent we may consider the question on striking out the lines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be treated as two amendments, and not as an amendment to strike out and insert.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question recurs on the motion to strike out lines 21, 22, and 23, on page 22.

Mr. HAWLEY. I probably missed something that has been said, having been called out for a moment; but I do not understand that these propositions have any necessary connection. Did the Senator refer to the amendment in italics?

Mr. ALLISON. I just stated to the Senate that these two amendments are not necessarily connected; that if the provision found on lines 21, 22, and 23, of page 22, should be retained it would still be necessary to insert the words in italics.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, as I understand it, the only question is now whether what we have already in previous examinations that have been made and reported upon and have been considered heretofore by the committee and have also gone so far as to produce this provision from the House, shall also be merged in the provisional arrangement for inquiries before this is passed upon.

The matter in italics, as I understand, is provisional for further inquiries on certain topics, and would perhaps cover this if it is necessary that it should be postponed; but as I understand the recommendation of General Benét, the head of the Ordnance Department, is that this provision ought to be restored, I should hope that we might have a separate vote upon it and that we might agree that lines 21, 22, and 23, on page 22, should remain in the bill. The other parts that are so marked should be omitted, and the general provision, beginning at line 24 on page 22, and continuing to line 16 of the next page, should be a part of the bill.

There has been heretofore in both Houses a hearing and examination in which this question of acquiring at a reasonable price a parcel of land convenient to the Watervliet arsenal has been considered, and I should hope, therefore, there can be found no adequate reason for striking that out of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to strike out lines 21, 22, and 23, on page 22, of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the question is put I ask that the letter of the Chief of Ordnance which I send to the desk may be read. I think after it is read the Senate will see that it is wise to submit this question also to the Board of Ordnance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1889.

SIR: I beg to call your attention to an item of appropriation in the Army bill as it passed the House of $15,000 for the purchase of land convenient to the Watervliet arsenal, and suitable for proof-firing of seacoast guns (page 22, lines 22 and 23), which was stricken out as the bill was reported to the Senate. In connection with this matter I would state as follows:

The procurement of limited proof-ground facilities convenient to the gun factory was deemed so essential as a matter of convenience and economy in connection with the manufacture of cannon at the Watervliet arsenal that a special estimate was submitted from this Department under date of December 14, 1888 (see Executive Document No. 39, House of Representatives, Fiftieth Congress, second session, page 3, herewith). The amount specified in that estimate was $20,000, but it has been ascertained since that the sum of $15,000 will probably be sufficient for the purchase of a suitable site. The object of firing facilities near the gun factory is very different from that had in view with a regularly established proving and testing ground such as that at Sandy Hook. In the manufacture of guns it may be necessary to set out a lining-tube by means of firing before completing the gun, or firings may be required in adjusting the gas-checks and fittings of guns, or for the few proof rounds prescribed prior to the issue of guns to the service. It would therefore be of manifest advantage and economy to have such limited firing facilities near at hand to the gun factory. The proof ground at Sandy Hook is none the less necessary, for the work to be done there is on a very much larger scale. Firings must be made there for range and accuracy, for prolonged tests of endurance, and for all extended tests of ordnance material and explosives. Such a proving-ground will always be required for general purposes in addition to the facilities for proof-butts proposed in this appropriation for Watervliet arsenal.

As to the extent of land that is required for this purpose, it should not be less than 100 acres, but as near 500 acres as the appropriation will permit. If the land can be obtained at a moderate price a large area will be an advantage with the proof-butts near the center of it. There is suitable land on the west side and adjacent to the arsenal, but it may be held at too high a price to admit of its purchase. About 8 miles directly west of the arsenal is a tract of land of 500 acres which can be purchased at from $25 to $30 per acre. This land can be reached by the Delaware and Hudson and New York Central Railroads. In a distance of 12 miles there are no long bridges to cross. A proof-butt in the center of a tract of land approximating a square mile in area can be a nuisance to no one. Should this latter tract be selected a branch railroad track from one-half a mile to 1 mile in extent will be required eventually in order to reach the firing point.

I respectfully request that if practicable this item of $15,000 may be restored in conference.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, it will be seen, I think, that the recommendation of General Benét is clear and decisive that this item should be included in the bill. It will be observed that the language here is not for land adjacent, but—

For the purchase, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of land convenient to the Watervliet arsenal suitable for proof-firing of seacoast guns, $15,000.

So that either alternative that is considered and presented by General Benét would be covered by this discretion vested in the Secretary of War; and really it seems hardly suitable that we should postpone a matter of this kind because there are other matters that may need to be inquired into. Primarily in the course that we are now pursuing in reference to our military and naval purposes we should lose as little time after we have arrived at a conclusion as is possible if this $15,000 is to obtain convenient to this arsenal some land that will suit our purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Last year in the appropriation act for fortifications Watervliet arsenal was provided for as a gun factory for the purpose of assembling heavy ordnance. It is stated in various ways that the present proving-grounds at Sandy Hook are not large enough or extensive enough to enable the ordnance officers to prove the heavy guns, and a good deal of information has been given respecting the selection of some other grounds for this purpose. It would seem that these grounds ought to be, if a suitable area can be found, either in the neighborhood of Watervliet arsenal or in the neighborhood of Sandy Hook.

The Committee on Appropriations have inserted here a provision authorizing the board of officers having charge of the manufacture of these guns to examine into this question and report at the next session of Congress, and the committee do not believe it wise to forestall this question by saying that $15,000 shall be appropriated for this purpose convenient to Watervliet arsenal. If suitable proving-grounds are to be procured they will cost a much larger sum than that here proposed, and require a much larger area than 500 acres.

Therefore the committee believe that the whole question ought to go over until this examination can be had. I will say to the Senator, what he already knows, that there will be ample time at the next session of Congress to purchase proving-grounds, because these heavy guns will not be ready for firing until some time after the next session of Congress.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, it is very seldom indeed that I find the Senator from Iowa lacking in precisely accurate information. I do not know but that this may be the first instance. The ground they are speaking of here is not the ordinary trial ground for the full force of their guns. I suppose the Senator understands that.

Mr. ALLISON. I have just had a letter read at the Secretary's desk from the Chief of Ordnance stating exactly what the Senator now states. I understand perfectly well that the Chief of Ordnance thinks he needs some little proof-firing to be made somewhere in the process of assembling these guns. That was just stated. That may be true, but it may be also true that the larger area for the final test of these guns may be made in the same neighborhood or at the same place. That was the argument I intended to make, not that I did not understand the views of the Chief of Ordnance upon this subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. A big pit might answer the same purpose. It is nothing but the test of the strength of the gun and incidentally of the excellence of the tubes, the chamber, and the plug that incloses the breech. I do not myself see why he needs 500 acres so far as that is concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut, who, I know, has given great attention to this subject, if he believes it to be a wise thing in the process of manufacturing these guns to have them carried out 12 miles from Watervliet arsenal in order to test them?

Mr. HAWLEY. If it can be done nearer the ground, I would say certainly do it there, even if you had to pay more money for it; but the Sandy Hook testing is something that comes afterwards, when the gun is entirely completed; when it is shown to have stood all the necessary tests as to bursting, and is fit for service, it then goes down and takes a long-range final trial. If the Senator will amend the amendment in italics here in line 24, and following to line 14 on the next page, so as to include a local testing ground at Watervliet arsenal, it would cover the subject. The only question I should have to ask then would be whether having, as we have, ordered the manufacture of great guns these rough parts will begin to be assembled at Watervliet before we may need the final grounds?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think the examination has already been made, and that it is not the ground adapted for the long testing of guns at Watervliet arsenal; that is, they can not test them for long firing without this ground costing a great deal, and it is not adapted to that. This testing is simply for the purpose of testing the strength of the metal with a view of testing the capacity of the guns for distance, and it does not at all come within the second provision.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations speaks with reference to the guns being carried 12 miles for testing. That is a matter of no consequence. This arsenal is on a canal, and they are transported there with practical ease for the purpose of testing them during the process of manufacture. It is for that that this appropriation is asked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations proposing to strike out lines 21, 22, and 23, on page 22.

Mr. GORMAN. As one member of the Committee on Appropriations I was governed very much in my vote upon this proposition to strike out by the experience we have had elsewhere. The fact is that in the manufacture of heavy ordnance for the Navy, nearly all of which is manufactured in Washington, they have selected a proving-ground for the purpose of testing those guns at Annapolis. They are conveyed from Washington to Annapolis for the ordinary firing; but the experience there has demonstrated that it would be great economy if there was a proving-ground near at hand sufficient not only for the first test but for the long-range firing, because it is very expensive to convey these guns from Washington to Annapolis. Hence we have a board from the Navy that is now looking for a proving-ground; and so with the Army.

As the chairman has stated, in the fortifications appropriation bill ample provision was made for the manufacture at Watervliet, but to test the guns properly it would become necessary, in view of economy and in every other respect, to have a ground where they not only make the first test but for the long-range firing. So I voted for, and I trust the Senate will adhere to it, to strike out this provision of the House bill and put the matter in the hands of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, so that they may select the ground where all this can be done with least expense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out lines 21, 22, and 23, on page 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the desire of the Senator from Iowa that the amendment proposing to insert shall be treated separately as to the two paragraphs?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; separately. I ask for a vote now on the part proposed to be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall that be treated as two questions?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 22, after line 23, to insert:

The Board of Ordnance and Fortification is hereby directed to examine and report upon a site for an ordnance testing and proving ground to be used in the testing and proving of heavy ordnance, having in view in the selection of said site its accessibility by land and water, means of transportation, and suitability for the purpose intended, and also the actual and reasonable cost and value of the land and the least sum for which the same can be procured. Said board shall report thereon to the Secretary of War, to be submitted to Congress at its next session; and in case the said board shall select a site and recommend its purchase, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to secure written proposals for the sale of the tract so recommended, until such time as Congress may act upon the recommendation of said board and of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLISON. To meet the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I move, after the word "ground," in line 2, to insert "including partial testing-ground convenient to Watervliet arsenal;" so that the board may also have this question before them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "ground," in line 2, on page 23, in the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee, it is proposed to insert:

Including partial testing-ground convenient to Watervliet arsenal.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 23, after line 14, to insert:

For the necessary expenses under the foregoing provision, $1,000, so much thereof as may be necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In line 16, after the word "dollars," it should read "or so much thereof."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert "or" before "so."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 24, to strike out the clause from line 16 to line 18, inclusive, as follows:

For necessary office expenses for completing the maps of the battle-field of Chickamauga, Georgia, $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, to strike out the clause from line 19 to line 22, inclusive, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of War to finish the surveys necessary to the completion of the maps of the battle-field of Chickamauga, Georgia, $1,200, or such part thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 22, to insert:

For finishing surveys and completing maps of battle-fields, $2,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 24, at the end of page 24, to insert:

Purchase of land adjoining military reservation at West Point: To enable the Secretary of War to purchase the 225 acres of land on the Hudson River, directly south of the military reservation at West Point, belonging to the estate of Edward V. Kinsley, in accordance with the valuation of the same made by a board appointed under the provisions of the Army appropriation act of September 22, 1888, and approved by the Secretary of War, as appears by his letter to Congress dated January 23, 1889, being House Executive Document No. 104, Fiftieth Congress, second session, $150,000: Provided, however, That such purchase shall not be completed nor any payment made for said land until the title thereof shall be duly approved by the Attorney-General, and the Attorney-General on such purchase shall cause to be filed in the department of the State of New York proper evidence of the purchase of said lands to complete ceding of jurisdiction thereof to the United States.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa who has charge of the bill if under this provision $150,000 will be paid for this property?

Mr. ALLISON. I so understand it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand that under the provision of this amendment $150,000 is to be paid for this property?

Mr. ALLISON. I so understand.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say in respect to the amendment that the information I have, which is from a private individual, is to the effect that this property is not worth more than about $20,000. For a long time it has been borne upon the assessment-rolls at $12,000, and now is assessed at $20,000. If it is assessed at a third of its value, then it would be only worth $50,000 or $60,000. It seems to me that it is quite improper that we should pass a law providing that this sum shall be paid for it without further examination or investigation into the case.

I understand further that the people who reside in that neighborhood are very much opposed to this proposed purchase by the Government, as it is to encroach upon the town and practically prevent the growth and extension of the town. Unless there is some very strong reason indeed why the Government should purchase the property, it is infinitely better to let the property remain in the hands of private parties. But the fact of which I have been advised is that up to within a year the property has been assessed at $12,000, and that it was increased only to $20,000, which makes it look, at least on the face of it, as if $150,000 was a very large sum of money to be paid for the property.

Mr. ALLISON. At the last session of Congress a provision was inserted in one of the appropriation bills, I think in the Army appropriation bill, providing for a board to investigate the situation as respects this property and to make an appraisal of it. I think three successive committees or boards who had visited West Point recommended that this land be purchased. The Secretary of War also recommended it. We provided that the superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point, General Parke, should be one of the members of this board. He is well known, I believe, to most Senators. The board assembled. General Parke was the chief of the board, and William F. Russell and John D. Kernan were the other two appraisers. The Senator from New York will know something more of the character of these gentlemen than I do. I understand that Mr. Kernan is a son of ex-Senator Kernan, who was formerly a member of this body. They find this property to be worth $150,000.

The people who own the property suggested to the Committee on Appropriations as respects this amendment that they were quite willing, and I thought perhaps from their letter that they were somewhat desirous, that there should be a reappraisement of the property. At least they were willing that the whole matter should be referred to the Secretary of War again with power to reappraise the property if he chose to do so, and that at that appraisal the property should be purchased. The committee after a pretty full examination of the subject believed that it was wiser to take the appraised value as fixed by these three gentlemen than to run the risk of another appraisement.

There is no doubt of the fact, I think, as clearly disclosed in all the reports, that it is a wise thing for the West Point Military Academy to have this additional property. It lies immediately adjacent to where most of the buildings of the academy are now situated, and it lies between the property of the academy and the village of Highland Falls. It is only a question whether the property should be sold for town or village or city lots which shall abut the property of the academy, or whether the Government shall have this area for its own uses and purposes. That is all there is in the case as far as I know.

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon the statement made by the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] I certainly would not like to vote an appropriation of $150,000 when we are assured that this property, which lies in his own State, is worth only one-third of that sum. I know General Parke, and I was somewhat surprised at the statement.

Mr. ALLISON. General Parke's report is here.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think under the circumstances we ought not to adopt the amendment against the statement made by the Senator from New York. I certainly would not vote for it, although I have no objection to the purchase.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not understand the Senator from New York to make a statement except from private information.

Mr. SHERMAN. He states his belief that the property has been assessed for taxation at from $12,000 to $20,000, and now the property leaps up to $150,000. I suppose I know the property. The valuation leaps up from $12,000 to $20,000, and it is proposed that it shall be sold to the Government for $150,000. I know the land there. It is a very hilly region. While it is a very important location and it may be valuable to the Government, $150,000 would seem to be out of all reason for 225 acres of land. I know nothing about it, and I should have voted for the amendment as a matter of course, but on the face of the statement of the Senator from New York I certainly will not vote for the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I believe this matter originated in the Military Committee; that is to say, the proposition to purchase this land adjoining the West Point reservation was recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs. It immediately adjoins the grounds. The beginning of it is but a short distance below the important buildings of the academy, and it lies on the road running south and parallel to the Hudson River. It has been held intact as a family estate for a long time.

One of the reasons why the managers of the academy desire to purchase this tract is because if they do not it inevitably will be cut up into village lots. The village runs up to a very short distance below the barracks and offices, etc., of West Point. It is better for the young men that they should be put in the middle of the reservation, some distance from a village. All the instructors and managers feel that that should be the case. So the various boards of impartial men of sense and experience who have visited that place from year to year under the law have thought it a very wise thing to get this land.

Now, how does there come to be so wide a difference in the estimates of the value of it? In the first place, some of it has been held as pasture land, some as meadow land, but largely for ornament as the seat of a country gentleman. What its value actually there would be I do not know; that is to say, I do not know what the annual revenue of the owner was from it. Much of it is not so very valuable as farming land, but it is a noble estate as it stands.

If the owners of that estate choose to cut it up into village lots, I personally have not the slightest doubt that they would get a great deal more than $150,000 for it.

Incidentally Parke mentions in one of his papers that not a great while ago a lot was sold just below the Kinsley estate on the village site and a saloon was put up. We do not want a row of cheap saloons and taverns and all that sort of thing lining that bank from the village up through the Kinsley estate to the borders of the academy. It is a noble situation, I should guess 175 feet above the Hudson River, and with the Hudson River in view every step of the road down to the Kinsley estate. There are some noble homes all along there. You can imagine that this land will become very valuable when put into the market.

I understand that the heirs look at it in that way. If the settlement is made now in accordance with this amendment they get $150,000, and they put that upon interest; but if the settlement is not made they might get $170,000 a year hence, which would not be worth so much to them as $150,000 cash now, which they could invest and upon which they would be drawing interest.

It seems to me, on looking this matter over—and I have watched it a little for the interest of the academy—that probably it would be best to take the estimate of this board. The board was composed, as the chairman of the committee has said, of General Parke, whose high character and sound sense everybody knows, one of the noblest men in the whole Army; Judge Russell, of Saugerties, a man of high standing, and John D. Kernan, of Utica, a man also of high standing and the son of ex-Senator Kernan. I think they have made a fair estimate. At the same time I admit that as a rule I would not vote for a purchase upon a fixed sum here. I would rather have it appraised over again even if we paid $25,000 more for it, by reason of the precedent. But I say in support of the proposition of the committee that I think the committee acted upon sound reasons for the good of the Government. However, if the Senate thinks that this kind of a purchase is not wise, I suppose it can wait, and the Government will probably pay more; I do not know.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, there is no question but that the acquisition of the ground referred to for the use of the Military Academy is very important. It comes up right close to the principal buildings of the academy, as stated by the Senator from Connecticut. It is suggested by the officers in control there that it comes up so close as to permit the putting so near the barracks of establishments for the sale of liquor and other demoralizing establishments as to injure the morals of the cadets. It makes the limit, as suggested by them, so close that the cadets between roll-call may go out there and be subject to whatever injurious influence may be brought to bear.

An examination of the ground showed that it was important that it should be acquired by the Government. As to the price proposed here, I, of course, am without information. It should be suggested, however, that it is not merely the ground that is valuable. There are a number of buildings on this ground, and there are stone fences upon it. I do not know what the value of the improvements may be, but there are considerable improvements on this ground. It seems to me that the price, however, is very high, but General Parke, with whom most of us are acquainted, is a man of very high character. I do not know Mr. Russell. Mr. Kernan also is a man of very high character. I see that these gentlemen took an oath of office preparatory to the valuation of this property in which they said that they would faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which they were about to enter, which involved this valuation. I take it that these gentlemen must have acted conscientiously. They recommend the purchase of this property at the price stated. The Secretary of War concurs in that recommendation, and he, too, has been on the ground and has examined it, and knows the importance of the acquisition of this particular piece of ground.

I understand that the Committee on Appropriations, in passing upon this, recognizing the necessity for the purchase of this ground, are apprehensive that the Government may save nothing and may lose something by a subsequent valuation of the property. While it seems to me the price is very high, I am inclined to be governed by the judgment of those who have been charged under the law with fixing the valuation, and I shall therefore sustain the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The parties owning this property are quite willing that we should insert a provision for a re-examination of the property and for its condemnation, but the committee on the whole believed it wiser not to provide for a further examination and condemnation of the property, because they believed it would cost the Government more than it would to purchase it at the appraised price. But if Senators think there should be a further examination, especially in view of what the Senator from Ohio has stated upon this subject, I will offer an amendment to the amendment which will cover that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment of the committee the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War, after a re-examination of the report of said board and a further consideration of the question of the value of said land, may, if he deems it for the best interests of the Government, proceed and acquire title to said 225 acres of land by condemnation thereof under judicial proceedings, to be commenced in the appropriate circuit court of the United States, which court shall, for the purpose of ascertaining the true value of said land, appoint three commissioners who shall be competent and disinterested appraisers; and all the proceedings for the condemnation aforesaid shall be in accordance, except as herein provided, with the act of Congress of August 1, 1888, entitled "An act to authorize the condemnation of land for sites of public buildings, and for other purposes."

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand that the Senator from Iowa offers this as a substitute for or as an addition to the committee's amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I offer it as a proviso to be added to the amendment of the committee. It will allow the Secretary of War, if upon further examination he deems this appraisal too high, to proceed to the condemnation of this property. Of course that means that it will be acquired at whatever price the condemnation proceeding shall fix.

I offer it in view of what the Senator from New York and the Senator from Ohio have said, but my own belief is that we shall pay more for it under this proceeding than the amount proposed to be appropriated in the committee's amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. That can be disposed of on this question. I assume that the heirs or owners of this property are willing to take $150,000 for it. Suppose a limitation be put in not to exceed $150,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I shall agree to that, if the Senator will propose it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed modification will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Insert "not exceeding the amount herein appropriated" in the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. How can you have an appraisement where the limit is fixed?

Mr. GORMAN. As I understand this case, the Committee on Military Affairs, three or four boards of visitors who have gone to West Point, the commander at West Point, and the Secretary of War all insist that this property is absolutely necessary to facilitate matters at West Point. The owners of the property came here a year ago and offered to sell the property at a fixed price, I understand, but the proposition came up to condemn it as is provided for in the amendment to the amendment. It was thought unwise by the Senate and by Congress that we should enter upon that proceeding, for the reason that it might cost a great deal more, and therefore it was suggested by the committee that a board of officers to be appointed by the Secretary of War should appraise the property and ascertain its value. They are the appointees of the United States, and after due consideration they say that $150,000 is a reasonable amount.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my modification of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I have nothing further to say.

Mr. ALLISON. I will let it stand upon the condemnation proceedings. I think the Government ought to take its chances with the heirs, if the question is resubmitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This concludes the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STEWART. On page 21, after line 10, I move to insert:

For the purchase by the Secretary of War of three pneumatic dynamite guns of 15-inch caliber, and the necessary machinery to fire and handle the same, ammunition and carriages for the same, to be placed and mounted ready for use, free of cost to the Government, at such point or points in the harbor of San Francisco as may be designated by the Secretary of War, $187,500, or so much thereof as he may deem proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. GORMAN. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment on page 16, line 9, striking out the clause: "For officers' quarters at the post at Columbus, Ohio, $20,000."

Mr. ALLISON. I will state that since that amendment was reported from the Committee on Appropriations the committee has made a further examination and find that this is quite a large military post, and that these quarters are necessary. So I hope that amendment will be non-concurred in by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment was agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. It was agreed to in Committee of the Whole. I ask that it may be non-concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the chairman of the committee how many soldiers are at Columbus?

Mr. ALLISON. The Adjutant-General of the Army was telegraphed to for information on this subject. He telegraphs me, and I have his telegram here, stating that there are 700 soldiers there at this time, and I believe 15 officers.

Mr. HALE. At Columbus, Ohio?

Mr. ALLISON. At Columbus, Ohio. It seems to be a large military post.

Mr. HALE. What are they doing there?

Mr. ALLISON. They must be quietly——

Mr. HALE. Engaged in the arts of peace?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it not a recruiting station?

Mr. ALLISON. I believe it is a recruiting station.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on page 16, lines 9 and 10, by which the Senate struck out the words:

For officers' quarters at the post at Columbus, Ohio, $20,000.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment reserved the question is on concurring in the remainder of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Iowa to an apparent omission at the foot of page 19. The clause reads:

In their special duties of sappers miners.

Mr. HAWLEY. The insertion of the word "and" after the word "sappers," in line 25, on page 19, covers it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the word "and" will be inserted after "sappers."

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask permission to offer a couple of amendments which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Military Affairs. On page 25, after line 20, at the end of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, I move to add:

That the sum of $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of one counterpoise battery to mount one 6-inch breech-loading rifled cannon of the new pattern. This battery shall be erected on the bank of the Potomac River below the city of Washington, and at such point as the Secretary of War may direct.

That Beverly Kennon, the inventor and patentee, shall superintend and direct the work, and shall complete the same for actual service within four months after the passage of this act. The gun to be mounted upon it, with its fittings, may be loaned by the Ordnance Department of the Navy. All expenses attending its removal to the battery and from it, if required, to be borne by money embraced in this appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment that it is not germane to the bill. I do not think it is estimated for, although I have not examined that question. Perhaps the Senator from South Carolinia can tell me whether it has been estimated for.

Mr. HAMPTON. I can not hear the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment belongs either to the naval appropriation bill or the fortification appropriation bill. It is not germane to the bill for the support of the Army. That is the first point. The second one is, that it has not been estimated for by the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It need not be estimated for, if it has been reported from a standing or select committee and referred, twenty-four hours before it is offered in the Senate for consideration, to the Committee on Appropriations. If the Senator from Iowa raises the question of relevancy that will be submitted to the Senate and decided without debate.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not raise it.

Mr. HAMPTON. The history of this provision is rather an extraordinary one. The battery was recommended by the Military Committee and by some of the highest authorities in the Army, amongst them General Sherman and General Sheridan. The Military Committee brought in a bill. It passed the Senate at the last session and went over and received the unanimous approval of the proper committee in another branch of Congress. The Secretary of War said that if the appropriation was increased there and placed at his disposal the battery should be erected. When the board to consider all these things was appointed the Secretary of War supposed that the matter had gone to that board and the board did not know that the Secretary of War had had anything to do with it.

I have therefore offered this amendment again by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs. I think it is germane to the bill, and I am satisfied that the sum of money could not be expended in any better way in the world than by trying this experiment. The system has been tried in Egypt. At Alexandria, where one of these batteries was put up, it was the only one that escaped bombardment.

I hope that the Senate will give to this gentleman who invented it the opportunity at this very small cost of testing its efficiency.

I will say further that the Secretary of the Navy has placed one of the new 6-inch rifled breech-loading guns at his disposal for the purpose of trying it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 20, noes not counted.

Mr. HAMPTON. On page 24, after line 15, I move to insert:

That the sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of the plates and other property embraced in the offer of Professor Gleason.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. HAMPTON. I have not the papers which accompanied the amendment to the Committee on Appropriations, but I can in a very few words explain what the offer is.

Professor Gleason proposed to sell 10,000 copies of his book on horse training and everything of that sort, and all his patents, to the Government. The Military Committee thought it was not expedient to buy the books, but was willing to appropriate $2,000 for the purchase of all his electrotype plates—there are over three hundred of those—and also the right to use his book, and the right to use all his patents for harness, bits, and everything of that sort. The Secretary of War and the General of the Army have approved his book so far as to buy for the officers 200 copies. The committee thinks it is well that his system should be tested, and by direction of the committee I offer this amendment to the appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRIS. What are the plates that are to be bought?

Mr. HAMPTON. They are in reference to the management, training, and shoeing of horses. The proposition was sent to the Committee on Appropriations. I have not the paper here, but it embraces very many valuable recipes and processes.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after line 15, on page 24:

That the sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of the plates and other property embraced in the offer of Professor Gleason.

Mr. HALE. What does that offer contain? Has the Senator from South Carolina the offer of Professor Gleason, so that we may know what it is that we are purchasing?

Mr. HAMPTON. That paper is in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations. It was sent in with the amendment. I mentioned it as far as I could remember. It is to purchase about three hundred electrotype plates giving all his system.

Mr. HALE. Plates covering what subject?

Mr. HAMPTON. The training, managing, shoeing, and driving of horses, for the use of the cavalry and artillery service.

Mr. HALE. It is a horse book?

Mr. HAMPTON. Yes; and in addition to that the right is given to the Government to use this system, to publish the book whenever it pleases, and to use all the patents for bridles, harness, and everything of that kind.

Mr. HALE. Is this Professor Gleason the man who is traveling about the country giving exhibitions?

Mr. HAMPTON. He is the same one.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the Government can purchase one of his books at any time.

Mr. HAMPTON. The Secretary of War has purchased 200 copies of his book to give to the officers; but the idea of the committee was that, having these plates, the Government could at any time it pleased strike off any number of copies and put them into the hands of private soldiers.

Mr. HALE. I should like to hear the offer of the professor read. The chairman of the committee has it.

Mr. ALLISON. I have the offer of Professor Gleason. I send it to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 14, 1889.

MY DEAR SIR: I will sell to the United States Government all the electrotype plates used in printing my book, known as Gleason's Practical Treatise on the Horse, a book containing 300 pages, consisting of 300 electrotype plates, embracing 116 plates of engravings illustrating my methods used in training and educating the horse, also embracing 21 engravings showing an unerring method of telling the age of the horse, and 14 additional engravings on the science of horse-shoeing.

The book, as printed, consists of the following different departments:

First. A short and concise history of the life struggles and trials of the author in compiling this work.

Second. The breaking and taming wild and vicious horses by questions asked and answered.

Third. How to detect an unsound horse.

Fourth. Method of telling a horse's age from one to twenty-one years.

Fifth. Horseback riding.

Sixth. The breeding and care of the foal.

Seventh. The government farm.

Eighth. Practical suggestions on horse-shoeing.

Ninth. Veterinary department for horses.

Now, I will sell to the United States Government all my right, title, and interest in the above book for the sum of $2,000, said United States Government to have and to use for the use of the Government all of my patents, including bits, bridles, and harness.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

OSCAR R. GLEASON.

Hon. WADE HAMPTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. HALE. I think we might get along without that for one year, Mr. President.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. One amendment was agreed to by the House with an amendment. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to that amendment, and insist upon the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate insist upon the amendments of the Senate which have not been agreed to by the House, and disagree to the further amendment of the House to an amendment of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. According to the order of the Senate the Calendar of unobjected cases will be now taken up, commencing at the point where the consideration was left off.

Mr. HARRIS. Under Rule VIII ?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under Rule VIII. The first bill on the Calendar, commencing at the point where the Calendar was last under consideration by the Senate, will be stated.

WESLEY MONTGOMERY.

The bill (H. R. 3829) for the relief of Wesley Montgomery was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 5, after the name "Wesley Montgomery," to insert "or his heirs at law;" in line 6, after the words "to enter," to insert "in person;" in the same line, after the word "acres," to insert "in one body;" and in line 7, before the word "unappropriated," to insert "surveyed;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to permit Wesley Montgomery, or his heirs at law, of Adams County, State of Nebraska, to enter in person 160 acres, in one body, of any of the surveyed unappropriated public lands of the United States, not mineral nor in the actual occupation of any settler, in lieu of the northeast quarter of section 23, of township 28 north, of range 14 west, in Iroquois County, Illinois; which land was entered by said Wesley Montgomery on February 20, 1874, under the homestead laws, in accordance with instructions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the register and receiver of the date of August 9, 1873, the title to which land failed because of a prior disposition of the same which did not then appear upon the records of the Land Office: Provided, however, That the said Wesley Montgomery shall not have made any other entry of land of the United States under the homestead laws: Provided further, That said land shall not be located within the limits of any incorporated town or city.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PADDOCK, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. BERRY were appointed.

SETH WHEELER.

The bill (S. 2221) for the relief of Seth Wheeler was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over. It will save time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made by the Senator from Missouri. The Chair supposes that objection being made the bill takes its place upon the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. HARRIS. Under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

ROBERT ADGER AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 508) to empower Robert Adger and others to bring suits in the Court of Claims for rent alleged to be due them was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 12, after the words "subsequent to the," to strike out "pardon of the claimants" and insert:

Twenty-ninth day of September, in the year 1865, when the President of the United States issued an order for the restoration of the aforesaid property to said claimants, and during its occupancy by the Government after that date.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims shall, notwithstanding the lapse of six years, take jurisdiction of and adjudge the claim of Robert Adger, James Marsh, and the estate of Mitchell King, against the United States for rent, use, and occupation of certain buildings, wharves, warehouses, offices, ship-yard, and docks in the city of Charleston, S. C., since the war, and shall render judgment in favor of said Adger, James Marsh, and the estate of Mitchell King, or their legal representatives, for such amount as shall be found to be the real rental value of the property subsequent to the 29th day of September, in the year 1865, when the President of the United States issued an order for the restoration of the aforesaid property to said claimants, and during its occupancy by the Government after that date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACTION ON AMENDMENTS.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that hereafter the formal reading of each bill as reached be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee reporting the bill be acted upon as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that course will be taken.

Mr. ALLISON. As to what bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not certain that it understands the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. In the two bills that have been acted upon the bills have been read and then the Clerks recur to the amendments proposed by the committee. I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with, and that the amendments shall be disposed of as they are reached in the regular reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator asks that the amendments shall be considered as the bill is read.

Mr. HARRIS. That is exactly what I mean.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

VENEZUELA STEAM TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

The joint resolution (S. R. 83) for the relief of the Venezuela Steam Transportation Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment to strike out the preamble and all after the resolving clause, and in lieu thereof to insert:

Whereas it appears from the correspondence transmitted to the Senate by the message of the President of the 2d day of February, 1872 (Executive Document No. 28, second session Forty-eighth Congress), and on the 12th of April, 1888 (Executive Document No. 143, first session Fiftieth Congress), that since the year 1871 indemnity has been repeatedly demanded by the executive department of the United States from the Venezuelan Government, but without avail, for the wrongful seizure, detention, and employment in war and otherwise of the American steam-ships Hero, Nutrias, and San Fernando, the property of the Venezuela Steam Transportation Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New York, and a citizen of the United States, and the imprisonment of its officers, citizens of the United States, under circumstances that render the Republic of Venezuela justly responsible therefor; and

Whereas all the diplomatic efforts of the Government of the United States repeatedly exerted for an amicable adjustment and payment of the just indemnity due to said corporation and its officers, citizens of the United States, upon whose property and persons the aforesaid wrongs were inflicted, have proved entirely unavailing: Therefore,

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to take such measures as in his judgment may be necessary to promptly obtain indemnity from the Venezuelan Government for the injuries, losses, and damages suffered by the Venezuela Steam Transportation Company of New York, and its officers, by reason of the wrongful seizure, detention, and employment in war or otherwise of the said company's steamers Hero, San Fernando, and Nutrias by Venezuelan belligerents in the year 1871, and to secure this end he is authorized to employ such means or exercise such power as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

The bill (H. R. 10633) for the relief of Dr. John B. Read was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I was requested by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who feels an interest in this bill, to object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa objects to the present consideration of the bill, and it will be passed over.

GULF AND CHICAGO AIR-LINE RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 5509) to grant to the Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railway Company the right to construct bridges over navigable water courses was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, before the word "over," to strike out "bridges" and insert "a bridge;" in line 8, after the word "establish," to strike out "that crossing can be most advantageously made" and insert "to be the best and most advantageous point for crossing said river;" and in line 10, after the word "river," to strike out:

The Warrior River, if crossing at or in vicinity of Tuscaloosa; the Tennessee River, at Milton's Bluff, or such point in vicinity thereof as surveys, examinations, and United States engineers may determine that crossing can best be made.

And insert:

Said corporation, its successor or legal representative, may also construct bridges over the Warrior River at or near Tuscaloosa, and the Tennessee River at or near Milton's Bluff.

So as to read:

That the Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railway Company, a corporation duly organized and legally incorporated under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successor or legal representative, may erect a bridge over the Tombigbee River at such point in the vicinity of Coffeeville, in Clarke County, as surveys and examinations may establish to be the best and most advantageous point for crossing said river; said corporation, its successor or legal representative, may also construct bridges over the Warrior River at or near Tuscaloosa, and the Tennessee River at or near Milton's Bluff.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 24, after the word "said," to strike out "bridge" and insert "bridges;" and in line 25, after the word "prescribe," to strike out "for Grant's Pass and as the Secretary of War shall prescribe for the river bridge;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided also, That said draws shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, and in no case shall unnecessary delay occur; and said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise such lights or other signals on said bridges as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 27, after the word "said," to strike out "bridge or;" and in line 28, after the word "which," to strike out "it" and insert "they;" so as to make the proviso read:

And provided also, That said bridges, at the option of the corporation or company by which they may be built, may be used for the passage of wagons or vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers, for such reasonable rate of toll as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 11, after the word "said," to strike out "bridge" and insert "bridges;" so as to read:

And equal privileges in the use of said bridges shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way for a postal telegraph across said bridge or bridges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 2, after the word "bridges," to strike out "or constructions constructed" and insert "or other structures built;" in line 5, after the words "bridges or," to strike out "construction" and insert "structure;" and in line 6, after the word "expense" to insert:

And if any litigation shall arise in regard to said bridges, or either of them, by reason of their obstructing navigation, the same shall be had in the circuit court of the United States within whose territorial jurisdiction said bridges or any part thereof may be located.

So as to read:

That such alterations or changes as may be required by the Secretary of War or Congress in bridges or other structures built under the provisions of this act shall be made by the persons or corporations owning or controlling said bridges or structures at their own expense; and if any litigation shall arise in regard to said bridges, or either of them, by reason of their obstructing navigation, the same shall be had in the circuit court of the United States within whose territorial jurisdiction said bridges or any part thereof may be located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 1, to strike out:

No structure of any kind shall be built upon the military reservation on Dauphin's Island until the location and nature of the same shall have been approved by the Secretary of War, and that such structure may be removed in his discretion, and may be used by the United States free of cost.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

No tramway, track, road-bed, wharf, pier, or other structure shall be built upon the United States military reservation on Dauphin's Island, without the approval and consent of the Secretary of War first had, and the said structure shall be removed by the parties owning or controlling the same, at their own expense, when the Secretary of War so requires: Provided also, That the United States may use such structure when built without charge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to grant to the Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Railway Company the right to construct bridges over the Tombigbee, Warrior, and Tennessee Rivers, and across Grand Pass to Dauphin's Island, in the Gulf of Mexico."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Missouri who reported that bill [Mr. VEST] not being present at this moment, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. VEST, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. FRYE were appointed.

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

Mr. EVARTS. I present from the Committee on the Library the report of the Librarian on the progress of the Library of Congress during the calendar year 1888, with an order, which I ask may be read and passed upon at once, for the publication of the report.

The order was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the report of the Librarian of Congress for the calendar year 1888 be printed, and that 500 additional copies, with covers, be printed for distribution by the Librarian.

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate alleged election outrages in certain States. In the execution of the order of the Senate, this resolution will be informally laid aside, and the consideration of the Calendar will be proceeded with.

POLICE FORCE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6677) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the police force of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 31, 1883, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill has been heretofore read at length and all the amendments proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia have been agreed to. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. DAWES. I inquire of the Senator from Tennessee if this is not embodied substantially in the District appropriation bill?

Mr. HARRIS. I am informed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who has in charge the appropriation bill, that it is substantially the same.

Mr. DAWES. If that passes, will there be any need of passing this bill?

Mr. HARRIS. Probably not, but it is very desirable to put it in a double form so that the object shall be accomplished.

Mr. DAWES. I agree that the object should be attained.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the attention of the Senator from Tennessee for a moment. I should have spoken earlier while the bill was properly under discussion. I do not know the precise scope of it, but I rise just to enter briefly upon the record my protest against certain conduct of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The inaugural ceremonies are going to fill this city with a multitude. The people on foot are confined to the sidewalks, very properly. I make no objection to the proposed arrangement by which ropes shall be run along the curb and the people be confined strictly to the walks; but by some authority or without authority—I suppose by the authority of the commissioners of the District of Columbia—various persons are not only filling up the reservations in some cases recklessly, with danger to the trees and other public property, not only filling up the reservations with the great stands for the accommodation of the public, to which I make no objection, but they are now authorizing private citizens to cover the sidewalks also with these unsightly structures. They have perhaps the technical right to do it——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg pardon. It did not occur to me at the moment that this was the bill——

Mr. HARRIS. I can only say to the Senator, if he will allow me, that this bill simply provides for what everybody recognizes, I think, as a necessary thing here, an increase of the police force of the District.

As to the matter that the Senator suggests, I have no information as to the authority upon which those things were done, and they are as distasteful to my eye as they are to the eye of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should have spoken earlier, because I think an amendment would have been in order on that bill to prevent the doing of such things in the future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HARRIS, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. FARWELL.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (H. Res. 266) to print the eulogies on James N. Burnes, of Missouri; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10832) for the establishment of a light-house with fog-bell on Oyster-Beds Shoal, in the Hudson River, New York, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLARDY, Mr. LAGAN, and Mr. BROWN of Virginia managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT TUNNEL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent, a little out of time, to present a report from a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Chair will receive the report, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the joint select committee raised by a concurrent resolution of the two Houses at the last session on the subject of the Washington Aqueduct tunnel and the water supply to submit a report in writing, together with the report of the board of expert engineers employed by the committee, the testimony of the engineers, and two amendments which we intend to propose to the deficiency appropriation bill, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. There is a large mass of other testimony and a large mass of drawings, papers, cross sections, etc., which I shall ask leave to file with the Secretary of the Senate as a part of this report, or an appendix to it rather, without bringing them into the Senate Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont makes a report——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have described what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be received and ordered to be printed. The amendments which accompany the report will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, and leave will be given to file the testimony with the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The testimony and other papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire that that testimony shall be printed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at present until the papers are carefully looked over. There is a good deal of it, perhaps, that need not be printed at all. I shall make a subsequent motion about that.

COURT IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. VEST. I desire to submit a conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are the papers here?

Mr. VEST. The papers are here.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1874) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"That a United States court is hereby established, whose jurisdiction shall extend over the Indian Territory, bounded as follows, to wit: North by the State of Kansas, east by the States of Missouri and Arkansas, south by the State of Texas, west by the State of Texas and the Territory of New Mexico; and a judge shall be appointed for said court by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold his office for a term of four years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified, and receive a salary of $3,500 per annum, to be paid from the Treasury of the United States in like manner as the salaries of judges of United States district courts.

"SEC. 2. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an attorney and marshal of said court, who shall continue in office for four years, and until their successors be duly appointed and qualified, and they shall discharge the like duties and receive the same fees and salary as now received by the United States attorney and marshal for the western district of Arkansas. The said marshal may appoint one or more deputies, who shall have the same powers, perform the like duties, and be removable in like manner as other deputy United States marshals; and said marshal shall give bond, with two or more sureties, to be approved by the judge of said court, in the sum of $10,000, conditioned as by law required in regard to the bonds of other United States marshals.

"SEC. 3. That a clerk of said court shall be appointed by the judge thereof, who shall reside and keep his office at the place of holding said court. Said clerk shall perform the same duties, be subject to the same liabilities, and shall receive the same fees and compensation as the clerk of the United States court of the western district of Arkansas; and before entering upon his duties he shall give bond in the sum of $10,000, with two or more sureties, to be approved by the judge of said court, conditioned that he will discharge his duties as required by law.

"SEC. 4. That the judge appointed under the provisions of this act shall take the same oath required by law to be taken by the judges of the district courts of the United States; and the oath, when taken as in such cases provided, shall be duly certified by the officer before whom the same shall have been taken to the clerk of the court herein established, to be by him recorded in the records of said court. The clerk, marshal, and deputy marshals shall take before the judge of said court the oath required by law of the clerk, marshal, and deputy marshals of United States district courts, the same to be entered of record in said court as provided by law in like cases.

"SEC. 5. That the court hereby established shall have exclusive original jurisdiction over all offenses against the laws of the United States committed within the Indian Territory as in this act defined, not punishable by death or by imprisonment at hard labor.

"SEC. 6. That the court hereby established shall have jurisdiction in all civil cases between citizens of the United States who are residents of the Indian Territory, or between citizens of the United States, or of any State or Territory therein, and any citizen of or person or persons residing or found in the Indian Territory, and when the value of the thing in controversy or damages or money claimed shall amount to $100 or more: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to give the court jurisdiction over controversies between persons of Indian blood only: And provided further, That all laws and parts of laws prohibiting the citizens or members of the tribes of the Cherokee, Choctaw, Creek, Chickasaw, and Seminole Nations, in their individual capacity, from entering into contracts with citizens of the United States, except as to contracts for the conveyance of real estate in fee, and also prohibiting either of said nations from entering into leases or contracts for mining coal, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and said court shall have jurisdiction over all controversies arising out of said mining leases and of all questions of mining rights or invasions thereof where the amount involved exceeds the sum of $100.

"That the provisions of chapter 18, Title XIII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall govern such court so far as applicable: Provided, That the practice, pleadings, and forms of proceeding in civil causes shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice, pleadings, and forms of proceeding existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the State of Arkansas, any rule of court to the contrary notwithstanding; and the plaintiff shall be entitled to like remedies by attachment or other process against the property of the defendant, and for like causes, as now provided by the laws of said State.

"The final judgment or decree of the court hereby established, in cases where the value of the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or of other competent witnesses, exceeds $1,000 may be reviewed and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of error or appeal, in the same manner and under the same regulations as the final judgments and decrees of a circuit court.

"SEC. 7. That two terms of said court shall be held each year at Muscogee, in said Territory, on the first Monday in April and September, and such special sessions as may be necessary for the dispatch of the business in said court at such times as the judge may deem expedient; and he may adjourn such special sessions to any other time previous to a regular term; and the marshal shall procure suitable rooms for the use and occupation of the court hereby created.

"SEC. 8. That all proceedings in said court shall be had in the English language; and bona fide male residents of the Indian Territory, over twenty-one years of age, and understanding the English language sufficiently to comprehend the proceedings of the court, shall be competent to serve as jurors in said court, but shall be subject to exemptions and challenges as provided by law in regard to jurors in the district court for the western district of Arkansas.

"SEC. 9. That the jurors shall be selected as follows: The court at its regular terms shall select three jury commissioners, possessing the qualifications prescribed for jurymen, and who have no suits in court requiring the intervention of a jury; and the same persons shall not act as jury commissioners more than once in the same year. The judge shall administer to each commissioner the following oath:

"'You do swear to discharge faithfully the duties required of you as jury commissioner; that you will not knowingly select any one as juryman whom you believe unfit and not qualified; that you will not make known to any one the name of any juryman selected by you and reported on your list to the court until after the commencement of the next term of this court; that you will not, directly or indirectly, converse with any one selected by you as a juryman concerning the merits of any cause or procedure to be tried at the next term of this court; so help you God.'

"SEC. 10. That the jury commissioners, after they have been appointed and sworn, shall retire to a jury-room, or some other apartment designated by the judge, and be kept free from the intrusion of any person, and shall not separate without leave of the court until they have completed the duties required of them; that they shall select from the bona fide male residents of the Territory such number of qualified persons as the court shall designate, not less than sixty, free from all legal exception, of fair character and approved integrity, of sound judgment and reasonable information, to serve as petit jurors at the next term of court; shall write names of such persons on separate pieces of paper, of as near the same size and appearance as may be, and fold the same so that the names thereon may not be seen. The names so written and folded shall be then deposited in a box, and after they shall be shaken and well mixed, the commissioners shall draw from said box the names of thirty-seven persons, one by one, and record the same as drawn, which record shall be certified and signed by the commissioners, and indorsed 'List of petit jurors.'

"SEC. 11. That the said commissioners shall then proceed to draw in like manner twelve other names, which shall be recorded in like manner on another paper, which shall be certified and signed by the commissioners, and indorsed 'List of alternate petit jurors.' The two lists shall be inclosed and sealed so that the contents can not be seen, and indorsed 'List of petit jurors,' designating for what term of the court they are to serve, which indorsement shall be signed by the commissioners, and the same shall be delivered to the judge in open court; and the judge shall deliver the lists to the clerk in open court, and administer to the clerk and his deputies the following oath:

"'You do swear that you will not open the jury-lists now delivered to you; that you will not, directly or indirectly, converse with any one selected as a petit juror concerning any suit pending and for trial in this court at the next term, unless by leave of the court; so help you God.'

"SEC. 12. That within thirty days before the next term, and not before, the clerk shall open the envelopes and make a fair copy of the list of petit jurors and of alternate petit jurors, and give the same to the marshal, who shall, at least fifteen days prior to the first day of the next term, summon the persons named as petit jurors and alternate petit jurors to attend on the first day of said term as petit jurors, by giving personal notice to each, or by leaving a written notice at the juror's place of residence with some person over ten years of age and there residing.

"That the marshal shall return said lists with a statement in writing of the date and manner in which each juror was summoned; and if any juror or alternate legally summoned shall fail to attend he may be attached and fined or committed as for contempt.

"That if there shall not be a sufficient number of competent petit jurors and alternates present, and not excused, to form a petit jury, the court may compel the attendance of such absentees or order other competent persons to be summoned to complete the juries.

"SEC. 13. That if for any cause the jury commissioners shall not appoint or shall fail to select a petit jury as provided, or the panels selected be set aside, or the jury-list returned in court shall be lost or destroyed, the court shall order the marshal to summon a petit jury of the number hereinbefore designated, who shall be sworn to perform the duties of petit jurors as if they had been regularly selected; and this provision shall also apply in the formation of petit juries for the first term of the court. The want of qualification of any person selected as juror under section 10 of this act shall not necessarily operate as cause of challenge to the whole panel.

"SEC. 14. That the fees of the jurors and witnesses before said court herein created shall be the same as are provided in the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas.

"SEC. 15. That in all criminal trials had in said court in which a jury shall be demanded and in which the defendant or defendants shall be citizens of the United States none but citizens of the United States shall be competent jurors.

"SEC. 16. That the judge of the court herein established shall have the same authority to issue writs of habeas corpus, injunctions, mandamus, and other remedial process as exists in the circuit courts of the United States.

"SEC. 17. That the Chickasaw Nation and the portion of the Choctaw Nation within the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning on Red River at the southeast corner of the Choctaw Nation; thence north with the boundary-line between the said Choctaw Nation and the State of Arkansas to a point where Big Creek, a tributary of the Black Fork of the Kimishi River, crosses the said boundary-line; thence westerly with Big Creek and the said Black Fork to the junction of the said Black Fork with Buffalo Creek; thence northwesterly with said Buffalo Creek to a point where the same is crossed by the old military road from Fort Smith, Ark., to Boggy Depot, in the Choctaw Nation; thence southwesterly with the said road to where the same crosses Perryville Creek; thence northwesterly up said creek to where the same is crossed by the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway track; thence northerly up the center of the main track of the said road to the South Canadian River; thence up the center of the main channel of the said river to the western boundary-line of the Chickasaw Nation, the same being the northwest corner of the said nation; thence south on the boundary-line between the said nation and the reservation of the Wichita Indians; thence continuing south with the boundary-line between the said Chickasaw Nation and the reservations of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians to Red River; thence down said river to the place of beginning; and all that portion of the Indian Territory not annexed to the district of Kansas by the act approved January 6, 1883, and not set apart and occupied by the five civilized tribes, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be annexed to and constitute a part of the eastern judicial district of the State of Texas for judicial purposes.

"SEC. 18. That the counties of Lamar, Fannin, Red River, and Delta of the State of Texas, and all that part of the Indian Territory attached to the said eastern judicial district of the State of Texas by the provisions of this act, shall constitute a division of the eastern judicial district of Texas; and terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the said eastern district of the State of Texas shall be held twice in each year at the city of Paris on the third Mondays in April and the second Mondays in October; and the United States courts herein provided to be held at Paris shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all offenses committed against the laws of the United States within the limits of that portion of the Indian Territory attached to the eastern judicial district of the State of Texas by the provisions of this act, of which jurisdiction is not given by this act to the court herein established in the Indian Territory; and all civil process issued against all persons resident or found in the said counties of Lamar, Fannin, Red River, and Delta, cognizable before the United States courts, shall be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Paris, Tex., and all prosecutions for offenses committed in either of said last-mentioned counties shall be tried in the division of said eastern district of which said counties form a part: Provided, That no process issued or prosecution commenced or suit instituted or offenses committed before the passage of this act shall be in any way affected by the provisions hereof.

"SEC. 19. That the judge of the eastern judicial district of the State of Texas shall appoint a clerk of said court, who shall reside at the city of Paris, in the county of Lamar.

"SEC. 20. That every person who shall, in the Indian Territory, willfully and maliciously place any obstruction, by stones, logs, or any other thing, on the track of any railroad, or shall tear up or remove, burn, or destroy any part of any such railroad, or the works thereof, with intent to obstruct the passage of any engine, car, or cars thereon, or to throw them off the track, shall be deemed guilty of malicious mischief, and, on conviction thereof, shall be sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for any time not more than twenty years: Provided, That if any passenger, employé, or other person shall be killed, either directly or indirectly, because of said obstruction, tearing up, removing, burning, or destroying, the person causing the same shall be deemed guilty of murder, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished accordingly.

"SEC. 21. That any person aforesaid who shall, in the Indian Territory, willfully and intentionally destroy, injure, or obstruct any telegraph or telephone line, or any of the property or materials thereof, shall be deemed guilty of malicious mischief, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not more than $500 and imprisoned for any time not more than one year.

"SEC. 22. That every person aforesaid who shall, in the Indian Territory, maliciously or contemptuously disturb or disquiet any congregration or private family assembled in any church or other place for religious worship, or persons assembled for the transaction of church business, by profanely swearing or using indecent gestures, threatening language, or committing any violence of any kind to or upon any person so assembled, or by using any language or acting in any manner that is calculated to disgust, insult, or interrupt said congregation, shall, upon conviction thereof, be sentenced to imprisonment for any time not exceeding sixty days, or to a fine not exceeding $100, or both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 23. That every person aforesaid who shall, in the Indian country, feloniously, willfully, and with malice aforethought assault any person with intent to rob, and his counselors, alders, and abettors, shall, on conviction thereof, be imprisoned at hard labor for a time not less than one nor more than fifteen years.

"SEC. 24. That every person who shall, in the Indian Territory, knowingly mark, brand, or alter the mark or brand of any animal the subject of larceny, the property of another, or who shall knowingly administer any poison to or maliciously expose any poisonous substance with the intent that the same shall be taken by any of the aforesaid animals, or shall willfully and maliciously, by any means whatsoever, kill, maim, or wound any of the aforesaid animals, shall be deemed guilty of malicious mischief, and, on conviction thereof, shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a period of not more than six months, or a fine of not more than $200, or both such fine and imprisonment; and in case the animal shall have been killed or injured by said malicious mischief, the jury trying the case shall assess the amount of damages which the owner of the animal shall have sustained by reason thereof, and, in addition to the sentence aforesaid, the court shall render judgment in favor of the party injured for threefold the amount of the damages so assessed by the jury, for which said amount execution may issue against the defendant and his property.

"SEC. 25. That if any person, in the Indian country, assault another with a deadly weapon, instrument, or other thing, with an intent to inflict upon the person of another a bodily injury where no considerable provocation appears, or where the circumstances of the assault show an abandoned and malignant disposition, he shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined in any sum not less than fifty nor exceeding one thousand dollars and imprisoned not exceeding one year.

"SEC. 26. That if any person shall maliciously and willfully set on fire any woods, marshes, or prairies in the Indian Territory, with the intent to destroy the fences, improvements, or property of another, such person shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 27. That sections 23, 24, and 25 of this act shall not be so construed as to apply to offenses committed by one Indian upon the person or property of another Indian.

"SEC. 28. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

G. G. VEST,
JAMES F. WILSON,
GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
D. B. CULBERSON,
JNO. H. ROGERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report was presented during the execution of a prior order of the Senate, and was received by the Chair upon the ground that it was a privileged report. The question now is, Will the Senate proceed to its consideration?

Mr. HARRIS. If we can come to a vote without debate, I shall be glad to have the report disposed of. Otherwise I shall feel compelled to object.

Mr. VEST. I think it will not lead to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the report be adopted?

The report was concurred in.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would remark that twenty-three minutes have been consumed in the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. HARRIS. Knowing as I do that every moment that we spend in the consideration of Senate bills at this late hour of the Fiftieth Congress is a moment wasted, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining hours to be spent on the Calendar be devoted to the consideration of House bills favorably reported.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the remainder of the three hours which were ordered by the Senate to be spent in the consideration of the Calendar may be devoted to the consideration of House bills only.

Mr. PASCO. If there can be an exception made in reference to the Florida Indian war claims bill, I shall not object. That bill does not come within the description of bills referred to by the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida object?

Mr. PASCO. If the Senator from Tennessee will make an exception in favor of that bill I shall not object.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be very glad even to make that exception and get the rule so modified as that we may devote our time to the consideration of House bills; but I hardly think the Senator from Florida ought to ask me to make such an exception.

Mr. CALL. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee to allow us by unanimous consent to take that bill up at this moment. I think probably there will be no objection at all to it.

Mr. HARRIS. I will modify my request so as to except from it the bill referred to by the Senator from Florida, though I do not think the Senators from Florida ought to ask it.

Mr. PASCO. I appreciate very much the courtesy of the Senator from Tennessee, and I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee now asks unanimous consent——

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Florida withdraws his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that for the remainder of the time to be devoted to the consideration of the Calendar House bills shall be considered, with the exception of what is known as the Florida Indian hostilities bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood that the request for that exception was withdrawn.

Mr. CALL. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRIS. I so understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from Tennessee made that exception, and I presume he will consent that it shall stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the House bills on the Calendar will be considered in their order.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. BOWEN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and are hereby, authorized to employ a clerk during the remainder of the present session at a compensation of $6 per diem, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Improvement of the Mississippi River, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF LAND IN HOUSTON, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 5690) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell block of land 108 in the city of Houston, Tex., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell, either at private or public sale, the interest held by the United States in and to block 108, situated in the city of Houston, Tex., on the south side of Buffalo Bayou, and to make a quitclaim deed to the purchaser thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The bill (H. R. 7643) to establish a United States land court and to provide for a judicial investigation and settlement of private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico and in the State of Colorado was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAWLEY. If, as I understand, this House bill is proposed to be amended by substituting the old Senate bill that we have discussed so much, I think it can not be attended to in a five-minute debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand the amendment proposed to this bill is the old Senate bill that was so much discussed concerning Mexican land grants.

Mr. RANSOM. The substitute is substantially the Senate bill. There is a difference in one respect as to the character of the tribunal before whom cases are to be tried.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am obliged to object because I am sure it can not be discussed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RANSOM. I wish the Senator would allow the bill to be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut objects, and the next House bill will be stated.

PAYMENT FOR A CONDEMNED ALLEY.

The bill (H. R. 7864) to reappropriate to pay for alley condemned in square numbered 493 was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that of the surplus that has been covered into the Treasury of the sum appropriated by the act approved June 30, 1880, entitled "An act making appropriations for the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1881," for amount due property owners for ground condemned and used for alleys, there be reappropriated so much as will be sufficient to pay, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from August 6, 1870, to date the persons entitled to the amount awarded by the jury of condemnation for the land taken for an alley through square numbered 493, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW J. NEWGENT.

The bill (H. R. 5212) for the relief of Andrew J. Newgent was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is reported adversely and does not come under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the bill, being reported adversely, ought not to have been called under this order, and therefore it retains its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM R. M'KEE.

The bill (H. R. 10082) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of the widow and orphan children of Col. William R. McKee, late of Lexington, Ky.," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to carry into effect the grant of one quarter-section each to the children of Col. William R. McKee, made in the second section of the act of which this is an amendment, shall issue to his surviving children and grandchildren, or the owners or holders thereof, other certificates for those they now hold, which new certificates they may enter and locate for themselves upon any lands in satisfaction of the grant of the class described in the act to which this is an amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is fair to say that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] objected to this bill when it was under consideration before, but he has told me since that he would make no further objection to it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF JOHN H. NEWMAN.

The bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of the heirs of John H. Newman, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It recites that whereas it appears of record that at its December term, 1874, the Court of Claims, in the case of John H. Newman vs. The United States, rendered a judgment in favor of Newman for the proceeds of fifty bales of cotton, valued at $177.55 per bale, when, under the proof, the court adjudged that the claimant was entitled to the proceeds of two hundred and thirty bales; and therefore the bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of John H. Newman, deceased, late of the county of Warren, Mississippi, $32,679.20, balance due on account of captured cotton, as shown by the opinion of the court in rendering the judgment; and that the amount be paid out of the proceeds of captured and abandoned property now in the Treasury; but a greater amount of money shall not be paid in satisfaction of this claim than the amount received and paid into the Treasury as the net proceeds of the sale of the cotton alleged to have been taken.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out the preamble.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be in order after the passage of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. If an amendment is made striking out the preamble the bill will have to go back to the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not desire to endanger the passage of the bill by insisting on the motion to strike out the preamble, and I therefore withdraw the motion.

The preamble was agreed to.

LANDS IN LOUISIANA.

The bill (H. R. 9423) to restore to the public domain and to regulate the sale and disposition of certain lands east of the Mississippi River, in the State of Louisiana, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Public Lands reported an amendment to add the following proviso to the bill:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall be limited to the lands claimed by actual settlers for purposes of cultivation whose titles are now incomplete, within the limits of the Donaldson and Scott, Daniel Clark, and Conway grants, and that after setting apart to each of said settlers not to exceed 160 acres, the residue of the public lands within said grants shall continue to be, as they are now, a part of the public domain: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall preclude the State of Louisiana from enforcing its claim to said residue of public lands under the acts of Congress granting swamp lands to the several States of the Union.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. WALTHALL were appointed.

HAYEM & TAYLOR.

The bill (H. R. 6394) for the relief of Hayem & Taylor was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims with an amendment, in line 12, after the word "their," to insert "co-tenants;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, claim, and interest of the United States to certain tracts of land in the parish of Iberia, in the State of Louisiana, and described as a tract of land near the town of New Iberia, in said State, and further described in the official maps of the General Land Office of the United States as section 13, township 11 south, range 6 east, late southwest district of Louisiana, containing 221.83 acres, be, and the same is hereby, granted and conveyed to Hayem & Taylor, successors of Hayem, Taylor & De Blanc, their co-tenants, successors, transferees, vendees, and assignees: Provided, That this shall have the effect only of a quit-claim of all the right, title, and interest of the United States therein, not to effect any valid adverse right or title to said land, nor create any liability on the part of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. GIBSON. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] reported the amendment, which is found in line 12, to insert the word "co-tenants."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. The Senator from Nevada stated to me that he was willing to withdraw that amendment. I have sent for him and suppose he will be in the Chamber in a moment. I ask that the bill be informally laid aside until he comes in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Louisiana the bill will be informally laid aside until the Senator from Nevada comes in.

Mr. GIBSON subsequently said: The bill (H. R. 6394) for the relief of Hayem & Taylor was before the Senate and under consideration and I asked that it might be laid aside until the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] entered the Chamber. He is now present.

Mr. HARRIS. That bill has been reported to the Senate, and it is for the Senator from Nevada to say whether he wants the amendment concurred in or not.

Mr. STEWART. That amendment I should like to withdraw. We find on investigation that the amendment is not necessary, and I therefore ask leave to withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE B. HANSELL.

The bill (H. R. 5336) for the relief of George B. Hansell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to George B. Hansell, of Washington, D. C., $373, or so much thereof as he may find to be required to pay the necessary and actual traveling expenses incurred by him in traveling from Sitka, Alaska, to Washington, after his discharge from the United States Revenue-Marine Service in 1870.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. H. BOYD.

The bill (H. R. 5888) for the relief of W. H. Boyd was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to W. H. Boyd, late a commissioned captain of the Eleventh Regiment of United States Colored Troops, the full pay and allowances of a captain from March 4, 1864, to October 20, 1864, less any moneys that may have been paid him by the United States for services rendered during that time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVOCATION OF WITHDRAWAL OF RAILROAD LANDS.

The next House bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11006) to provide for the revocation of the withdrawal of lands made for the benefit of certain railroads, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. The provisions of that bill have already been embodied in another bill, and it may as well go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

UNION GAS COMPANY.

Mr. FRYE. The next bill on the Calendar, being the bill (S. 3472) to authorize the Union Gas Company to lay conduit pipes across the Ohio River, should be indefinitely postponed, as a bill for the same purpose has passed both Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

JOHN FARLEY.

The bill (H. R. 341) for the relief of John Farley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John Farley, of Madison County, Kentucky, $118.28, in full of the amount due him for commissary supplies furnished the Army of the United States in 1862.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OTTER CREEK LIGHT.

The next House bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5716) for establishing a light at the mouth of Otter Creek, Lake Champlain.

Mr. FRYE. Let that bill be passed over for the present without prejudice. I should like to look at the amendments reported. Some of them have been disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

INSTRUCTIONS TO JURIES.

The bill (H. R. 6896) to require the United States circuit and district judges to instruct the jury in writing in certain cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That in all States wherein by the laws thereof judges of courts of record are required to reduce charges and instructions to juries in writing, judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States shall conform to such practice, and such written instructions shall be taken by the jury on their retirement, returned with their verdict, and retained with the files, and be a part of the record in each case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. EVARTS, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

S. DILLINGER & SONS.

The bill (H. R. 6591) for the relief of S. Dillinger & Sons was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to S. Dillinger & Sons, of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, $396.90, for stamps paid for distilled spirits on the 17th of June, 1881, which spirits were destroyed by fire on the same day, before the stamps were received at the distillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

The next House bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9151) to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was read at length in Committee of the Whole on the 1st of October, 1888.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that bill had better be passed over informally. I think the subject-matter is in conference, and this bill had better be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

SCHOOL FARMS IN BEAUFORT COUNTY, SOUTH CAROLINA.

The bill (H. R. 8053) to extend the time for the redemption of school farms in Beaufort County, South Carolina, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It extends for one year the time prescribed for the redemption of school farms in Beaufort County, South Carolina, by the act entitled "An act to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, South Carolina, by the United States," approved March 3, 1887.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN JONES.

The bill (H. R. 483) for the relief of Elizabeth Jones, widow of John Jones, deceased, and to place the name of said John Jones on the muster-rolls of Company B, Second Regiment North Carolina Mounted Infantry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "Infantry," to strike out "and that he be mustered from" and insert "as a private mustered into the service on;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to place the name of John Jones on the muster-rolls of Company B, Second North Carolina Mounted Infantry, as a private mustered into the service on the 12th day of October, 1863.

Mr. WALTHALL. The amendment only affects the phraseology of the bill and does not affect the substance. It may be withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REV. WILLIAM GREGSTON.

The bill (H. R. 10481) for the relief of Rev. William Gregston was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Rev. William Gregston, of Caldwell County, Kentucky, $150 for a horse taken from him by the Army of the United States during the late war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. M. HIATT & CO.

The bill (H. R. 7924) for the relief of A. J. McCreary, administrator of the estate of J. M. Hiatt, deceased, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that in the year 1878 the Osage Indians were in a state of destitution and suffering for the actual necessaries of life owing to the inadequacy of the appropriation for them by Congress out of their fund, and that the tribe, by nearly if not quite all its chief councilors and headmen, appealed to the then Indian traders, J. M. Hiatt & Co., at the Osage agency (Pahuskey), Indian Territory, to extend to the Osages a credit of from eight to ten dollars per capita, promising payment out of their next annuity, which it was supposed would be ample for that purpose, which appeal was supported and the credit approved by Cyrus Beede, the then United States agent for the Osage Indians, as a matter of actual necessity; and that J. M. Hiatt & Co., pursuant to this appeal and relying thereon, did extend to the Osage Indians a credit aggregating $16,759.99, keeping a careful, just, and true itemized account of all goods sold to each head of a family and individual, the goods being sold under supervision and advice of Paul Akin, United States interpreter, Governor Joe, Sam Bevenue, chief of the half-breeds, and other chiefs and headmen, who were fully and freely consulted as to who were proper persons to receive credit and the amount thereof; and every precaution was taken to have the credit fairly distributed to all the members of the tribe. But the next annuity, instead of being $15 per capita, as had been expected, was reduced to a little over $3 per capita, so that the payment of the credit so extended was rendered impossible, and before the subsequent annuities were made sufficient for its payment, the Indian agent, Cyrus Beede, was superseded by an agent who, for unknown reason, resisted and defeated the payment of the credit out of the annuities; that afterward, in the summer of 1880, the account was settled and adjusted as to items and amount, after a long and careful examination thereof by the governor and head chiefs constituting the business committee of the tribe, and there was thereby found to be due the firm of J. M. Hiatt & Co. $16,759.99, and the governor and head chief requested the Secretary of the Interior to pay the same; and that by an act of the Forty-ninth Congress, approved July 14, 1886, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and directed to pay to J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of J. M. Hiatt & Co., late traders for the Osage tribe of Indians, out of any money in the Treasury accruing to the Osage tribe under an act of Congress approved June 16, 1880, the sum of $16,759.99, or so much thereof as may be found actually due the claimant; and after an investigation of the facts the Secretary of the Interior, without having any valid evidence affecting or impairing the justness or correctness of the accounts and the amount due thereon, declined to certify any greater sum than $8,380, leaving still justly due the sum of $8,380, and J. M. Hiatt has since died and A. J. McCreary has been appointed his administrator. The bill therefore proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to A. J. McCreary, administrator of the estate of J. M. Hiatt, survivor of J. M. Hiatt & Co., late traders for the Osage tribe of Indians, the sum of $8,380, in full satisfaction of this demand against the Osage tribe of Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ELLEN P. MALLOY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to inquire about Order of Business 2442, being the bill (H. R. 6348) for the relief of Ellen P. Malloy, which was reported adversely. It is next on the Calendar.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I beg the Senator's pardon. It was reconsidered the next day, and reported favorably by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], as I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Arkansas reported that bill adversely and it was postponed indefinitely, and then it appears on the Calendar "reconsidered," but it does not say what the report was upon reconsideration.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. My impression is that there was a motion made to reconsider it for the purpose of bringing it back upon the Calendar. I do not remember making any favorable report in the matter, and I shall have to look to see. I ask that the bill be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The record shows that the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely was reconsidered, and the bill placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. That is my recollection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the bill should not pass. I ask that it may be put back upon the Calendar.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that it shall not be prejudiced, that it shall be placed on the Calendar without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over without prejudice.

HUDSON G. LAMKIN.

The bill (H. R. 9464) for the relief of Hudson G. Lamkin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Hudson G. Lamkin, of Dearborn County, Indiana, late a private in Company D, Third Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, $125 for a horse belonging to him which was lost in the service of the United States in the late war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. H. BATES.

The bill (H. R. 8272) to provide for the payment of F. H. Bates as military instructor at Washington High School, District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to F. H. Bates $300 in full for his services as military instructor at the Washington High School, in the District of Columbia, for the school term ending in June, 1884, one-half of the sum to be paid from the funds of the District of Columbia, and the other from the Treasury of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JURISDICTION IN ALABAMA.

The next House bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4470) to regulate the jurisdiction of the United States district judges and of the courts over which they preside in the State of Alabama.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. SHERMAN. It may be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over without prejudice.

ALFRED BREUER.

The bill (H. R. 2688) for the relief of Alfred Breuer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to remove from the records the charge of desertion against Alfred Breuer, late of the United States Marine Corps; and thereupon he shall be restored to all rights and privileges as fully as if the charge of desertion had never existed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM F. C. NINDEMANN.

The bill (H. R. 7801) for the relief of William F. C. Nindemann, formerly a seaman in the Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to readjust the accounts of William F. C. Nindemann, formerly a seaman in the Navy, serving on board the Arctic exploring steamer Jeannette, and to pay to him the difference between the pay of a seaman and the pay of a carpenter in the Navy, from the 29th of June, 1879, to the 1st of June, 1883.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS MATHEWS AND OTHERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4581) for the relief of Thomas Mathews and others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been previously considered as in Committee of the Whole and read at length.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOY APPRENTICES IN THE NAVY.

The bill (H. R. 10652) to encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. To encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy it authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to furnish as a bounty to each apprentice after his enlistment, and when first received on board of a training-ship, an outfit of clothing not to exceed in value $45.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. I offer certain papers in explanation of the bill just passed and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection.

The papers are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING,
Washington, January 17, 1889.

SIR: Referring to House bill No. 10652 to authorize the granting of an outfit of clothing to boys or apprentices enlisted in the United States Navy to serve until they shall become twenty-one years of age, I have the honor to submit, in addition to a copy of the letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, the following extract from the report of the operations of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, namely: "The question of allowing apprentices an outfit of clothing is again urgently recommended. These lads receive only small pay ($9, $10, $11 per month) during their training and when serving on board the regular cruisers, but the same rigid rule of neatness in dress required of others is applied to them. It often results, then, during their minority, that many of them hardly earn money enough to keep themselves properly clothed. But a greater trouble occurs when they begin their service and are compelled to draw an outfit of uniform clothing, which costs on the average about $45. As the regulations prohibit the issue of money to persons in debt, or any gratification of leave of absence on shore during the period of indebtedness, it results that these lads are kept confined to the ship in which they may serve, or within the limits of a shore command, until the debt to the Government is liquidated. The dispiriting effect of this upon young growing boys may be imagined, but to be deprived of a small amount of spending money and all liberty during this interval of indebtedness is so discouraging that desertion often happens with theft of outfit, which is generally disposed of in order to secure the means to get away. I would recommend, then, an allowance of $45 worth of clothing to be given each apprentice when regularly enlisted and installed on board the training-ship New Hampshire."

"NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 12, 1888.

"SIR: The Department has, in accordance with the request of the committee, considered the bill (H. R. 4350) by which it is proposed that any boy or apprentice on his enlistment for service in the Navy during minority shall be provided, at the expense of the Government, with an outfit of clothing not to exceed $45 in value.

"The Department is of the opinion that the bill referred to, if it becomes a law, will have a highly beneficial effect.

"First. It will tend to lessen temptations to desertion in this branch of the service.

"The law authorizes the enlistment, with the consent of parents or guardians, of minors between fourteen and eighteen years of age to serve during their minority. An outfit of bedding and clothing for each is indispensable and can not be furnished for less than about $45. The majority of those entering the service neither have nor can obtain the means to procure such outfit. They therefore become at once indebted to the Government to the extent of about $45, equal to five months' pay at the rate of $9 per month, which is the rate allowed until they are transferred to a cruising vessel, when it is increased to the extent of one or two dollars per month additional. As no pay can be drawn by an enlisted boy or apprentice until he shall have discharged the obligation thus incurred, he is practically deprived of pay for a period of about five months after he enters the service, and if during that period any addition to his original outfit is required, as is usually the case, such deprivation may continue for a period of seven or eight months after enlistment.

"Second. Privates in the Army and in the Marine Corps are allowed a certain limited amount of clothing, appropriated yearly, during their five years' service, and in view of the small pay of apprentices in the Navy it would seem that some similar allowance for clothing might properly be granted to them.

"Third. The number of apprentice boys accepted during the last year was 385. An allowance of $45 for the outfit of each would have required a total expenditure of $17,325. The law permits the acceptance of 750 boys and apprentices in each year, which, if that number were accepted, would involve an annual expenditure of $33,750, a sum comparatively small in view of the advantageous results which would probably be secured by an adoption of this measure.

"Very respectfully,

"W. C. WHITNEY,
"Secretary of the Navy.

"Hon. H. A. HERBERT,
"Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives."

Under present circumstances should a boy desert before liquidating his indebtedness by salary earned, the Government loses the amount due for clothing. Should the desertion occur almost immediately after the enlistment of the boy the whole value of the outfit is lost to the Government, so that the effect would be the same in either case. The main object sought, however, is to remove the discouraging effect of starting a young lad in the service handicapped by debt, which causes desertion and occasions the invention of some means of procuring money, which often results in the sale of their outfits.

It is believed that the effect of the bill would be to remove to a great extent the principal cause of desertion.

The matter of expense is stated in the letter of the Secretary to the chairman of the House Naval Committee.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

W. S. SCHLEY, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. EUGENE HALE, United States Senate.

WASHINGTON AND WESTERN MARYLAND RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 9418) to incorporate the Washington and Western Maryland Railroad Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 8, line 6, after the word "passenger," to strike out "or" and insert "and twenty-five cents;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That for transportation on its railroad, or any part thereof, the said corporation shall have a right to charge and collect as toll and transportation charges at rates not exceeding 6 cents per ton of freight or 3 cents per passenger for each mile of transportation; but for any distance 10 cents may be charged for a passenger and 25 cents for any quantity of freight.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 3, after the word "proper," to insert "and as may be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That the said railroad may be constructed with double tracks or single tracks, as the said corporation shall deem proper and as may be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and said corporation may construct and maintain along its line, or at the termini of its road, all wharves and other structures and works which shall be necessary for the purpose of its incorporation; but the land which it shall have a right to acquire for the construction of such road and works shall not exceed an amount to be hereafter agreed on between said corporation and the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, line 12, after the word "until," to strike out "all" and insert "half;" in the same line, after the words "paid up," to strike out "in full" and insert:

In cash, and the stockholders shall be held individually liable for the full amount of stock subscribed by them, respectively, until the same shall have been so paid up in full: Provided further, That the whole amount of capital stock and bonds issued by said company shall not exceed the actual cost of construction and equipment of said road more than 5 per cent.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no bonds shall be issued until half of the capital stock of said company is paid up in cash, and the stockholders shall be held individually liable for the full amount of stock subscribed by them, respectively, until the same shall have been so paid up in full: Provided further, That the whole amount of capital stock and bonds issued by said company shall not exceed the actual cost of construction and equipment of said road more than 5 per cent.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. The terms of this bill were agreed upon by the stockholders and representatives of the two companies, and I think this provision, which provides a double liability, a liability of stockholders after having paid in full for their stock——

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator allow me? This amendment, I think, was offered by me, and if I caught the portion of the amendment read by the Secretary I shall withdraw that part of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). Is the amendment withdrawn?

Mr. BUTLER. That portion of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as it is intended to stand.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 10, line 12, after the word "until," the committee report to strike out "all" and insert "half;" in the same line, after the words "paid up," to strike out "in full" and insert:

In cash, and the stockholders shall be held individually liable for the full amount of stock subscribed by them, respectively, until the same shall have been so paid up in full: Provided further, That the whole amount of capital stock and bonds issued by said company shall not exceed the actual cost of construction and equipment of said road more than 5 per cent.

Mr. BUTLER. The committee do not insist on that provision of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER. On examination I see that I was under a misapprehension about that matter. I thought that the Secretary was reading my amendment, but it seems he was reading the text of the bill as reported by the committee, and therefore I withdraw any observations upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as reported will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. The amendments were reported by the committee, and of course can not be withdrawn by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I was under a misapprehension.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee, the Chair understands, is agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. FARWELL, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 3949) to enable the President to protect the interests of the United States in Panama;

An act (S. 3428) granting a pension to Mary C. Thompson; and

An act (S. 3116) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Wynne.

The message also announced that the bill (S. 3435) granting a pension to J. D. Haworth, having been presented to the President February 13, 1889, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, had become a law without his signature.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire what became of Order of Business 2526, Senate joint resolution 129.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The Chair is informed that the Senate is acting only on House bills.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the bridge bills as they are reached will be passed, whether they be Senate or House bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us go on with the House bills.

Mr. HARRIS. By unanimous consent we are considering House blls favorably reported on the Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10028) granting to the Wyoming Midland Railway Company the right of way through the Wind River or Shoshone Indian reservation, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12384) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3997) to provide for the more efficient enforcement of the laws of the United States relating to elections at which Representatives or Delegates in Congress are to be voted for, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3998) to punish offenses committed at elections at which Representatives or Delegates in Congress are to be voted for, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3777) to authorize the board of county commissioners of the county of Whitman, Washington Territory, to issue bonds and to build a court-house and jail, and to sell and acquire real estate for such purposes; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the conference report submitted by Mr. CULLOM on the 5th instant on the amendment to the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887; which was ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

The bill (H. R. 8990) to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations was announced to be the next House bill on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, after the words "eighteen hundred and," to strike out "ninety-one" and insert "ninety-two;" and in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to make the section read:

That the President is hereby authorized to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint, three commissioners, one of whom shall be designated as chairman, and who shall hold their offices until the 31st day of December, 1892, when the same shall expire and all the functions and privileges thereof shall cease. If either of said commissioners shall not be so appointed during the present session of the Senate, the President may make such appointment during the recess thereof, but the appointee shall hold no longer than until the end of the next session thereafter ensuing, during which the President shall nominate to the Senate as aforesaid. In like manner any vacancy subsequently occurring shall be filled. Each commissioner so appointed shall receive a salary at the rate of $5,000 per annum. Each of said commissioners shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe the oath required by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 2, after the word "Indian," to strike out "depredations" and insert "depredation claims;" so as to read:

And such commissioners shall constitute a court to be known as the "court of Indian depredation claims," and as such shall possess jurisdiction and authority to inquire into and adjudicate, in the manner provided in this act, all claims of the following classes, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 7, after the word "Congress," to strike out "remaining" and insert "now or hereafter;" so as to read:

First. All claims for Indian depredations authorized to be made or presented by any act of Congress, now or hereafter in force, to the Secretary of the Interior or to any.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask that the amendment of the committee in line 7, striking out "remaining" and inserting "now or hereafter," be disagreed to.

Mr. DAWES. Those words were considered by the committee as equivalent to "remaining."

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not think they are sufficient, and I propose to further amend the clause. There is no law now in force upon which the commission could act. They would have no jurisdiction whatever over many cases.

Mr. DAWES. If it is claims authorized to be presented by any act of Congress remaining in force that means any existing law.

Mr. PADDOCK. All the law that is of any value whatever has been repealed. The material provisions of the act of 1834 were repealed by the act of 1859, which would leave the proposed commission entirely without jurisdiction in the great body of the cases.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator does not reach his idea by moving that the amendment be disagreed to, because he leaves in there——

Mr. PADDOCK. I propose when the amendment shall have been disagreed to to insert the word "heretofore," so as to cover whatever law may have been in force heretofore.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator state what he intends to do?

Mr. PADDOCK. My proposition will be to make the paragraph read:

First. All claims for Indian depredations authorized to be made or presented by any act of Congress heretofore, now, or hereafter in force, to the Secretary of the Interior or to any other officer of the Government.

Mr. DAWES. Then I suppose the Senator's amendment should be to strike out and insert.

Mr. PADDOCK. The word is already stricken out.

Mr. DAWES. It is not stricken out.

Mr. MITCHELL. Insert "heretofore" before "now."

Mr. DAWES. There is nothing stricken out. It is only recommended to be stricken out.

Mr. PADDOCK. Then first let the amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "heretofore" before the word "now," in the seventh line.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska accepts the amendment of the Senator from Nevada. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the word "remaining" and insert "heretofore;" so as to read:

All claims for Indian depredations authorized to be made or presented by any act of Congress heretofore, now, or hereafter in force, to the Secretary of the Interior or to any other officer of the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to suggest a further amendment to the Senator from Nebraska to insert, after the word "Congress" and before the word "heretofore," the words "or treaty;" so as to read:

Any act of Congress or treaty heretofore, now, or hereafter in force.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have no objection that that should be inserted if it is deemed essential.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clause will be read as it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee.

The Secretary read as follows:

First. All claims for Indian depredations authorized to be made or presented by any act of Congress or treaty heretofore, now, or hereafter in force, to the Secretary of the Interior or to any other officer of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. Before the amendment to the amendment is voted on I should like to have the Senate understand the full force of that amendment. If it prevails the proposition is to pay out of the Treasury of the United States the amount that this commission may determine has been suffered by anybody at any time anywhere since the foundation of the Government, now a hundred years, at the hands of any Indian. If any Indian since the foundation of the Government has committed any depredation upon any white man, under that amendment the white man or his heirs, or whoever can remember anything about it, can bring that into the court, and if the court shall find that the man did actually suffer some wrong at the hands of that Indian a judgment must be rendered against the United States for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if it will be satisfactory to him to limit the provision so as not to run back further than the act of 1834?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill, but I rise for the purpose of suggesting to the Senator from Massachusetts, and other Senators taking an interest in it, to let it be informally passed over in order to see if those gentlemen who are taking an interest in the bill can not agree upon the exact form of amendment to be proposed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think we are about to agree.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that he is mistaken in regard to the scope of the bill. In the first place, commencing with the earliest legislation, no claims have ever been authorized to be presented to the Department or any officer of the Government except those for depredations committed by Indians in amity with the United States; that is, having treaty relations. So this proposed amendment to the amendment would not include all that large class of depredations committed by Indians who were not in treaty relations with the United States.

Then, from the very first Congress, I think, after the Constitution was adopted until 1859 all claims covered by this section were authorized to be presented. Further than that, the law provided that the Government of the United States guarantied eventual indemnity to the parties, and has always prevented them from attempting to obtain redress themselves by going on the reservations and seeking to obtain redress from the Indians. So the amendment to the amendment would only include the claims which were allowed to be presented under the existing laws from——

Mr. HARRIS. In order to get recognition I will interpose my objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. DOLPH. I do not yield.

Mr. HARRIS. Under the rule under which we are acting it does not require the Senator to yield. I have a right to object at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee object?

Mr. HARRIS. I will say to the Senators interested in this measure that I would be glad to have it informally passed over so that at the instance of the Senator from Massachusetts it can be called up at such time as may be convenient.

Mr. DOLPH. I submit the question of order as to whether the Senator from Tennessee has a right to take a Senator off the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. I have a right under Rule VIII to object at any stage of the proceeding, and I now object unless the Senators accept the suggestion that I have made.

Mr. DOLPH. I have nothing to do with accepting suggestions. I have not charge of the bill. I simply raise the point of order for the decision of the Chair, if an objection is in order at this time. While a Senator is addressing the Chair can another Senator get the floor for the purpose of objecting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the agreement made by unanimous consent this morning, as the Chair understands, the Senator from Tennessee has a right to object at any stage of the proceeding.

Mr. PADDOCK. Not to take a Senator off his feet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that debate was limited to five minutes on each particular bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I have not spoken five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That being the case, if more time is being taken, any Senator has a right to object.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not understand that that can be done when a Senator is allowed to speak for five minutes and but once under that rule. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the bill may be informally passed over with the understanding that I may call it up at a favorable opportunity at an early day.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall be glad to consent to that.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator will simply request that the bill may be informally laid aside with the understanding that at the earliest moment it will be called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts that the bill be informally laid aside? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLPH. What does the Chair do with my appeal from the decision of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. DOLPH. I do appeal from the decision of the Chair. I had the floor in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Oregon state the character of the appeal?

Mr. DOLPH. We are proceeding now under Rule VIII. The bill was up for consideration. I came into the Senate and obtained the floor. I was recognized by the Chair. I was proceeding to speak. I had spoken less than a minute. I was entitled to speak five minutes under the rule. The Senator from Tennessee objected to the consideration of the bill. I have no doubt of his right to object, but the point I raise is that he can not interrupt me by addressing the Chair while I have the floor and objecting to the consideration of the bill unless I yield to him for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understood the agreement this morning, only five minutes was to be allowed for debate on any particular bill. The Chair acknowledges itself to have been in error if that was not the agreement.

Mr. DOLPH. The rule is that each Senator is limited to five minutes. The Chair admitting himself to have been in error, I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to this language in Rule VIII:

And the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings.

I think that is quite broad enough to authorize the objection to come in at any moment, or at any stage, or in any condition of business.

Mr. MITCHELL. The regular order.

Mr. HARRIS. The appeal is debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon wish to go further? The Chair would rule that under Rule VIII the Senator from Tennessee had a right to object.

Mr. DOLPH. I then appeal from the decision of the Chair. The Chair has changed his opinion on the question.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Oregon withdrew the appeal. The Senate is wasting a good deal of time upon this point, it seems to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon insist upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BUTLER. I trust the Senator will withdraw the appeal and settle it some other time.

Mr. DOLPH. I will put it later, if——

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will indulge me a moment, I will state that his appeal rests upon the distinction between taking a Senator off the floor and the meaning of "any stage of the proceedings." The phrase "stage of the proceedings" has a technical meaning, and it is quite different from the authority to take a Senator off the floor. But I think as this case is disposed of for the present, that the Senator from Oregon will not insist upon an appeal.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not agree with the ruling of the Chair, but I will withdraw the appeal now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon withdraws his appeal. The next House bill on the Calendar will be stated.

THE ELEVENTH CENSUS.

The bill (H. R. 1659) to provide for taking the eleventh and subsequent censuses was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] who reported the bill not being in his seat, I ask that it be informally passed over, subject to the call of that Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will be informally passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill has been passed already, has it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator from Tennessee has been misinformed in regard to the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I am informed by the Clerks that the bill has been already passed, but still remains on the Calendar. So let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next House bill on the Calendar will be stated.

J. M. HOGAN.

The bill (H. R. 4489) for the relief of J. M. Hogan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay the claim of J. M. Hogan, of Stockton, Cal., for loss of property in consequence of depredations committed by Snake or Shoshone Indians in the year 1861 while en route through the Territory of Utah to the State of California, and appropriates $6,600 for the purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLORIDA STATE CLAIM.

Mr. CALL. The next Order of Business is the bill (S. 746) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But we are only dealing with House bills.

Mr. HARRIS. That bill was excepted from the unanimous-consent rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall be compelled to object to that bill unless it is laid aside informally until the House bills can be considered. There was no unanimous consent given that that bill should be acted upon. The unanimous consent was that it should be called in its order. It is a long bill and we can get through with the House bills and also with that bill this evening. I have no objection to its being called up just as soon as the House bills on the Calendar are disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida insist?

Mr. CALL. I shall be perfectly content to accept an arrangement of unanimous consent by which this bill may be called up at the conclusion of the House bills on the Calendar. If that can be understood, I shall be very glad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next House bill on the Calendar will be announced.

H. L. NEWMAN.

The bill (H. R. 766) for the relief of H. L. Newman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay, out of any money that may hereafter be appropriated for the use and benefit of the Arapaho and Kiowa Indians, to H. L. Newman $3,450, in full satisfaction for claims against those Indians for property destroyed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF H. CORTHS, DECEASED.

The bill (H. R. 285) for the relief of the legal representatives of H. Corths, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refer the claim of the legal representatives of H. Corths, deceased, and late of Ballard County, Kentucky, for quartermaster's stores and commissary supplies alleged to have been taken and used by the United States Army during the late war, from the farm of Corths, in Ballard County, Kentucky, to the Quartermaster-General, who shall investigate the justice and legality of the claim and report the value of the stores and supplies taken and used by the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OTTER CREEK AND OTHER LIGHTS.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to go back to Order of Business 2339, being the bill (H. R. 5716) for establishing a light at the mouth of Otter Creek, Lake Champlain.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to withdraw all the amendments to the bill. Let the original bill be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light be established at or near the mouth of Otter Creek, Lake Champlain, in the State of Vermont, at a cost not to exceed $1,000.

Mr. FRYE. Instead of the amendments reported from the Committee on Commerce, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The better way would be to disagree to all the amendments of the committee. The amendments reported by the committee will be disagreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. FRYE. I now move to add to the bill:

Also, that a first order light-house be constructed on Gray's Harbor, Washington Territory, and a site be purchased therefor at a cost not exceeding $60,000 for both.

Also, that a site be purchased and a light-house and fog-signal be constructed on Patos Island, Washington Territory, at a cost not to exceed $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill for establishing a light at the mouth of Otter Creek, Lake Champlain, and for other purposes."

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PALMER, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

WILLIAM H. TABARRAH.

The bill (H. R. 948) for the relief of William H. Tabarrah was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to correct the record of William H. Tabarrah, late a sergeant in Company F, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, so that the same shall show him to have been discharged for gunshot wound of right thigh received in action, instead of the record now made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. DAVIS February 1, 1889:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 948) for the relief of William H. Tabbarrah, report:

The report upon this bill made by the House Committee on Military Affairs sets forth with sufficient fullness the grounds upon which this application is based. Your committee adopt that report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[House of Representatives. Report No. 2188. Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The records of the War Department show that William H. Tabbarrah, late sergeant of Company F, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, was discharged February 27, 1863, at convalescent camp, Alexandria, Va., on surgeon's certificate of disability by reason of tuberculosis contracted after enlistment. (See record hereto annexed.)

The evidence before the committee shows that the discharge of the said Tabbarrah for the cause stated was erroneous; that he was not disabled by reason of tuberculosis at the time of his discharge, but was disabled by reason of wounds received in the service, and that the cause assigned for his discharge should have been on account of gunshot wound. (See affidavits hereto annexed.)

The committee recommend that the bill pass with the following amendment: Strike out in line 4 of the bill, where the same occurs, the word "private" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sergeant."

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, April 20, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your request of the 15th ultimo for information upon House bill 948, Fiftieth Congress, first session, to provide for correction of the record of William H. Tabbarrah, late of Company F, Ninety-sixth New York Volunteers, so as to show him discharged for wound, I have the honor to inclose a report of the 18th instant from the Adjutant-General, which, it is believed, furnishes the information requested.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. R. W. TOWNSHEND,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 18, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return House bill 948, Fiftieth Congress, first session, authorizing the Secretary of War to correct the record of William H. Tabbarrah, late a private in Company F, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, to show him to have been discharged by reason of gunshot wound of right thigh, received in action, instead of the record now made, transmitted by the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, and in compliance with instructions to report as follows:

The records of this office show that Sergeant William H. Tabbarrah, Company F, Ninety-sixth New York Volunteers, was enrolled October 25, 1861, mustered in November 15, 1861, and present for duty to April 30, 1862. On roll for June, 1862, he is reported absent, in hospital at Annapolis, Md.; wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks, May 31, 1862. On June 3, 1862, he was admitted to the general hospital at Annapolis, Md., with gunshot wound, location not stated, and was treated until December 18, 1862, when he was returned to duty and sent to his regiment. While en route to his regiment he was examined by the medical board at Convalescent Camp, near Alexandria, Va., February 14, 1863, and discharged February 27, 1863, at said camp on surgeon's certificate of disability by reason of tuberculosis contracted since enlistment.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

To the Adjutant-General United States Army, etc.:

CLINTON COUNTY, New York, ss:

William H. Tabbarrah, being duly sworn, says that he resides at Plattsburgh, N. Y., and was a sergeant in Company F, Ninety-sixth New York Volunteers, in the late war, and now draws a pension for gunshot wound of right thigh, by pension certificate No. 13583, which wound was received at the battle of Fair Oaks, May 31, 1862.

Deponent further states that he has made application for a bounty by reason of being discharged for wounds; and the same has been denied upon the ground that the record shows that deponent was discharged for difficulty of the lungs, when, in fact, deponent has never had difficulty of the lungs at all, and was discharged solely on account of said wound and for no other cause whatever, to defendant's knowledge; and deponent respectfully asks that upon the evidence on file upon his application for pension, and in other records contained, and that herewith submitted, said records be corrected and made to show that he was discharged for gunshot wound, as he in fact was.

WM. H. TABBARRAH.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 15th day of January, 1883.

F. F. HATHAWAY, Notary Public.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Clinton County, ss:

James M. Fulton, being duly sworn, says that his residence and post-office is Beekmantown, Clinton County, New York, and has resided there and been a practicing physician and surgeon in said county for forty-three years last past; that his age is now sixty-nine years. Deponent further says that he is and has been for about twenty-seven years last past well acquainted with William H. Tabbarrah, and knew him well, both before his enlistment in the Ninety-sixth Regiment of New York Volunteers and after his discharge and return home from said service, and since said Tabbarrah's discharge deponent has been his family physician until said Tabbarrah removed from Beekmantown aforesaid to Plattsburgh, upon his appointment as keeper of the light-house upon Cumberland Head, in said town, upon the west shore of Lake Champlain, which position said Tabbarrah still holds. Deponent further says that shortly after said William H. Tabbarrah's discharge, in the spring of 1863, deponent saw him and knows that said Tabbarrah was badly wounded in his right thigh, and deponent aided in dressing said wound and in searching for the ball, and deponent knows that said wound has made said Tabbarrah a cripple ever since.

Deponent further says that in all his attendance upon said Tabbarrah deponent has not known him to have any difficulty of the lungs nor disease of the lungs of any kind, more than perhaps a cold or some little ailment of that sort, and deponent knows that when said Tabbarrah returned from the war he had no lung trouble whatever. Deponent further says that he has no interest in said Tabbarrah's matters, either pension, bounty, or otherwise; and further saith not.

J. M. FULTON, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 16th day of January, 1883, and I certify that said witness is a physician in good standing in his profession, and entitled to full credit.

JAMES J. BROWN,
Justice of the Peace.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Clinton County, ss:

Romeo Hyde, of Beekmantown, in said county, being duly sworn, says that his age is thirty-nine years; that he is well acquainted with William H. Tabbarrah, who was formerly a sergeant in Company F of the Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, of which deponent was also a member in the late war, and deponent knew him well while in said regiment. Deponent further says that he saw said Tabbarrah within a very few days after the battle of Fair Oaks in May, 1862. Deponent saw him one of the first days in June at White-house Landing upon a stretcher badly wounded, and deponent knows that at that time and all through said service, so far as deponent knew at the time and since, said Tabbarrah has had no difficulty of the lungs, but his trouble has always been since the war his said wound.

Deponent further says that he is himself now a regular practicing physician in said town of Beekmantown and has been for about fourteen years last past, and has often seen said Tabbarrah in those years, as said Tabbarrah married his wife from a family residing in the same village with deponent, and deponent has never known or heard that said Tabbarrah had any lung difficulty, but has no doubt whatever but what his discharge from the service was wholly on account of said gunshot wound, from which he ever since has been and still is badly crippled and disabled; and further deponent has no interest whatever in said matter.

ROMEO HYDE.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 16th day of January, 1883, and I certify that said witness is a physician in good and regular standing in his profession and entitled to full credit.

JAMES J. BROWN,
Justice of the Peace.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN GRAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11165) for the relief of John Gray.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment in line 4, after the words "pay to," to strike out "John Gray" and insert "Mary Gray, the widow of John Gray;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary Gray, the widow of John Gray, late major of the One hundred and seventy-fifth New York Volunteers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and allowances of a major of infantry from the 19th of November, 1862, the date he received his commission as major from the governor of the State of New York, to the 17th day of January, 1863, the date he is borne upon the record as having been mustered into the service as major of said regiment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. DAVIS February 1, 1889:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11165) for the relief of John Gray, report:

The Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives submitted the following report on this case:

"This is a claim for pay for services rendered prior to muster by John Gray, formerly major of the One hundred and seventy-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers.

"The claimant applied to the War Department for relief, and was denied in 1886 for the reason that 'his muster into service as major January 17, 1863, recognized him from the earliest date by completion of his command.'

"The proof shows that John Gray was commissioned major of the One hundred and seventy-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers on the 19th of November, 1862, by the governor of New York, and served in that capacity without pay until January 17, 1863.

"Having obtained the benefit of Gray's services, the Government ought not to set up a technical plea in bar of its obligation to make compensation therefor, and your committee are of opinion that payment should be made to Maj. John Gray.

"Your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage."

Further inquiry into the facts discloses a somewhat peculiar history of this regiment. As the companies were raised, and before regimental muster, they were evidently hastily sent from New York to the following places: Company A to Newport News, Va., where it was mustered November 20, 1862; Companies B and C to the same place, where they were mustered December 27, 1862; while Companies D, E, H, I, and K were sent to Carrollton, La., where they were mustered January 17, 1863. None of the companies had the minimum number at date of the above musters. On January 12, 1863, the One hundred and seventy-fifth New York was assigned at Carrollton to a brigade to be commanded by Brig. Gen. Michael Corcoran, but in the order the regiment was mentioned as being "part at Carrollton," thereby indicating that Companies A, B, and C, which had been mustered in at Newport News, Va., had not at that date joined the five other companies. It would seem by the information conveyed to your committee by the War Department that the companies composing this regiment were finally brought together at Carrollton, January 17, 1863, when John Gray was mustered into the service as major, with field and staff, at Camp Kearney, at that place. The scattering of the companies under the exigencies of that time prevented earlier muster as a regiment. Gray served in the capacity of major from November 19, 1862, up to the time of actual muster, such service being in Virginia and afterwards in the so-called "Banks expedition," and was very arduous in its character.

Under the provisions of War Department General Order No. 61, of 1861, the major of a regiment of infantry volunteers was entitled to muster into the service of the United States only on completion of six companies of the organization for which commissioned, and each company was considered as completed either from the date it was recruited to the minimum number, or if not so recruited, from the date of its actual muster into service.

Major Gray has died during the pendency of this bill, and its passage is recommended, with the following amendments:

Amend the title so that it will read: "An act for the relief of Mary Gray, widow of John Gray."

Insert after the word "to," in line 4, the words "Mary Gray, the widow of."

Mr. EDMUNDS. When I asked for the reading of the report I was under the impression that possibly this was one of a very large class of cases where by the regulations of the Department of War authorized by law field officers could not be mustered until the regiment was up to a certain strength. I perceive, if I correctly understand the report, that it does not fall within that class, and that the failure to muster was not owing to the circumstance that enough recruits or volunteers altogether had not been obtained to make a mustering regiment, but that it was on account of the dispersion of the companies under orders into various places. That being so, I have no criticism to make upon the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mary Gray, the widow of John Gray."

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAVIS, Mr. STEWART, and Mr. BATE were appointed.

SALE OF LANDS IN KANSAS.

The bill (H. R. 8740) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell to "The Methodist College Association of Southwestern Kansas" certain lands in Kansas was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 4, after the words "convey to," to strike out:

"The Methodist College Association of Southwestern Kansas," a corporation duly chartered by the laws of the State of Kansas, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, the following described real estate, being Osage Indian land, situated in Ford County, Kansas, to wit: Lots Nos. 3, 5, 6, and 7 of section 3, township 27 south, of range 24 west. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to cause the improvements on said land to be appraised and sold under such directions as he may prescribe: Provided, That said Methodist College Association shall within five years after the passage of this act begin in good faith the construction of buildings upon said land for the purposes herein set forth.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The State of Kansas the following-described lands, being the remaining portion of the Fort Dodge military reservation in said State, to wit: Lots numbered 3, 5, 6, and 7 of section 3, township 27 south, of range 24 west, on condition that said State shall, within twelve months from the passage of this act, pay or cause to be paid therefor the sum of $1.25 per acre, and shall within three years establish and provide for the maintenance thereon a home in which provision shall be made for the care and maintenance of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines, who have served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, their dependent parents, widows, or orphans, under such rules and regulations as said State may provide.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell and convey to the State of Kansas the following-described lands, being the remaining portion of the Fort Dodge military reservation in said State, to wit: Lots numbered 3, 5, 6, and 7 of section 3, township 27 south, of range 24 west, on condition that said State shall, within twelve months from the passage of this act, pay or cause to be paid therefor the sum of $1.25 per acre, and shall within three years establish and provide for the maintenance thereon a home in which provision shall be made for the care and maintenance of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines, who have served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, their dependent parents, widows, or orphans, under such rules and regulations as said State may provide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Kansas certain lands therein."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who reported the bill, not being present, I move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

CORPORATIONS AS SURETIES.

The bill (H. R. 3380) to authorize certain corporations to become surety in cases within the jurisdiction of Federal courts and Departments was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 3, after the word "whenever," to strike out "by the laws of the United States" and insert "in any cause pending in any court of the United States;" in line 6, after the word "with," to strike out "or without sureties" and insert "surety;" in line 7, after "any," to strike out "trust, office, or;" in line 8, after the word "duty," to strike out "or for the doing or not doing" and insert "or the doing or refraining from doing;" and in line 9, after the word "anything," to strike out "in said bond, stipulation, or undertaking specified;" so as to read:

That whenever in any cause pending in any court of the United States any person or corporation is required or permitted to make, execute, and give bond, stipulation, or undertaking, with surety, conditioned for the faithful performance of any duty, or the doing or refraining from doing of anything.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I did not choose to interrupt the reading of the bill, but I suppose this is about as appropriate a time as any for me to state that this bill comes from the Committee on the Judiciary, and it is not unanimously reported. There was a minority of that committee opposed to the bill. I am opposed to its passage, and I wish to give my reasons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri object to its consideration?

Mr. VEST. I shall object to its consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 266) to print the eulogies on James N. Burnes, of Missouri, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

CHAMBERS & BROWN.

The bill (H. R. 329) for the relief of Chambers & Brown was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Henry Chambers and George G. Brown, partners, trading and doing business under the name, firm, and style of Chambers & Brown on the 14th of August, 1874, at 299 West Main street, Louisville, Ky., $270, being the amount overpaid by them for special licenses in the year 1874.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAULKNER February 9, 1889:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 329) for the relief of Chambers & Brown, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

The facts upon which the claim in this case is based are set forth in the following letter of claimants and the letter of the collector of the fifth Kentucky district:

"LOUISVILLE, KY., February 13, 1880.

"DEAR SIR: We inclose a letter from Collector Buckner, showing that in May, 1874, the firm of Brown, Chambers & Co. paid for United States licenses as wholesale and retail liquor dealers and rectifiers the sum of $325 to cover the period from May 1, 1874, to April 30, 1875.

"On July 1, 1874, the firm of Brown, Chambers & Co. was dissolved by the withdrawal of I. T. S. Brown, the remaining members continuing in business under the firm name of Chambers & Brown.

"By the ruling of the then Commissioner of Internal Revenue we were compelled to take out new licenses covering the period from July 1, 1874, to April 30, 1875, and pay therefor the sum of $270.83, thereby paying twice for licenses for a period of ten months.

"An act of Congress was passed and approved March 1, 1879, to refund such duplicate collections, provided, as we understand the act, they had been made within a period of three years previous to the passage of this act; consequently our case does not come within the limit of time prescribed by this act, and the Commissioner has no authority to pay it.

"It is clear that we were compelled to pay to the Government $270.83 by the ruling of the Commissioner which by subsequent act of Congress seems to have been considered unjust, yet no recourse is given us simply from the fact that the payment was made in 1874 instead of 1876 or later.

"The amount claimed is manifestly due us, and our only relief is through our Representative in Congress. Can you do anything for us?

"Yours, very respectfully,

"CHAMBERS & BROWN.

"Hon. A. S. WILLIS, M. C.,
"Washington, D. C."

"UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE,
"COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, FIFTH DISTRICT, KENTUCKY,
"February 12, 1880.

"GENTLEMEN: In reply to your inquiry of to-day, I have to say that on the 27th day of May, 1874, Brown, Chambers & Co., 299 West Main street, Louisville, Ky., paid special taxes as wholesale and retail liquor dealers and rectifiers for year ending April 30, 1875, paying therefor the sum of $325.

"Also, that on the 14th day of August, 1874, Chambers & Brown, 299 West Main street, Louisville, Ky., paid special taxes as wholesale and retail liquor dealers and rectifiers, paying therefor $270.83. The change of firm from Brown, Chambers & Co. to that of Chambers & Brown was caused by the retirement of one of the firm, namely, I. T. S. Brown.

"Respectfully,

"JAMES F. BUCKNER, Collector.

"Messrs. CHAMBERS."

The committee addressed a letter to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and received the following reply:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
"Washington, January 23, 1889.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, inclosing H. R. bill 329, for the relief of Chambers & Brown, and report of House Committee on Claims.

"Referring to the statement of Messrs. Chambers & Brown, printed in the report of the committee, that an act of Congress was passed and approved March 1, 1879, to refund such duplicate collections, and to your request that I inform you as to the amount of duplicate collections that were made and not refunded under the said act, I have to state that none of the provisions of the act of March 1, 1879, refer to or authorize the refunding of special taxes collected from surviving members of firms which dissolved before the expiration of the term for which special tax had been paid by said firms.

"Under date of June 12, 1873, the following ruling of this office was issued in Circular 109 and forwarded to collectors of internal revenue, namely:

"'Every change of firm whereby a former partner retires from the same or a new partner is admitted constitutes, in contemplation of law, a new firm, liable to new special tax for the unexpired portion of the year for which the same has been paid by the original firm, which should be collected from the first day of the month in which the change occurs.'

"This ruling remained in force and such taxes were collected until March 4, 1879, when, in consequence of a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States vs. Adam Glab, decision No. 178, dated March 4, 1879, inclosed, modifying the ruling of this office to the extent stated therein, was issued to collectors, and the collection of special taxes has since been made in conformity therewith.

"In the case of Messrs. Chambers and Brown, the facts are that on July 14, 1879, they presented a claim for the refunding of $270.83, special taxes paid on August 14, 1874, as successors of the firm of Brown, Chambers & Co., for the remainder of the period for which the firm had paid special tax. The claim was rejected for the reason that it was barred by the provisions of section 17 of the act of March 1, 1879, not having been presented within three years after the purchase of the stamps.

"In view of the decision of the Supreme Court before mentioned I have no objection to urge against the granting of the relief asked for by Messrs. Chambers and Brown.

"Respectfully, yours,

"E. HENDERSON, Acting Commissioner."

"Hon. CHARLES J. FAULKNER,
"Committee on Claims, United States Senate."

Your committee are of opinion that the relief asked should be granted, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. HOWSE AND LULA H. HOWSE.

The bill (H. R. 565) for the relief of Mary A. Howse and Lula H. Howse was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Mary Alice Howse and Lula H. Howse, heirs at law of John C. Howse, deceased, late of Rutherford County, Tennessee, $10,975, being the amount allowed by the Quartermaster-General for quartermaster's stores taken and used by the Army, and provides that the payment of $10,975 shall be a full and complete settlement of all claims against the United States, of every kind and character, arising out of the appropriation and use by the Army of supplies or stores from the claimants.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAULKNER February 9, 1889:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 565) for relief of heirs of John C. Howse, submit the following report:

The committee has carefully examined the record as set forth in the Report No. 96 of the House, and finds that the conclusions reached in that report are fully sustained by the evidence, and the same is therefore adopted as the report of this committee. It is as follows:

"This case was considered by the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress, whose report is as follows:

"[House Report No. 2516, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4292) for the relief of the heirs of John C. Howse, deceased, submit the following report:

"The claim presented embraces items for quartermaster's stores stated at $20,197; for commissary supplies, $3,645; total, $23,842.

"The claims were presented, under the act of July 4, 1864, to the Quartermaster-General, United States Army, and to the Commissary-General of Subsistence, United States Army. That portion of the claim embracing subsistence supplies was considered by the Commissary-General of Subsistence, July 23, 1868, and rejected because, as was decided by the Commissary-General, 'it was a case requiring special or further legislation for its settlement.'

"That part of the claim embracing quartermaster's stores was considered by the Quartermaster-General, April 16, 1867, and the following decision was rendered:

"QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 16, 1867.

"SIR: I have the honor to return, with report, a claim in favor of Martha L. Russell, Rutherford County, Tennessee, for value of 15 horses, $1,875; 10 mules, $1,300; 4,000 bushels of corn, $4,000; 38 stacks of fodder, $570; and 3,500 cords of wood, $10,500, referred to this office by the War Department, February 19, 1867 ($18,245). It is stated by the claimant in her application that these stores were taken and used by the United States forces of the Twenty-first Army Corps, under General Crittenden, which was encamped on her premises near Murfreesborough, Tenn., during the battle of Stone River, on or about December 30, 1862.

"The evidence of former officers of the corps, including the affidavit of L. Russell, assistant surgeon Second Kentucky Volunteer Infantry (now the husband of claimant); George W. Griffith, brevet major Second Kentucky Cavalry; Capt. E. A. Otis, assistant adjutant-general, and Capt. I. R. Paul, commissary of subsistence, together with the testimony of other credible witnesses, is presented in support of the claim. The officers referred to respectively state that they were present and witnessed the occupation of the plantation by the forces under General Crittenden; that the hospitals and corps headquarters were established there; that the Army was then in need of supplies, and that everything necessary found on the premises was taken and applied to the use of the command.

"It is stated in evidence, in explanation of the reason why receipts were not issued, that the proper officers were not accessible to claimant, who was then a widow, and that the sudden movement of the troops precluded the possibility of their being obtained.

"Affidavits of citizens of the vicinity, certified to be credible, are also presented in proof of the loyalty of claimant and the justice of her claim.

"The case was referred by this office, February 21, 1867, to Bvt. Brig. Gen. Thomas Swords, assistant quartermaster-general, for special investigation and report as to the merits of the charges for the quartermaster stores mentioned.

"Capt. E. B. Kirk, assistant quartermaster-general, United States Army, as is shown by indorsement of General Swords, was detailed to proceed to Murfreesborough and make a special and thorough investigation of all the facts in the case. His report has been forwarded and is as follows:

"OFFICE ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTER,
"Nashville, Tenn., March 31, 1867.

"Respectfully returned to Brigadier-General Swords, assistant quartermaster-general.

"Upon a full personal investigation of the inclosed claim of Mrs. Russell, I have the honor to report that the commands specified within did actually occupy her plantation as stated, and from all the evidence I have been able to obtain it is my opinion that all the property for which this claim is made was taken by the United States Army.

"I find that about 1,060 cords of wood mentioned within were fence-rails, being some 89,000 in number; twenty-six log cabins torn down and burned would average 5 cords per building; the balance of the wood was in the tree and was not worth over $1 per cord. Corn was not worth over 75 cents per bushel at that time. The prices charged for the horses, mules, and fodder are considered reasonable and just.

"I would respectfully recommend that this claim be allowed on the basis of this indorsement.

"E. B. KIRK,
"Assistant Quartermaster, United States Army.

"I respectfully recommend the following allowance for such of the items as are properly chargeable to this department:

For 15 horses	$1,725
For 10 mules	1,250
For 4,000 bushels of corn	3,000
For 38 stacks of fodder	570
For 2,310 cords of wood in the tree	2,310
For 1,060 cords of wood, rails (shown by the affidavits to have been used to keep the wounded from freezing)	2,120
Amounting to	10,975

"The remainder of the charges for wood contained in the cabins is recommended for disapproval, the destruction of these buildings being regarded as depredations on the part of the troops.

"I have the honor to remain, sir, your obedient servant,

"D. H. RUCKER,
"Acting Quartermaster-General, Bvt. Maj. Gen., U. S. A.

"Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON,
"Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

"The act of July 4, 1864, required that the findings of the Quartermaster-General should be reported to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, but by some unaccountable error the decision in this case was reported to Edwin M. Stanton, then Secretary of War. The case was returned by the Secretary of War to the Quartermaster-General, and, pending further action, communications were received impeaching the loyalty of claimants. The case remained suspended until December 3, 1880, when it was again considered by the Quartermaster-General and rejected, because, as was decided by the then Quartermaster-General, he was unable to certify that he was convinced of the loyalty of claimant.

"The claimants in the case are the heirs of John C. Howse, deceased, who died in 1855. They are his widow and three children (girls), the oldest of whom was at the time this property was taken eleven years of age.

"Your committee have therefore examined carefully into the loyalty of the widow.

"If the claim had been reported to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, as the act of July 4, 1864, directed, it would undoubtedly have been paid, as allowed by the Quartermaster-General, at $10,975, in 1867; but the error of the Quartermaster-General caused the delay. Inasmuch as the claim was carefully examined by the quartermaster's agent and allowed by the Quartermaster-General in 1867, and as the evidence fully justifies the decision then made, your committee have carefully examined the question of loyalty, which was the ground upon which the Quartermaster-General rejected the case in 1880.

"Three of the claimants were minors (girls). Their loyalty will not be questioned. The widow was remarried in 1865, during the month of January, to Leonidas Russell, who was an officer in the Union Army.

"Upon the question of loyalty the papers disclose the following official orders:

"HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES,
"Murfreesborough, Tenn., August 18, 1862.

"Mrs. Howse having applied to these headquarters for the protection of a safeguard, having satisfied me of her loyalty to the United States, such protection is hereby given her. All persons in the employ of the United States are warned at their peril not to take or molest the property or things or disturb the quiet of her household.

"W. B. HAZEN,
"Colonel, Commanding at Murfreesborough.

"MEDICAL DIRECTOR'S OFFICE,
"DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
"Headquarters, March 4, 1863.

"SIR: The general commanding directs that rations are to be issued to Mrs. Howse and servants. She is to pay for them if practicable; if not, the rations are nevertheless to be issued.

"By order of medical director, Department of the Cumberland.

"JAMES F. WEIDS, A. S., U. S. A.,
"Assistant Medical Director, Department of the Cumberland.

"It seems remarkable to your committee that, in view of the foregoing orders, issued about the time her property was taken, and in face of a large number of affidavits of Army officers, any question could be raised as to the loyalty of Mrs. Howse (now Mrs. Russell). Your committee are satisfied, after a careful examination of the evidence, that the only testimony impeaching Mrs. Howse's loyalty emanated from personal enemies of the second husband, Dr. Leonidas Russell, who occupies a prominent part in the politics of Rutherford County, Tennessee, and upon this question an agent of the Quartermaster-General, specially detailed to investigate the facts, reported, under date of July 2, 1880:

"'Against her loyalty are certain charges made against the conduct of her second husband since the war by men who had very emphatically sworn to her loyalty as a matter of personal knowledge.

* * * * * * *

"'But it is opposed by an overwhelming mass of contrary testimony, much of it from persons equally entitled to credence and having a longer acquaintance, and claimant would seem to be entitled to the benefit of the great preponderance of the testimony in her favor.

"'She is entitled to the benefit of testimony in her favor, which greatly preponderates, and I report her loyal.'

"Your committee are satisfied, after a careful examination of the evidence, that Mrs. Howse (now Mrs. Russell) was loyal to the Government of the United States, and this appears to be the only point questioned by the Quartermaster-General in his decision of 1880.

"The claims presented are for $23,842. The claimants now propose to accept $10,975, the amount allowed by the Quartermaster-General in 1867, as a full settlement of all claims and demands against the United States, because, owing to the long lapse of time since the claim originated, as well as the unsettled condition of the country at that time, it will now be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to secure competent testimony to establish the claim in the Court of Claims; and claimants contend that the report of Captain Kirk was made after a personal examination by him very shortly after the property was taken, that the action of the Quartermaster-General in 1867 was in accordance with law, and the sum allowed should be paid.

"We are clearly of opinion that payment should be made for the property taken, and think, under all the circumstances, that the amount allowed by the Quartermaster-General should be, as is proposed by claimants, accepted by all parties as final; and we therefore recommend that the bill do pass."

Your committee, after due consideration, fully concur with the conclusions reached in the foregoing report. The property charged for consists of stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army at a time when such necessary articles could not be furnished by the Government, and compensation should be made therefor. The settlement of the claim by the Quartermaster-General in 1867 should be held as conclusive, and we therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am in great doubt about this bill. As is stated in the report of the committee, it appears that the War Department officers at one time, and not a great while after the war, rejected this claim on account of the want of loyalty of the claimant or of the person whose property originally is said to have been taken; but now, after a lapse of ten or fifteen years since that time, the present committee of the House of Representatives (and our committee adopt their report, which I think is a very bad practice, but that has nothing to do with this present point) think that after a lapse of time the doubt about the loyalty of the claimant ought to be solved in favor of the claimant. If that principle be a sound one, then, in five or ten years hence every claim for everything taken or destroyed during the four years of war can go through on the ground that loyalty must be presumed because you can not at such a distance of time prove affirmatively that loyalty or disloyalty did exist in the great mass of the cases.

I do not wish at this moment to object to this bill, because it may be that on explanation by somebody it will appear to be right. Reserving that, I ask the Senator from Tennessee, or somebody who may know about it, to give us a little more light on the subject.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply wish to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact, as the report shows and as the face of the bill shows, that the beneficiaries are not the widow of Howse, now Mrs. Russell, in respect to whose loyalty these commentaries are made, but the eldest one of the beneficiaries was a girl of eleven years of age when these events occurred. But if it be dependent upon the loyalty of the mother, who was the widow of Howse and who had no rights in respect to this particular property, the preponderance of proof as to her loyalty is so overwhelming that I do not think the Senator from Vermont or any other Senator would express a doubt upon scrutinizing the testimony.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, there was but one question involved in this case, and that was the question of loyalty. All others presented by the record were favorably passed upon by the officers of the Government to whom the claim was presented for adjudication. Having that single question for decision by the committee, and knowing that it was a jurisdictional one, I as a subcommittee examined the evidence with the utmost care, and I can state to the Senator from Vermont and to the Senate, that the statement in the report that the evidence tended in any degree to establish the fact of disloyalty, even as to the mother of the claimants, was evidence that no court or jury would have considered for one moment.

Two-thirds of those who swore to the disloyalty of the mother of the claimants were persons who had testified prior to her marriage to a Union officer of her absolute loyalty to the Federal Government; but it seems that for some reason, subsequent to the marriage of this lady in 1865 to an officer of the Union Army, some of these parties changed their opinion as to her devotion to the Union who had previously testified to that effect. Even accepting, for the sake of argument, all that proof as given by credible witnesses, the evidence in the record of the Government officials and others is overwhelming testimony in favor of her loyalty.

I will further state to the Senator from Vermont that there has been three special agents appointed by the Department to examine into this case, every one of whom reported that she was a loyal woman. The only difficulty that I had in the consideration of the question was to learn if possible how the Quartermaster-General, upon the evidence of his own officer sent as late as 1880, just prior to his decision, to ascertain and report upon this single question and who reported her loyalty as ascertained beyond peradventure—how he could have decided upon the evidence then in the case that she was not loyal or that he did not feel justified in certifying that the claimant was a loyal woman. From my examination of the testimony, the reports of the several special agents of the Department, I reached the conclusion that no hesitation upon the question of loyalty should have existed in the mind of the Quartermaster-General for one moment. It was only after ascertaining that there could be no doubt upon that fact that the committee agreed to report the bill unanimously. I hope the conclusion of the committee will be sustained by the Senate and that the bill will be passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Assuming for the moment that this lady was a friend of her country and not an enemy of it, I should like to know whether this case is one of a very large class that the law referred to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army for consideration, and whether this bill is to be an act of Congress overruling a decision that applies to a great class of such cases, or how it does happen in the state of the law, which has existed since the war, that this claim, if a valid one, was not brought before the Court of Claims or the Southern Claims Commission—which I rather think did exclude quartermaster's claims, but I do not remember distinctly about that—so that we can understand whether this is a special and excepted instance from the great mass of quartermaster's claims, or whether it is one of those in which we are expected to review the decision of the tribunal, whatever it may be, that Congress has previously appointed in regard to determining questions of this character. If it be an exceptional case that does not make a precedent for a mass of claims to be reviewed as time goes on and witnesses disappear, and all that, it is one thing. If it is one of the mass of that class, then I think we ought to take further time to consider it; but I do not object at this moment, because I hope it may be all that is claimed.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. I desire to call attention to the fact that I was called to order for speaking twice some time ago, under Rule VIII, and I hope that rule will be enforced hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee has once spoken on this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. That is true, but I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to answer in a minute and a half the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. The report of the committee shows the case to be decidedly exceptional. It was a case that was referred to the Quartermaster-General. He sent his agent to Tennessee to investigate the matter, and after that investigation and the report of the agent, instead of the Quartermaster-General making his report to the Third Auditor, as the act of Congress required, he made it to the Secretary of War, and the claim lay there in the office of the Secretary of War, which Secretary had no power over the question, until a late day.

Mr. FAULKNER. Eighteen hundred and eighty.

Mr. HARRIS. Eighteen hundred and eighty the Senator who reported the case informs me. Since that time a bill has been introduced from Congress to Congress, and has never met with anything else than a favorable report. It has been reported favorably in one House or the other in every Congress since that time, and now it stands on the Calendar with not only the favorable report of the House committee, but the passage of the bill by the House and the favorable report of the Senate committee.

Mr. BATE. Right on that point I wish to say a word. It appears by the report that—

The case was returned by the Secretary of War to the Quartermaster-General, and, pending further action, communications were received impeaching the loyalty of claimants. The case remained suspended until December 3, 1880, when it was again considered by the Quartermaster-General and rejected, because, as was decided by the then Quartermaster-General, he was unable to certify that he was convinced of the loyalty of claimant.

Then he sent his agent, as is shown by the report, to investigate the case, and he came back and made a favorable report and said that the claim ought to be paid.

Furthermore, upon the question of loyalty made by the Senator from Vermont, there are permissions granted at the time when war was flagrant, and the persons in command at that immediate spot—for this was right near the battle-field of Murfreesborough, and this property was taken by the Twenty-first Army Corps, under the command of General Crittenden, and while he was in command there—gave to this lady, who was then a widow and whose property had been taken and destroyed, a permission that they did not give to those who did not take the oath of allegiance, as I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question if I do not violate the rule?

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How long had this lady been a widow, and had her husband been an officer or soldier in the Confederate service?

Mr. BATE. I will tell the Senator in a minute, and I am glad he asks the question. This report shows that her first husband, Mr. Howse, died in 1855, and that she had not remarried, but was a widow at the time the property was taken, and these orphan girls—there were three of them, but one died and the two remaining orphan girls are all that are left of that family. All their property was swept away as the report of the quartermaster shows.

Not only that, but there is a peculiarity in this report which you will observe by scrutinizing it, that they refused to pay for the cabins which are referred to in the report, showing that all the material that was taken and used was done under the order of General Crittenden, or those in command there, but that that was not ordered and they took that as a mere devastation by the troops, and hence refused to pay for it. Here is the permission given by General Hazen to this lady:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES,
Murfreesborough, Tenn., August 18, 1862.

Mrs. Howse having applied to these headquarters for the protection of a safeguard, having satisfied me of her loyalty to the United States, such protection is hereby given her. All persons in the employ of the United States are warned at their peril not to take or molest the property or things or disturb the quiet of her household.

W. B. HAZEN,
Colonel, Commanding at Murfreesborough.

He gave her a card of protection, showing that he was satisfied of her loyalty, and the assistant medical director of the Department of the Cumberland gave her a certificate that, being satisfied of her loyalty, supplies should be furnished her. Why? Because all had been swept from her, and her family was left without a morsel to eat and without clothes to wear.

Such is the report and I am very glad to have the opportunity to set the mind of the Senator from Vermont at rest on that question.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS OF FLATHEAD BAND OF INDIANS.

The bill (H. R. 7777) to provide for the sale of lands patented to certain members of the Flathead band of Indians in Montana Territory, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 8, after the word "bidder," to strike out the words "for cash;" so as to read:

That after the appraisement herein authorized shall have been completed, and after due notice, the Secretary of the Interior shall offer said lands for sale through the proper land office in tracts not exceeding 160 acres, which shall be the limit of the amount any one person shall be allowed to purchase, except in cases, if any, where a tract contains a fractional excess over 160 acres, to the highest bidder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of section 2 the following proviso:

Provided further, That before the second or any subsequent payment shall be received, the purchaser shall prove to the satisfaction of the land office that he is actually residing upon the tract of land so purchased, and that he is entitled under the laws of the United States to the benefit of the homestead laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] who reported the bill being absent, I venture to move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. DAWES were appointed.

COUNTERFEIT MONEY DEALERS.

The bill (H. R. 9268) to punish dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and other fraudulent devices for using the United States mails was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with an amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That section 5480 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5480. If any person having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or to sell, dispose of, loan, exchange, alter, give away, or distribute, supply, or furnish, or procure for unlawful use any counterfeit or spurious coin, bank notes, paper money, or any obligation or security of the United States or of any State, Territory, or municipality, company, corporation, or person, or anything represented to be or intimated or held out to be such counterfeit or spurious articles, or any scheme or artifice to obtain money by or through correspondence, by what is commonly called 'the sawdust swindle,' or 'counterfeit money fraud,' or by dealing or pretending to deal in what is commonly called 'green articles,' 'green coin,' 'bills,' 'paper goods,' 'spurious Treasury notes,' 'United States goods,' 'green cigars,' or any other names or terms intended to be understood as relating to such counterfeit or spurious article, to be effected by either opening or intending to open correspondence or communication with any other person, whether resident within or outside the United States, by means of the post-office establishment of the United States, or by inciting such other person or any person to open communication with the person so devising or intending, shall, in and for executing such scheme or artifice or attempting so to do, place or cause to be placed any letter, packet, writing, circular, pamphlet, or advertisement in any post-office, branch post-office, or street or hotel letter-box of the United States, to be sent or delivered by the said post-office establishment, or shall take or receive any such therefrom, such person so misusing the post-office establishment shall, upon conviction, be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 and by imprisonment for not more than eighteen months, or by both such punishments, at the discretion of the court. The indictment, information, or complaint may severally charge offenses to the number of three when committed within the same six calendar months; but the the court thereupon shall give a single sentence, and shall proportion the punishment especially to the degree in which the abuse of the post-office establishment enters as an instrument into such fraudulent scheme and device."

SEC. 2. That any person who, in and for conducting, promoting, or carrying on, in any manner by means of the post-office establishment of the United States, any scheme or device mentioned in the preceding section, or any other unlawful business whatsoever, shall use or assume or request to be addressed by any fictitious, false, or assumed title, name, or address, or name other than his own proper name, or shall take or receive from any post-office of the United States any letter, postal-card, or packet addressed to any such fictitious, false, or assumed title, name, or address, or name other than his own lawful and proper name, shall, upon conviction, be punishable as provided in the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. That the Postmaster-General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him, that any person is using any fictitious, false, or assumed name, title, or address in conducting, promoting, or carrying on, or assisting therein, by means of the post-office establishment of the United States, any business scheme or device in violation of the provisions of this act, instruct any postmaster at any post-office at which such letters, cards, or packets, addressed to such fictitious, false, or assumed name or address arrive to notify the party claiming or receiving such letters, cards, or packets to appear at the post-office and be identified; and if the party so notified fail to appear and be identified, or if it shall satisfactorily appear that such letters, cards, or packets are addressed to a fictitious, false, or assumed name or address, such letters, postal-cards, or packages shall be forwarded to the dead-letter office as fictitious matter.

SEC. 4. That all matter the deposit of which in the mails is by this act made punishable is hereby declared non-mailable; but nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employé of the dead-letter office, duly authorized thereto, to open any letter not addressed to himself.

SEC. 5. That whenever the Postmaster-General is satisfied that letters or packets sent in the mails are addressed to places not the residence or business address of the persons for whom they are intended, to enable such persons to escape identification, he may direct postmasters to deliver such letters only from the post-office upon identification of persons addressed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment to the bill just passed, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. REAGAN were appointed.

GUARDIAN OF SAMUEL HOWARD.

The bill (H. R. 1029) for the relief of J. S. Flake, guardian of Samuel Howard, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $100 to James S. Flake, guardian of Samuel Howard (a lunatic), of Henderson County, Tennessee, for quartermaster's stores, consisting of one horse, taken from him and appropriated by the military forces of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no written report accompanying the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill go over, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over without prejudice. The next House bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. HARRIS. What was done with House bill 1029?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It went over on the objection of the Senator from Vermont, without prejudice.

Mr. HARRIS. It involves a very small matter, and was reported by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. As he is not present, I will not insist on its consideration, because I have not examined the matter.

ALLOTMENT OF LAND IN SEVERALTY.

The bill (H. R. 11634) to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to the United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 18, after the words "agricultural, or" to strike out "other" and insert mining;" so as to read:

And said United Peorias and Miamies shall have power, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to lease for grazing, agricultural, or mining purposes from time to time and for any period not exceeding ten years at any one time, all of said residue, or any part thereof, the proceeds or rental to be divided between said tribes in proportion to their respective interests in said residue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 23, after the word "residue," to strike out:

And after said allotments are completed each allottee may lease or rent his or her individual allotment for any period not exceeding three years, the father acting for his minor children, and in case of no father, then the mother, the chief acting for orphans of the tribe to which said orphans may belong.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And the agent for the time being having charge of said Indians is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to lease or rent the allotment of any orphan child for a period not exceeding three years at any one time, nor exceeding the minority of said orphan child, and to expend the rental received therefrom for the education and advancement in civilization of said orphan child, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to section 4, line 2.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At some time I wish to move an amendment there to give an appeal from the Court of Claims, who have this jurisdiction, to the Supreme Court of the United States. If there be no objection, I should like to move it now lest it be forgotten. I move to insert "subject to an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, as in other cases," where that jurisdiction is conferred.

Mr. HOAR. Where is that appeal from?

Mr. EDMUNDS. From the judgment of the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Vermont indicate the line in which the amendment is to be inserted?

Mr. EDMUNDS. After the word "claims," in section 4, line 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 2, after the word "claims," it is proposed to insert "subject to an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, as in other cases;" so as to read:

SEC. 4. That full jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, subject to an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, as in other cases, to hear and determine what are the just rights at law, or in equity, of those Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw Indians, and of their children, or heirs at law, or legal representatives, who became citizens of the United States under the provisions of article 28 of the treaty of February 23, 1867, made with the confederated tribes of Peorias, Kaskaskias, Weas, and Piankeshaws, in the invested funds and other common property of the said confederated tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I desire to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, but the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] thinks that this bill will be concluded in a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time allotted for the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII having expired, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution, by Mr. HOAR, authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate alleged election outrages in certain States.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President——

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Virginia to allow us to finish this bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CALL and Mr. HARRIS. What is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time allotted for the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII having expired, the Chair laid before the Senate the unfinished business. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside to proceed with the consideration of the bill which was being read by the Chief Clerk.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senate will extend the time for the consideration of the Calendar one hour longer.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, no.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the agreement of the Senate may be extended to 10 minutes past 6 o'clock for the consideration of the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will allow the Senate to go forward in the calling of the Calendar for the remainder of the evening.

Mr. HOAR. Should not my colleague's request for unanimous consent first be put?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will endeavor to ascertain the will of the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that we may be allowed to finish the pending bill.

Mr. GORMAN. If there is any objection to the request I made I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside for the consideration of the bill now being read by the Chief Clerk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill (H. R. 11634) to provide for allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by striking out all of the clause concerning the payment of counsel, which has no business, I think, in an act of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The part proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, beginning in line 43, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Out of the funds so found due to said citizen Indians said Court of Claims may allow a reasonable compensation to the counsel or attorneys of such Indians, to be ratably apportioned upon and paid out of the sums due them, respectively; and the court may ascertain the reasonable value of the services of counsel employed by said confederate tribes to represent the tribes on such examination, not to exceed 10 per cent. of the aggregate sum actually in controversy, and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be paid to said counsel so much of the sum so ascertained as in equity and justice he may consider to be due them for such services, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States now due to such tribes arising from the sale of the lands of said tribe in Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. STOCKBRIDGE were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12571) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12571) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the further consideration of the conference report on the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Pending that motion, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 27, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 26, 1889.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

JOHN J. LOCKREY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message of the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred, on motion of Mr. MATSON, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 220, entitled "An act granting a pension to John J. Lockrey."

It is stated that this beneficiary enlisted April 11, 1865, but it appears from the muster-roll of his company for May and June, 1865, that he was a recruit assigned, but who had not joined. There is nothing appearing on the record which positively shows that he ever reached his regiment.

It is conceded that his real and nominal connection with the Army extended only from April 11, 1865, when he was mustered in, until August, 1865, when he was discharged for disability, consisting of a disease of the eye, called in the surgeon's certificate "iritis with conjunctivitis."

It seems that this claimant enlisted just at the close of the war, and was connected in a manner with the Army for four months. It is not probable that he ever saw any actual service, for none is stated in the papers before me; and it does appear that he spent a large part of his short term of enlistment in hospitals and under treatment for a trouble with his eye. As early as May 23, 1865, he was admitted to hospital with gonorrheal ophthalmia. His claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that this was the cause of his disability, and the inferences from the proof presented make this extremely probable.

One of the witnesses who testified that the beneficiary caught cold in his eye in April, 1865, on the Mississippi River, is shown to have been at that time with his regiment and company at Danville, Va.

The circumstances surrounding this case and the facts proved, satisfy me that the determination of the Pension Bureau was correct, and there is certainly no sentiment in favor of the claimant which justifies the indulgence of violent presumptions for the purpose of overriding such determination.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 23, 1889.

JOHN M'COOL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following veto message of the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred, on motion of Mr. MATSON, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 5807, entitled "An act granting a pension to John McCool."

This beneficiary served in an Iowa regiment of volunteers from May 27, 1861, to July 12, 1865.

He filed a petition for pension, alleging an accidental wound in the right thumb while extracting a cartridge from a pistol in August, 1861. There is no record of any such disability, though it appears that he was on a furlough about the date of his alleged injury. It appears that he served nearly four years after the time he fixed as the date of his injury.

No evidence was filed in support of the claim he filed, and he refused to appear for examination, though twice notified to do so.

His claim was rejected in May, 1888, no suggestion having been made of any other disability than the wound in the thumb, upon which his claim before the bureau was based.

The report of the committee in the House of Representatives recommending the passage of this bill contains no intimation that there exists any disability contracted in the military service, but distinctly declares the pension recommended a service pension, and states that the beneficiary is blind.

As long as the policy of granting pensions for disability traceable to the incidents of Army service is adhered to, the allowance of pensions by special acts based upon service only gives rise to unjust and unfair discriminations among those equally entitled, and makes precedents which will eventually result in an entire departure from the principle upon which pensions are now awarded.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 23, 1889.

WILLIAM BARNES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following veto message of the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred, on motion of Mr. MATSON, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 11999, entitled "An act granting a pension to William Barnes."

The beneficiary named in this bill served in a Kentucky regiment from August 9, 1861, to December 6, 1864.

He made claim for pension in the Pension Bureau, in September, 1882, alleging that in October, 1862, he was accidentally injured by a pistol shot in the thigh while in the line of duty.

It is conceded that he was wounded by the discharge of a pistol which he was carrying while he was absent from his command with permission on a visit to his home, and that the discharge of the pistol was accidental.

The circumstances of the injury are neither given in the report of the committee, to whom the claim was referred by the House of Representatives, nor in the report of the case furnished to me from the Pension Bureau; but on the conceded facts, the granting of a pension in this case can be predicated upon no other theory except the liability of the Government for any injury by accident to a person in the military service, whether in the line of duty or not.

I think the adoption of the principle that the Government is an insurer against accidents under any circumstances befalling those enlisted in its military service, when visiting at home, is an unwarrantable stretch of pension legislation.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 23, 1889.

HENRY V. BASS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following veto message of the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred, on motion of Mr. MATSON, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 11803, entitled "An act granting a pension to Henry V. Bass."

This beneficiary enlisted September 9, 1862, and was mustered out August 15, 1865. The records show no disability during his service.

It is now alleged that the soldier was sitting on the ground near his tent while two comrades were wrestling near him, and that in the course of the scuffle one of the parties engaged in it was thrown or fell upon the beneficiary, injuring his right knee and ankle.

Upon these facts the claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the injury was not received in the line of duty.

I do not think that the Government should be held as an insurer against injuries of this kind, which are in no manner related to the performance of military service.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 23, 1889.

SQUIRE WALTER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following veto message of the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred, on motion of Mr. MATSON, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill numbered 10448, entitled "An act granting a pension to Squire Walter."

The son of the beneficiary named in this bill enlisted in a West Virginia regiment on the 28th day of June, 1861.

On the 15th day of September, 1862, while bathing in the Potomac River, near the Chain Bridge, with the knowledge and consent of his commanding officer, he was drowned.

It is perfectly clear that he lost his life while in the enjoyment of a privilege, and when, at his request, military discipline was relaxed and its restraints removed for his comfort and pleasure. His death resulted from his voluntary and perfectly proper personal indulgence, and can not be in the least attributed to military service.

The father does not appear to be so needy and dependent as is often exhibited in cases of this class.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 25, 1889.

PRODUCTION OF PRECIOUS METALS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report from the Director of the Mint upon the production of precious metals for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYÉS IN DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting a list of the employés in the Department of Justice, with the compensation of each, and stating that they have been usefully employed, and that their services are indispensable; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, submitting a report of final judgments against the United States, not appealed from, in suits brought under the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DIVISION OF SIOUX INDIAN RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10970) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes; said bill having been returned from the Senate with amendments and a request for a conference.

Mr. PEEL. I ask that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to this bill and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. PEEL, Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi, and Mr. NELSON as conferees on the part of the House.

MRS. MARY T. DUNCAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 325) for the relief of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in the Senate amendments, which reduce the amount allowed this claimant some $3,000.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendments had better be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

SECTION 2579 REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12414) to amend section 2579 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that unanimous consent be given to concur in the Senate amendment to this bill.

Mr. JACKSON. What is the subject-matter?

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. The original bill proposed to amend a certain section of the Revised Statutes of the United States, giving authority to a deputy collector to enter and clear vessels——

Mr. JACKSON. That is satisfactory.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. This amendment of the Senate relates only to a clause of the section.

Mr. JACKSON. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate amendment was concurred in.

WILLIAM ENGLISH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3721) authorizing the President to appoint William English an officer in the regular Army of the United States.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask that the amendments be read with a view to asking concurrence.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments.

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

ESTABLISHMENT OF CERTAIN LIGHT-HOUSES, FOG-SIGNALS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles, in which concurrence was requested and a conference with the House asked thereon, namely:

A bill (H. R. 11678) providing for the erection of sundry light-houses and fog-signals in Lakes Erie, Huron, Michigan, and Superior;

A bill (H. R. 12324) for the establishment of a light-house station on St. Catharine's Island, State of Georgia; and

A bill (H. R. 12430) providing for the establishment of a light and fog-signal at Humboldt, Cal., upon a more secure site, and for the establishment of a light-ship at or near the wrecked steam-ship Oregon, in New York Harbor.

The amendments, on motion of Mr. CLARDY, were severally non-concurred in, and the conference requested by the Senate agreed to.

LINCOLN LAND DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3778) to establish the Lincoln land district in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent, to put that bill upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objection will be asked for.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that I want to object, but I wish to inquire first whether the boundaries of the proposed district conflict with the Folsom district?

Mr. JOSEPH. No, sir.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL TELEGRAPH FACILITIES IN WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (S. R. 137) providing for additional telegraph facilities in the city of Washington during the inauguration ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1889.

The SPEAKER. This resolution is short and had better be read in full.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, the second reading being in full.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask, by unanimous consent, to consider the joint resolution at this time.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ABBOTT. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the order made by the House on the 22d instant, which is in the following words:

Resolved, That on and after to-day the House sessions shall begin at 10 a. m., and, after the reading of the Journal, up to 11 a. m., the names of members shall be called in their alphabetical order for the consideration of matters by unanimous consent.

I take it, sir, that under this order there is nothing in order at this time but to call the names of the members in their alphabetical order for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. But the last clause of the order to which the gentleman refers shows clearly that the Speaker was to continue as heretofore to lay the executive communications and Senate bills before the House, and that he might entertain requests for unanimous consent at this time to pass Senate bills, as has been the case heretofore when such bills were laid before the House.

Mr. ABBOTT. But I would respectfully call the attention of the Chair to the latter clause, which provides:

And it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for unanimous consent at any other time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will read on he will see that the latter clause of the rule gives authority to do precisely what the Chair has been doing.

Mr. ABBOTT. It provides:

Except to concur or non-concur in Senate amendments to House bills or to consider Senate bills when presented to the House by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the House is now doing.

Mr. ABBOTT. Very well, if that is the construction of the order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY M. RECTOR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bill 314, for the relief of Henry M. Rector; which was read twice.

Mr. ROGERS. That is a bill for a sum of $399 balance due Governor Rector on the books of the Treasury. It has been reported to the House, and I ask to have it considered.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Henry M. Rector the sum of $399.91, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being the amount standing to the credit of said Rector on the books of the Treasury of the United States, as shown by page 162, Executive Document No. 363, first session Forty-ninth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. CANNON. What is it for?

Mr. ROGERS. It is a balance due Governor Rector, who was marshal for the district of Arkansas and could not get a settlement of his account. He could not ascertain what was due him or what was due to the Government. Finally the Senate by resolution asked for this balance, and the books of the Treasury disclose that this balance is due Governor Rector.

Mr. CANNON. When was that; how many years ago is it?

Mr. ROGERS. It was many years ago; in 1852 or 1853. The war came up, and of course he could not get any settlement.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GUENTHER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the bill (H. R. 12291) to regulate immigration.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BUNNELL, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies papers in the case of L. D. Forrest.

CONFEREES ON BRIDGE AND LIGHT-HOUSE BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as conferees on all the bills relating to light-houses, bridges, and other matters of the Committee on Commerce which have been disposed of this morning, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY], the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAGAN], and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. T. H. B. BROWNE].

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 11527) to establish lights on the western end of Coney Island, New York.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the Clerk will proceed to call the names of members alphabetically for requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the order for unanimous consent for to-day, and that the House proceed to the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. BIGGS. I object.

Mr. ABBOTT's name was called.

Mr. ABBOTT. I ask, by unanimous consent, to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1974) for the erection of a public building at Fort Worth, Tex.

Mr. BLAND. As the House has refused to proceed with appropriation bills, I move that it take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. In view of that motion, I ask by unanimous consent to make a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations, being the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. BIGGS. Regular order. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I give notice that I will make this request at 11 o'clock precisely.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Pending that motion I desire to call the attention of the House to a bill on the Calendar——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri object to the gentleman from New York making a statement concerning a bill?

Mr. BLAND. What statement?

The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair does not know what statement the gentleman desires to make.

Mr. LYNCH. Regular order.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the regular order for one minute. I want to call attention to the bill (H. R. 8063) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid vessels wrecked or disabled in the waters conterminous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada," approved June 19, 1888. This is a very important bill, both to the United States and Canada. It is a matter for the saving of life as well as of property. It went to the Committee on the Judiciary; has been reported unanimously; is now on the Calendar, and as the committee will not be reached during the remainder of this session and thus have an opportunity of calling up the bill, I desire to call it up.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Parliament—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 46.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ABBOTT] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

During the count,

Mr. TAULBEE said: Pending the vote I ask leave to introduce a bill for reference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TURNER, of Georgia). The request is not in order at this time.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask the gentleman making the point of no quorum to withdraw it for the time being, so that I may introduce this bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKRR pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BREWER. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not interfere with business.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would not by any means; but I would like to introduce this bill.

The hour of 11 o'clock having arrived,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The time for asking unanimous consent has expired.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the motion to take a recess.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to submit a report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 56, 57, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 80, 83, 93, 104, 107, 110, 111, 113, 114, 153, 157, 163, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, and 172.

They recommend non-concurrence in the amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 14, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 69, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 81, 82, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 102, 103, 105, 106, 108, 109, 112, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 154, 155, 156, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 164, 165, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199.

They recommend concurrence in the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, with an amendment as follows:

On page 31 of the bill, in line 23, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "Which sum shall be expended under contract or contracts, to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury with the lowest and best bidder or bidders therefor, after advertising once a week for four consecutive weeks for proposals."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. There are thirty minutes for explanation or debate.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount added by the Senate to the bill as it passed the House was $3,453,151. There are three or four main items of controversy. One relates to the question of the use of steam-presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Another relates to the Library building, the question being whether the law of last year shall be changed so that the structure shall have a limit of $6,000,000 instead of $4,000,000. The third material point in controversy is in relation to the provision made in the Senate amendment for the purchase of a lot immediately west of the Post-Office Department building for the city post-office and other public offices, which is an indefinite appropriation and can be regulated in amount only by the judgment of a Washington jury.

Mr. MILLS. That is the block between D and E streets?

Mr. RANDALL. It is.

Mr. MILLS. And it is all built up?

Mr. RANDALL. It is all built up.

Mr. MILLS. What is the estimated cost of that lot?

Mr. RANDALL. The present rumor is that it may cost $1,250,000.

Mr. MILLS. To condemn the property?

Mr. RANDALL. To condemn the property. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in that Senate amendment. It may not be inappropriate for me to say here that prior to the distribution of the appropriation bills the Committee on Appropriations possessed the power to add legislation on general appropriation bills which would reduce expenditures. During that period such legislation proposed by the House was uniformly resisted by the Senate. They would not admit any such legislation to go upon an appropriation bill. After that the Committee on Appropriations and the other committees of this House having charge of appropriation bills were deprived of the right to report any legislation upon appropriation bills. Notwithstanding the attitude of the Senate which I have already stated, a change seems to have come over that body of late, and we have fallen into a practice which enables the Senate to put almost anything it pleases in the way of legislation upon a general appropriation bill, while the House is not equal to the Senate in that particular. Of course the Committee on Appropriations have resisted this practice as far as they have been able, and will continue to do so until the House itself shall direct a relinquishment of the resistance.

Mr. TAULBEE. What are we asked to do now with reference to this matter?

Mr. RANDALL. We are asked not only to expend three millions and a half in addition to what the House thought sufficient, but also to involve the Government in large and indefinite additional expenditures.

Mr. TAULBEE. But what is the pending motion?

Mr. RANDALL. The pending motion is to adopt the report of the Committee on Appropriations on this bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. And that report recommends non-concurrence in these amendments?

Mr. RANDALL. It recommends non-concurrence in the amendments which I have stated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania about the Library feature of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. We recommend non-concurrence in that amendment because it comes under the class of amendments I have mentioned.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The different estimates that you speak of, four millions and six millions respectively, do they include the cost of the ground also?

Mr. RANDALL. The ground has been paid for already, I believe.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And those estimates relate only to the building?

Mr. RANDALL. There is $500,000 provided in the bill in that connection, which is adequate for present purposes whether the limit of the structure be $6,000,000 or $4,000,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. So that whether the limit be fixed at either figure there will be money enough for the current year appropriated by the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. There will be sufficient to cover the expenditures of the year with the money already unexpended.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But my question is, whether the estimates of $4,000,000 and $6,000,000 relate, respectively, to the structure only, or whether they include also any part of the purchase of the ground.

Mr. RANDALL. They relate only to the structure. But, if I may venture an opinion, I will say that I think the House will be required to take a position on the question of fixing the limit either at $4,000,000 or $6,000,000, because I am quite satisfied that the conferees of the House, whoever they may be, will adhere to the law.

Mr. HEARD. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to say that there is $500,000 appropriated by the bill in any case.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

Mr. HEARD. So that, whether we adopt the $4,000,000 or the $6,000,000 estimate, that $500,000, added to what is already unexpended, will be sufficient for the expenditures contemplated for this year.

Mr. RANDALL. I have so stated, and now repeat.

Mr. HEARD. Then what is the basis of this insistence that the House and the Senate shall agree upon the one plan or the other now?

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I can express only my own individual opinion on that point. I think that where the law fixes a limit of $4,000,000, that limit ought not to be changed on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman does not quite understand me. My point was that there seems to be no necessity for an abandonment of our position on that score. According to the statement of the gentleman, as I understand, the provision which we make in our bill is ample for any contingency which may arise, whether we adopt ultimately the $4,000,000 limit or the $6,000,000 limit.

Mr. RANDALL. I would not like to give a distinct answer to that question. It might affect the contract to be made for the outer stone of the building, which it may be thought desirable to obtain from a particular quarry.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether there was a difference of opinion between the conferees of the two Houses upon the adoption of the amendment with reference to the international conference of American nations—the provision on page 57 of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. As to that matter we recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. HOOKER. That was a Senate amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER. Well, I wish to ask whether the present attitude of the bill will admit of an amendment being offered for the consideration of the committee of conference, an amendment which I design to come in after the words "seventy-five thousand dollars" in line 11, page 57. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to the House that my object is to provide that during, or immediately before or after, this commercial conference of the Central and South American countries with our own, we shall have in the city of Washington a celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of the Constitution of the United States.

I am advised that in another part of the bill there is a very insignificant appropriation of $3,000 for the purpose of celebrating on the 30th of April of the present year the inauguration of the first President of the United States, General Washington. The proposition which I now suggest and which I desire to get into this bill in some form or other, is that we shall in this centennial year of the establishment of the Constitution and Government of the United States have at the capital city of Washington some suitable commemoration of that event. In such a commemoration these very nations which are expected to unite with us in this commercial convention will no doubt be glad to participate; and I may add it has been to me a subject of regret that the President of the United States has not yet (unless he has done so within the last few days) appointed the ten commissioners authorized by the law providing for that convention.

Sir, I think that we ought to have in this centennial year, 1889, a celebration of the inauguration of our Constitution and the establishment of our present form of government; and this celebration would come with especial fitness at a period when we are having this conference upon commercial subjects with these sister Republics of Central and South America who in their own organic forms of government have adopted as a model the Constitution of the United States almost in totidem verbis, and certainly in its essential spirit.

I therefore hope that no objection will be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the consideration of the following amendment, which it will be observed carries with it no appropriation:

On page 57, after line 11 (appropriating $75,000 for American conference), add:

"Provided, That before or during the conference suitable ceremonies shall be had in commemoration of the centennial anniversary of the inauguration of the Constitution of the United States, the time, place, and manner thereof to be fixed by the delegates of the United States."

I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will offer no objection to this proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. I certainly shall.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered upon the adoption of this report.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to make a statement in connection with this matter.

In regard to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, on page 57 of the printed bill, we have recommended non-concurrence, for the reason that there has been already appropriated under the act there mentioned $75,000 for the object contemplated; and we do not know that a dollar of that sum has yet been expended. The Committee on Appropriations, in the absence of any information or report as to the expenditure of this $75,000, recommended non-concurrence.

Now the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi relates to another matter entirely. That proposition was submitted to the Senate and disagreed to. It will involve ultimately an expenditure of $300,000. It is not possible to offer it here; nor if it was possible am I authorized to admit such an amendment. The provision further on, to which the gentleman has referred, relates, I believe, to the reading of the Constitution of the United States, an address in relation thereto by the Chief-Justice of the United States, and some further proceedings, I think—a military parade or something of that kind. The $3,000 proposed to be appropriated for that purpose is, I think, largely in excess of any necessity.

Mr. HOOKER. I beg leave to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I entirely agree with him in that respect, that for the object proposed in the amendment of the Senate an appropriation of $3,000 is entirely too much or entirely too little. The amendment I desire to offer does not carry with it the appropriation of one dollar.

Mr. RANDALL. I know, but it involves great expense hereafter.

Mr. HOOKER. If the gentleman will permit me a moment. The original proposition of the Committee on Foreign Affairs did propose, I believe, an appropriation of $300,000 for that purpose; and in consideration of the magnitude and importance of the celebration proposed, so far as the interests of this country are concerned, as well as the countries we propose to have as our guests, it will be a mere bagatelle in comparison with the expenditure involved in the celebration of the centennial at Philadelphia in 1876. For myself, I regard it as the most important event in the history of the country. It should be marked not only by a celebration of the day on which the first President of the United States was inaugurated; but, Mr. Speaker, it should be marked more significantly as the centennial of the adoption of that instrument whose permeating influences have been felt throughout the civilized world, but more particularly in this country and in those countries with which we are so closely identified by geographical proximity

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman should remember, however, that it is doubted by the best parliamentarians of the House, as well as of the other branch of Congress, whether it is within the power of either to insert new matter in bills of this character which have not been considered by either House. The gentleman will at once see the difficulty his proposition presents, even if it were in order under the rules of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. It can be done by a vote of the House, I suggest.

Mr. GUENTHER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania state what recommendation is made as to amendment numbered 103?

Mr. RANDALL. The controversy there is just this: Both sides propose that the money shall be expended, and the only question is whether it shall come directly out of the moneys in the Treasury, or shall be taken from the fund known as the "immigrant fund." We recommend non-concurrence in the Senate amendment.

Mr. GUENTHER. I hope you will do so and adhere, because there is not money enough in that fund to enforce the provision. There was only about $6,000 surplus last year.

Mr. RANDALL. We want to get at all the facts before determining the question. I do not think there will be any difficulty in the way.

Mr. DUNHAM. On this side of the House it was not possible to hear the explanation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania with regard to the Senate amendment in this bill providing for the purchase of a site for a post-office in this city. I wish to know from the gentleman what the committee recommended in that respect.

Mr. RANDALL. We recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. DUNHAM. That is right.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a proposition involving an indefinite appropriation which might reach $5,000,000.

Mr. DUNHAM. It might be $50,000,000 as far as the provision of the bill is concerned.

The report of the committee was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House request a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. RANDALL, Mr. FORNEY, and Mr. RYAN as conferees on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent, to dispense with this hour for the call of committees, for the purpose of taking up the unfinished appropriation bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman, pending that, couple with his request one that the usual permission be granted to file reports?

Mr. SAYERS. I will do so, Mr. Speaker, and ask unanimous consent that members having reports from committees to make may present them at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. TAULBEE. Including minority views?

Mr. SAYERS. Including also the views of minority members of the committees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas as stated?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPORTS FILED.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

RISING SUN LODGE, DECATUR, ALA.

Mr. LAWLER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 43) to refer the claim against the United States of the trustees of the Rising Sun Masonic Lodge, No. 29, of Decatur, Ala., to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TARIFF STATISTICAL BUREAU.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9827) to create and establish a tariff statistical bureau; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, MARTINSBURGH, W. VA.

Mr. SOWDEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3432) for the erection of a public building at Martinsburgh, W. Va.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PETER CRENSHAW.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5070) for the relief of Peter Crenshaw; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS WHITE RIVER, ARKANSAS.

Mr. PHELAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 11960) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the White River at or near Aberdeen, Prairie County, Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORFEITURE OF WAGON-ROAD GRANTS.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the views of the minority of that committee on the bill (S. 1939) providing in certain cases for the forfeiture of wagon-road grants in the State of Oregon; which were ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

GAMBLING IN AMERICAN FARM INDUSTRIES.

Mr. GLASS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 7051) to prohibit fictitious and gambling transactions on the price of articles produced by American farm industries, and the bill (H. R. 5689) to punish dealing in futures in agricultural products; which were referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHRISTOPHER C. ANDREWS.

Mr. MACDONALD, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12079) for the relief of Christopher C. Andrews; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask, by unanimous consent, that gentlemen having bills to present may be permitted also to hand them in at the Clerk's desk for proper reference under the direction of the Speaker, in view of the fact that we had no opportunity on yesterday to present them.

Mr. SOWDEN. Let that also include resolutions.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will ask to include everything that would be in order under the rule of the House on Monday.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FILING OF BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

The following bills and resolutions were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

OBSTRUCTION OF COMMERCE.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas (by request), submitted a resolution asking the Secretary of War as to the obstruction to commerce of certain railroad and other bridges; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN BRUNER.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas (by request), introduced a bill (H. R. 12645) for the relief of Benjamin Bruner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEXICO AS A STATE.

Mr. JOSEPH introduced a bill (H. R. 12646) to provide for the admission of New Mexico into the Union as a State on an equal footing with the original States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF ARIZONA, IDAHO, AND WYOMING AS STATES.

Mr. SPRINGER introduced a bill (H. R. 12647) to provide for the admission of Arizona, Idaho, and Wyoming into the Union as States on an equal footing with the original States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ELEVENTH CENSUS.

Mr. PERKINS presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, asking that in the law providing for the next national census provision be made for an enumeration of all the ex-Union soldiers and sailors of the late war, showing their ages, the companies and regiment in which they served, and the length of their service; which was referred to the Committee on the Eleventh Census, and ordered to be printed.

TO OPEN INDIAN TERRITORY TO SETTLEMENT.

Mr. PERKINS also presented senate concurrent resolution No. 7, of the Kansas Legislature, asking for legislation that will open the Indian Territory to settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTY TO SUGAR MANUFACTURERS.

Mr. PERKINS also presented a house concurrent resolution, No. 30, of the Kansas Legislature, asking that a bounty be paid to all manufacturers of sugar equal to any reduction that may be made in the existing tariff duty; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

HOUR OF MEETING OF THE HOUSE, ETC.

Mr. SOWDEN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the special order of February 22, 1889, which reads as follows: "Resolved, That on and after to-day the House sessions shall begin at 10 a. m., and, after the reading of the Journal, up to 11 a. m., the names of members shall be called in their alphabetical order for the consideration of matters by unanimous consent; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for unanimous consent at any other time, except to concur or non-concur in Senate amendments to House bills or to consider Senate bills when presented to the House by the Speaker," be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

PRINTING OF EULOGIES ON THE LATE JAMES N. BURNES.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the gentleman from Texas, I desire to report a resolution from the Committee on Printing authorizing the printing of the eulogies on the late Mr. Burnes.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. Res. 266) was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, etc., That there be printed of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late James N. Burnes, a Representative in the Fiftieth Congress from the State of Missouri, 25,000 copies, of which 6,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 19,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have printed a portrait of the said James N. Burnes to accompany said eulogies, and for the purpose of engraving and printing said portrait the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DOCKERY. With the consent of the gentleman from Tennessee, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, That of the quota to the House of Representatives, the Public Printer shall set apart 50 copies, which he will have bound in full morocco, with gilt edges, the same to be delivered when completed to the widow of the deceased.

There being no objection, the amendment was adopted; and the joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to dispense with the call of committees for reports.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the unfinished business, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12571) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse the estate of J. K. Edwards, late an official reporter of the House of Representatives, the amount paid to E. D. Easton for services rendered and expenses incurred as a substitute reporter from June 11 to July 17, 1888, both inclusive, such payment having been authorized by a resolution of the House adopted July 14, 1888, $733.90.

Mr. LAWLER. Before passing from this item I wish to introduce an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Frank B. Gorman $75 for the month of November, 1888, for extra work as mail page.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. LAWLER. I want to state that the two mounted pages besides doing the work they are called upon to do as pages also carry down books and public documents night after night. The associate of Mr. Gorman was paid his extra month, through Mr. Burnes interceding for him, and this amendment is offered in order to equalize the pay of the two.

Mr. SAYERS. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois I will withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay George W. Fisher for services as laborer at the Capitol from August 1 to December 1, 1887, one hundred and twenty days at $2 a day, $240.

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment until I can hear the statement of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Chairman, the facts in connection with these services are these: On the 1st day of August, 1887, George W. Fisher, a colored man of Virginia, was appointed by the then Doorkeeper of the House upon the laborers' roll.

Mr. SAYERS. Which Doorkeeper?

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Donelson, the Doorkeeper at that time. He performed four months' services from the 1st day of August, when he was appointed, to the 1st day of December, 1887. For that service he never received a dollar.

Mr. SAYERS. Why not? Can the gentleman state that to the committee?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I do not know why he did not receive pay. He was put upon the roll at my request, and I know that he performed the services, and the evidence taken when the question was submitted to the Committee on Claims shows that he was not paid a dollar. Of course I can not tell why he was not paid.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAW. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Edward W. Coughlin $150 for services rendered the Committee on Accounts during the first and second sessions of the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. SHAW. I offer that amendment on the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SAYERS. Did not you have some one else, or was not there some other person detailed to perform that duty?

Mr. SHAW. The Doorkeeper of the House detailed a messenger, who was sent there during the meeting of the committee. That committee has constant communication with the Clerk of the House, as the Clerk will testify, papers passing backward and forward.

Mr. SAYERS. I can not withdraw the point of order upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. SHAW. This is a just claim, and if I were financially able I would pay it out of my own pocket. I think the committee is entitled to that courtesy.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For horse and buggy for Department messenger, House of Representatives, for the fiscal year 1890, $250.

To pay Charles Carter for caring for subcommittee-room of Committee on Appropriations, $60.

To pay Charles Holbrook for services as laborer for thirty-seven days, at $2 per day, $74.

To enable the Clerk of the House to rent, during the fiscal year 1890, rooms for the use of the clerks employed under the direction of the Committee on Rules in preparing the general index of the Journals of Congress, $1,200.

Mr. WISE. I offer the following amendment:

To pay J. W. Chickering $126, J. W. Fisher $130, and J. M. Fisher $121.90 for extra work in indexing the House Journal and miscellaneous documents during the first session of the Fiftieth Congress; in all, $377.90.

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the point of order on the amendment until I can hear the statement of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, during the first session of the Fiftieth Congress the Clerk of the House of Representatives made the appointment of an index clerk upon my recommendation. It turned out that that clerk did not perform his duties, and the Clerk of the House was not responsible for that. It is known to the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations that the index clerk usually performs his duties at home. Towards the close of last session he told the Clerk of the House of Representatives and myself that his work was up to date. When we found out that he had neglected his duties he was requested to resign, which he promptly did, and the Clerk of the House made a new appointment. This new appointee came here after the very long and arduous session, and by working night and day brought up the work of last year in a few weeks.

The work of this session is up to this very day. In consequence of the neglect of the gentleman who was first appointed index clerk, it became necessary to employ some assistanee for his successor. That work cost but the small sum of $377.90, and the object of this amendment is to pay these gentlemen who were employed to assist him. It is known to the members of this House that the last session was an unusually long and laborious one, and therefore I hope that the gentleman who has charge of this bill will not object to paying this small sum of $377.90 for this purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state, Mr. Chairman, the reason that I must decline to withdraw the point of order is that the Committee on Appropriations considered the very question involved in this amendment, and they rejected it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please state his point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. The point is that there is no rule of the House and no law authorizing this expenditure.

Mr. WISE. There is a law authorizing the indexing, and it seems to me that an additional appropriation for this purpose certainly ought to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to sustain the point of order unless the gentleman from Virginia can refer to the law.

Mr. WISE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I can not withdraw it, Mr. Chairman. The Committee on Appropriations passed upon this very item and rejected it.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from Virginia can refer the Chair to the law the Chair must sustain the point of order. [After a pause.] The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Thomas A. Coakley, a messenger employed under the resolution of the House, adopted January 19, 1888, at the rate of $100 per month from March 3, 1889, until the assembling of the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, $900 or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ROMEIS. I make the point of order upon that paragraph.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I make the point of order that it changes existing law and is new legislation, and I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will not make that point.

Mr. SAYERS. I call the attention of the Chair and of the committee to page 2377 of the RECORD, February 23, 1889, from which I read:

Mr. HAYES, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably Miscellaneous Document No. 112, providing for the salary of Thomas A. Coakley, asked that the Committee on Accounts be discharged from its further consideration; that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee be authorized to make provision for it in the general deficiency bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The fact was not annouced as to what it was.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a report from the Committee on Accounts asking to be discharged from the consideration of this matter and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana object?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object. I simply wanted to know what it was.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee in reporting this acted under the instruction of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consult the RECORD. [After examining the RECORD.] The Chair thinks that the resolution adopted by the House is sufficient authority for the appearance of this provision in the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. If the Chair will read the resolution carefully through he will see that it applies only until March 3, 1889, while the paragraph proposed to be stricken out puts this man upon the roll of this House after March 3, 1889, and also upon the roll of the next Congress. Now, whether that resolution be existing law or not, certainly this is a change of the terms of the resolution, and if the resolution be not existing law, then there is no law for placing him upon the roll, and therefore this paragraph proposes new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair will see by the RECORD that the House instructed the Committee on Appropriations in this connection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this paragraph is in order under the resolution.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I think the Chair has fallen into a mistake. The RECORD that has been sent up contains a resolution passed at the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, to place this man upon the roll during the existence of the Fiftieth Congress; but the paragraph under consideration proposes to place him upon the roll of the House after the expiration of the life of the Fiftieth Congress, although there will be nothing on earth for him to do after the 3d day of March next but to draw his pay. He is on the roll now as a supernumerary.

Mr. RANDALL. This resolution was sent to the Committee on Appropriations within a week.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will invite the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOOTHMAN] to the fact that the resolution provides for a period from March 4, 1889, until the beginning of the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, and that is exactly the provision of the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. But my point of order is that this paragraph changes existing law. Now, I do not see how the resolution adopted by the Committee on Appropriations, as reported to the House, makes existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. The House has the authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The effect of the resolution is to waive the point of order, and bring the question before the House for consideration.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. But the Chair will remember that my point is, first, that this paragraph changes existing law, and second, that it proposes new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Both of which points of order would be fully sustained but for the action of the House directing the Committee on Appropriations to insert this provision.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that resolution of the House will be read.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to submit another suggestion in this connection before the Chair makes a final ruling. This bill was reported February 12; that is the last report we have from the Committee on Appropriations on this subject. This action by the House was taken February 22—ten days afterwards. So that the resolution referred to the Committee on Appropriations still remains on their docket. The words complained of were reported long before that action of the House was taken, and no further action has been had by the Committee on Appropriations upon the resolution thus referred to them.

There is another thing to which I want to call the attention of the Chair. When this action was taken on the 22d of February the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], after the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAYES] had made his statement, made an inquiry as to what the matter was; and the reply of the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not disclose that the Committee on Appropriations was directed to make provision for it on this bill; it is simply stated that it is a report from the Committee on Accounts, that the committee asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the matter, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. So that the House did not have knowledge of the subject-matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the resolution will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to provide in the general deficiency bill for the salary of Thomas A. Coakley, who was appointed a messenger of the House by resolution adopted January 19, 1888, from March 4, 1889, to the beginning of the first session of the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. Now I ask that the Clerk read in this connection the proceedings on this matter as published in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] what duties will be performed by this man after the 4th day of the coming month.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman had better ask that question of the House which adopted the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], the Chair will state that the resolution does seem to be in the nature of an "enabling act" intended to waive the point of order on the provision of the bill which has already been passed upon by the Committee on Appropriations. As the House has passed upon the identical question, the Chair feels constrained to overrule the point of order and will submit the matter to the committee. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOOTHMAN] moves to strike out this provision of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. One single observation before the amendment is voted upon. This is an attempt to put upon the regular roll of the next House, in advance of its meeting, an official who is upon the present roll—not as a regular official, but by virtue of a special resolution. He is one of the doorkeepers; and I see no reason whatever for this gentleman being from the 3d of March up to the meeting of the next Congress an extra official drawing pay, when there is nothing whatever for him to do or that he can do. This is a direct attempt, so far as it goes, to officer the next House.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BOOTHMAN to strike out the paragraph, there were—ayes 66, noes 68.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GROSVENOR and Mr. SAYERS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 97.

So the motion of Mr. BOOTHMAN was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the clerk to the Committee on Elections for preparing a digest of the contested-election cases of the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses, as authorized by the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives December 20, 1888, $1,500.

Mr. ROWELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Robert Smalls balance of expenses incurred by him in his election contest in the Fiftieth Congress, $3,159.64.

Mr. CRISP. I raise a question of order on that proposition.

Mr. ROWELL. I hope the question of order will not be raised.

Mr. RANDALL. How much is it proposed to pay Mr. Smalls?

Mr. ROWELL. Three thousand one hundred and fifty-nine dollars and sixty-four cents, the exact amount of the expenses incurred by him. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will not raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will state his point of order.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, the law provides, page 400, volume 20, Statutes at Large, that—

Hereafter no contestee or contestant for a seat in the House of Representatives shall be paid exceeding $2,000 for expenses in the election contest.

This contestant and all contestants and contestees at this Congress have been already paid $2,000 by law; and the Committee on Elections, in passing on these cases, determined under the law that was all that could be given, and until this law was repealed we were bound to confine ourselves to the $2,000, which has been done.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. I know there is a statute which limits the amount which may be reported from the committee to pay the expenses of contested elections. I know, too, any other committee of this House to which a bill may be referred to pay these expenses would not for a moment hesitate to report back to Congress in favor of making the payment. The idea of a man going into an election contest legitimately and properly and paying the expenses of that contest without extravagance, and then for Congress to refuse to make repayment to him, is simply to put a fence against legitimate and proper contests in the House.

Mr. REED. The expense in a pretended contest is more than that.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it a well-established fact that the amount claimed in this amendment was actually and necessarily expended by the contestant in addition to the $2,000?

Mr. ROWELL. Unquestionably.

Mr. TAULBEE. In view of the further fact that the delay in the consideration of this case was not the fault of the contestant, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CRISP. I make no discussion on the amount in the case. It may be or it may not be correct. I would not pretend to say it was not correct, because I do not know. The law requires, Mr. Chairman, that the contestant and contestee shall file before the Committee on Elections a statement of the expenses incurred by them in the contest and that the Committee on Elections shall examine and determine what amount shall be allowed, but in no case shall the allowance exceed $2,000. That is the statute. And the reason of the statute doubtless was that where Congress paid the whole bill brought in, the contestants and contestees did not perhaps exercise that economy in contracting expenses they would have done if they felt they had to pay the bills themselves. That, I suggest, might have been the reason; but that is the statute, and it seems to me so long as the law is unrepealed it should be enforced.

I will say to the House, Mr. Chairman, that this is only one of some forty cases where the parties have severally received only the $2,000 allowed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will please confine their remarks to the point of order.

Mr. ROWELL. That is what I propose to do. Notwithstanding this law, Mr. Chairman, Congress has allowed in some cases an extra amount; certainly in two cases on appropriation bills the payments for expenses have been over $2,000. There is now on the Calendar of the House, favorably reported from the Committee on Claims, a bill to pay an extra amount incurred in one of the contests before this House.

Mr. LANHAM. It was not a unanimous report.

Mr. ROWELL. It was not in this but in another of these contests. I have no doubt the Committee on Claims would have reported in this Congress the amount of expenses incurred in the contest. I have no doubt the Committee on Elections would have reported the amount which was found due. I have examined the items, with the vouchers and receipts.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has my colleague examined also the amount of the expenses of the contestant and contestee in the California contested-election case of Sullivan and Felton?

Mr. ROWELL. I have examined them.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much have the expenses been in that case?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Does your vote depend on that?

Mr. SPRINGER. One at a time. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROWELL. There is not a single contest which amounts to anything where the legitimate and proper expenses have not exceeded $2,000, nor in the Forty-ninth Congress was there a single one which did not exceed that amount. That limitation of $2,000 has the effect where a man has been wrongfully deprived of his seat to force him to pay a little fortune out of his own pocket to vindicate the people who elected him and assert his right to a seat.

Mr. SPRINGER. My colleague has not answered the question I put to him as to what the expenses were in the election contest of Sullivan and Felton.

Mr. ROWELL. The expenses amounted to a very much larger sum than $5,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. My colleague does not answer me yet.

Mr. ROWELL. I am perfectly willing to pay each one of them the expenses incurred by them in their contest.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, I will answer the question of my other colleague. I am willing, I will state to him, to do equal and exact justice to all parties, but I am opposed to selecting one case out of all the election cases, the case of a man who happens to be a colored man, and do justice to him, and at the same time do an act of injustice to every other gentleman in every other contest who happens not to be so fortunate as Mr. Smalls.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I would suggest to my colleague that he ought not to be willing to seek to do injustice to this man because some of his colleagues have not introduced a bill to allow the same amount or some other, whatever it may be, that was paid out by Mr. Sullivan in his contest.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman will prepare an amendment to cover all of these cases and to do justice to all of them, or if the Committee on Elections will submit such a proposition, I should certainly have no objection to it.

Mr. REED. The only way you can get justice is by buying it, then, from the Democratic party.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Does the gentleman speak for all of his party? Does he suggest that all of his side would agree to that?

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that the contestant in the California case has probably expended more money than any other contestant or any other contestee in the House, and he should be entitled to preference, if there is to be a preference given, to reimbursement for his expenses rather than any other man occupying the same position.

Mr. ROWELL. I will say to my colleague that he has spent a great deal of money, that is true, but further than that I will tell him that nine out of every ten witnesses whose testimony was being taken represented a case of the taking of illegal and illegitimate testimony brought out by the contestant himself.

Mr. CRISP. On that point——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests the gentlemen to confine the discussion to the point of order.

Mr. ADAMS. Before the Chair decides the point of order I respectfully ask the Chair to examine the frequent decisions in this House to the effect that the statute referred to by the gentleman from Georgia has no binding force or effect upon this House whatever. If this House under the Constitution is the judge of the election and qualification of its own members, a former Congress can not pass a valid statute saying how this House shall determine that question in any particular case. I have not had the time to bring together the authorities to which I refer, but I will recall to the attention of the Chair the fact that in a former Congress an elaborate argument was made by Mr. CARLISLE on this very question. I think it was in the Butterworth case, so called. It was there stated by him, and it has been assented to from that time to this, that no statute of Congress limiting the mode by which any House of Representatives shall arrive at a conclusion of fact as to the election of one of its own members has the force of law.

It is simply a recommendation which we can follow or not as we please. We do not allow the Senate to say how we shall reach a conclusion in an election case. Neither do we allow the Senate and the House of a former Congress, even by an act approved by the President, to place any limitation or restriction upon our action in cases affecting the election of members of this House. If Congress can limit the amount which can be paid a contestant in an election case to the sum of $2,000, Congress can limit the amount to one thousand, to five hundred, to one hundred dollars. It can thus deprive this House of the only practicable way of bringing the evidence of the disputed facts before the House for its decision.

If a former Congress can say to this House how much money shall be allowed to a contestant in this House it can say how much time shall be allowed him to prepare his case. It can say that the case shall be voted on on the first day of the session, although the House may not be ready to vote on it. It may say that it shall not be voted on for three months, although the House may be ready to decide it on the first day. It can say that the evidence shall be oral or shall not be oral but written, and that the depositions shall be taken and sworn to in a particular way.

Yet the House has repeatedly and deliberately refused to be bound by the provisions of existing statutes regulating the mode of procedure in election cases. The reason is that if any statute of this kind should be admitted by the House of Representatives to have the force of law the House would have lost the right to be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, a right secured to each House by the express words of the Constitution.

If each House has full control of the way in which it shall vote on election cases, if it has control of the time at which the vote shall be cast, it surely has the right under the Constitution to determine in each case how the evidence of fact and the statement of the law shall be laid before the House. Such a discretionary power in each House is absolutely necessary in order that full justice may be done in each case. Any expenditure which in the judgment of the House is reasonable and necessary to that end is an expenditure previously authorized by law, and may be inserted in a general appropriation bill under the rules of the House. This House can not take any other position with self-respect. It can not take any other position without waiving a constitutional right which has been prized as a safeguard of popular liberty for the last three hundred years.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. With the consent of my friend from Illinois I will say that I made the same point in the Forty-ninth Congress when, I think, the honorable gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] was in the chair; that is, that it was not competent for Congress by an enactment, or the House by a rule, to restrict the means essential to enable a subsequent House to exercise the constitutional function of determining the election and qualification of its own members; but the gentleman from Georgia overruled the point of order. He was quite in error, but he did so. [Laughter.] I believe the point of order was well taken then and is now.

Mr. CRISP. The point of order I have made, you mean? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No. As the gentleman from Illinois suggests, to say that this Congress may enact that no more than $2,000 may be appropriated for obtaining the information upon which we are to determine whether a member is entitled to a seat upon this floor is to absolutely abrogate the power of the House to exercise one of its highest and most important prerogatives under the Constitution. If we may say that the House can provide that only $2,000 shall be paid in the discharge of this constitutional duty we may by the same token determine that it shall only pay $1,000.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Or only 10 cents.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Or only 10 cents, as my friend suggests. What is to be the limit? For it is clear, if a limit short of what is actually necessary may be fixed, another which provides merely a nominal sum may be fixed; so that one House or Congress may deprive a subsequent House of the power to obtain information indispensable to qualify it to pass upon the question, of which it alone under the Constitution has jurisdiction to hear and determine.

Mr. CRISP. My friend entirely misapprehends the point I have made. It is perfectly immaterial whether it is a law that is binding as to the control or consideration of election causes or not. That is not the question at all. But the burden, I respectfully submit to the Chair, of showing a law which authorizes this amendment is on the gentleman who offers it.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no.

Mr. CRISP. That is the rule, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no; the rule is a rule of restriction.

Mr. CRISP. I beg the gentleman's pardon again. The rule of law is that we shall not go beyond the limit, but the rule of the House provides that you shall not put any amendment on an appropriation bill not provided for by existing law.

Mr. ADAMS. Except in certain cases.

Mr. CRISP. And the only reason I called the attention of the Chairman to this statute was to show that not only was there no law authorizing this, but there has been an express legislative declaration that it was prohibited and improper.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The Constitution provides for the determination of the question and the statute provides the means for obtaining the facts necessary to its right determination, and to say we shall not pay more than 25 per cent. of the expense incident to obtaining those facts is to attempt by law to restrict the House in the exercise of one of its highest prerogatives.

Mr. CRISP. It is a question of order under the rules of the House as to an amendment on an appropriation bill, and that is the point my friend entirely overlooks or fails to call attention to. I agree fully with him that under the Constitution of the United States each House is the judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of its own members, and each House has the power by a law to pay out any amount that it may deem decessary——

Mr. ADAMS. By rule or appropriation.

Mr. CRISP. Any amount they please to a contestant for his expenses. But the point is, under the rules of the House the appropriation bill is not amendable by adding this sum to it without there is some law to authorize it.

Mr. ADAMS. Right on that point——

Mr. CRISP. And instead of there being any law authorizing it there is an express statute unrepealed, though the gentleman may say that we can disregard it as a legislative body, but the Chairman can not disregard it in passing upon a question of order upon an appropriation bill; and that law prohibits a greater amount than $2,000 being given in these cases.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Right there. The Constitution provides for determining these questions (i. e., the election and qualifications of its members) and has devolved that duty on the House. Congress has provided rules for carrying out and into effect that provision of the Constitution. It shall be by contest. The manner of conducting the contest is prescribed by law. That is, the manner of preparing the case for decision is prescribed by law. In the exercise of the rights conferred by that law evidence essential to the hearing is taken by the contestant and contestee. The point is, that any legislation which limits the power or opportunity of the House to prosecute this inquiry, either by withholding the necessary appropriation or otherwise, is null and void in that it restricts or abrogates one of the constitutional prerogatives of this body. The rule of the House is to give expression to law. But the enactment which nullifies the prerogative of this body is no law, being in contravention of the Constitution, and hence it follows that the gentleman from Georgia in citing the statute which limits the amount which a subsequent Congress may appropriate to $2,000 in a contested-election case appeals to a void statute. The law to which he appeals has no force, and we disregard it, we do not override it, because it does that which we may not do by statute—that is, to limit the power of this House to make inquiries essential to the proper discharge of its constitutional functions.

Mr. CRISP. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, if it is an easy one.

Mr. CRISP. It is an easy one; and I just want to get your judgment. Do you think this amendment is in order on this appropriation bill?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have just said it is, and I have endeavored to tell my friend from Georgia why. He has said this amendment is in contravention of law, and I have endeavored to show him that it is not.

Mr. CRISP. Then I ask the gentleman from Ohio to show the law that authorizes this amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I did. The Constitution of our country, which authorizes this House to determine certain questions, supplemented by a statute which provides the means by which the information necessary to enable the House to determine those questions wisely and justly shall be obtained, and that law or any law which limits the power of the House in that behalf is unconstitutional, and has in fact no force.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether, under the views he has presented, he thinks it is the province of the Chair to pass upon the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of the law as it appears on the statute-book.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Undoubtedly. The Constitution is the highest law that the Chair knows or ought to know, and if he hesitates to pass upon the point he can refer it to the House.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, let me read, not only for the benefit of the Chair, but for my friend from Ohio, because he seems to have gone away from the point of what the rule of the House is:

> No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. To objects authorized.

Mr. CRISP. This may be a claim against the Government, or may be paid by the two Houses in the shape of a law whenever they determine to do so. I raise no question, and have no doubt about that; but that this statement, if put upon this bill, will be put on it without any law to authorize it, and in violation of the rules of the House, I have no doubt.

Mr. REED. The objection in regard to the rule could have been gotten over if the gentleman had not made an objection.

Mr. CRISP. That is another question; but I was so much shocked by my friend from Ohio saying that he thought it was in order that I was almost paralyzed.

Mr. REED. If he had quite done that we would have gotten through with this. I make the suggestion to the gentleman from Georgia that he withdraw the point of order, and let the House vote upon the matter.

Mr. CRISP. I will say frankly——

Mr. REED. Let the majority of the House determine whether it is just, and give this man a tribunal.

Mr. CRISP. Let me say to the gentleman from Maine that the Committee on Elections were charged with the determination of all these questions under the rules of the House and under the law.

Mr. REED. Now, give this man a tribunal.

Mr. CRISP. The Committee on Elections unanimously decided that in no case would they allow exceeding the $2,000 which the law said should be allowed, and as to all the excesses, they could be presented to the Committee on Claims or any other committee that had control of this matter; but we, as a committee of the House, were bound by the rules of the House.

Mr. REED. Now, I want to appeal to the gentleman from Georgia as an individual. I do not appeal to him to vote for this amendment, but I appeal to him to withdraw his objection and let this man have the judgment of the House upon the justice of the claim. The objection is purely a technical one and ought not to stand in the way of doing what is just and right. There is no man in this House who has had an election contest, or anything that pretended to be one, that does not know that the expenditures a man is forced to make exceed the $2,000 allowed.

Now, why not let justice be done and avoid this technicality? It is entirely within the power of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] to permit the House to pass upon this question. Why should he not do it? I appeal to him individually.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I think I have heard my friend from Maine [Mr. REED] say more than once, and I know that I have read in books, that the best way to remove an objectionable law is to enforce it, and in that way exhibit and emphasize the objections to it——

Mr. REED (interposing). Then you are opposed to the law?

Mr. CRISP (continuing). In order that there may be a repeal of the law, which will put all men on an equality.

Mr. REED. Then you are doing this in order to secure the repeal of the law, are you?

Mr. CRISP. I am not. I am doing it from a sense of duty, but in doing it I am following a path which is commended by the gentleman from Maine and commended also by many others when they come to deal with a law which they think is objectionable or obnoxious.

Mr. REED. Then will the gentleman permit an amendment to be presented on this bill repealing that law, and let us try what we can do about it here?

Mr. CRISP. I think not at this stage of the session.

Mr. REED. Then the gentleman's object does not seem to be to repeal a bad law.

Mr. CRISP. All around me are gentlemen who are in the same position as this claimant. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] had a contest in the Forty-eighth Congress——

Mr. REED. And he ought to be paid.

Mr. CRISP. I do not know how many thousand dollars are due him.

Mr. REED. That does not matter.

Mr. CRISP. The rule has been so for a great many years.

Mr. REED. It has, and it has been a wrong every time.

Mr. CRISP. Now, the proposition is to select out one case and deal with that, ignoring all the others. The others are not here. Their claims are not here. Their claims have not been passed upon by anybody. Only one case has been passed upon by the Committee on Claims, that of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST]. I understand that the committee have reported favorably in his case; not a unanimous report, but the report of the majority of the committee. But this claim, I will state to the gentleman from Maine, has not been examined or reported upon by any committee of this House.

Mr. REED. The amendment is offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], who has examined the matter.

Mr. MCADOO. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCADOO. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the expenses incurred in the case of Mr. Sullivan were not as great as in the case of Smalls?

Mr. CRISP. Oh, I think very much greater, though I do not recollect just what the claim in that case was. I want to say to the House also that when the Committee on Elections took up these claims for expenses there was a very considerable amount more than $2,000 claimed in some of the cases, but we did not make a critical examination of each item as we would have done if we had determined to consider the claims in detail on their merits.

We simply looked at this bill and came to the conclusion that certainly it was a reasonable claim to the amount of $2,000, and therefore we reported in favor of the payment of the $2,000. Speaking for myself and other members of the committee, except perhaps the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], who may have looked into the matter since that time, although he had not done it up to that time, we dealt with them upon that general idea without going into details. I can not say that this claim is right or that it is wrong. I only say that no committee of the House has ever determined that it is right.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. But after the statement of my colleague [Mr. ROWELL] that he has examined it, you have no doubt that it is right, have you?

Mr. CRISP. Personally I do not know anything about it; but of course I have the utmost confidence in the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL]. I merely say that no committee of the House reported in favor of the claim.

Mr. ROWELL. The chairman of the committee is correct in stating that the Committee on Elections went over each one of these claims and having found an amount sufficient to make $2,000 allowed that sum. In some of the cases the claims amounted to barely $2,000, and the parties got their total expenses. So that the committee, as a committee, did not pass upon every one of these items. I have here, however, an itemized bill, and there is no question that the committee, had they not been limited by the law, would have reported in favor of this claim.

Mr ADAMS. One suggestion more as to the duty of the Chair and as to the burden of proof in deciding this question. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] asked me whether the burden of proof was not on us to show that this amendment could be made. I say no. The burden of proof is on any man who says that the Committee of the Whole House can not put an amendment on a bill.

Mr. CRISP. I simply say that there is no law authorizing it, and then I suppose that you will show affirmatively that there is. You certainly would not ask us to prove a negative, would you?

Mr. ADAMS. You can not transfer the burden of proof in that easy way.

Mr. CRISP. Would you ask us to prove a negative?

Mr. ADAMS. The House of Representatives in Committee of the Whole has a right to amend any appropriation bill or any other bill——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In other words, the House has a right to override its own rules by a simple vote in Committee of the Whole. Is that the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman from Ohio is in too great haste. I can not utter two sentences at once, but if the gentleman will be patient I will make my position clear.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am only asking whether your proposition is not simply that the House can override one of its own existing rules by a simple vote in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ADAMS. I am about to state what my proposition is. Mr. Chairman, the burden of proof is not upon those who hold that this is permitted by the rules. The burden of proof is upon those who insist that by reason of a rule the legislative discretion of this House is limited and restricted. Up to 1874 any House of Representatives could put upon any bill, even an appropriation bill, any amendment which was permitted by the general parliamentary law. Then a rule was adopted restricting the liberty of this House in that respect; but that rule must be strictly construed. Any amendment can go on an appropriation bill which the rules of the House do not forbid to be there. Now, the rules of the House forbid an appropriation for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for public works and objects already in progress. The question is whether the gentleman can show that this is an expenditure not previously authorized by law. If the law, whether constitutional or statutory, authorizes this House to decide the election contests of its members, it certainly authorizes this House to take necessary means for that end; and it is within the discretion of this House to determine what those means shall be.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. Does the gentleman hold that it is competent for Congress to put any limit on the extent to which these expenditures may go?

Mr. ADAMS. I hold that it is not competent by law to limit in any manner the mode in which the House shall determine whether in a certain contest A or B was elected a member of the House, and there is no limit on the power of this House to appropriate money for that purpose; and my authority for that position is Mr. CARLISLE in the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from Ohio quoted a higher authority even than Mr. CARLISLE—the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, the Constitution stands behind Mr. CARLISLE in support of that position.

Mr. HEARD. Now, I understand my friend from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] to affirm the position that because the Constitution of the United States gives to each House of Congress the right to pass upon the election and qualifications of its members, therefore it is not competent even for Congress by law to provide rules or regulations to restrict the expenditure of money or to provide other restrictions as to how such questions shall be considered; for I apprehend the gentleman could just as correctly argue that Congress can not limit the time within which testimony may be taken in such cases to forty days.

Mr. ADAMS. That was Mr. CARLISLE'S precise position.

Mr. HEARD. Then I would say to the gentlemen on the other side of the House, and especially to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] that they may understand their rights, but they certainly mistake their remedy. If this law is wrong—and the gentleman from Maine says that there is scarcely any case in which there is even the pretense of a contest where this limit is not necessarily exceeded—if that is the case, then there is no excuse for this law being on the statute-book; and the remedy is by a proposition to repeal it in order that the law may operate upon this case as upon every other and shall not in any instance operate exceptionally.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] says that to draw the restriction so closely has the effect of putting up the bars perhaps against men who might make honest contests here. Ah, I tell the gentleman that this law has a different purpose. Its object is rather to fix a reasonable limit inside of which these contests may be conducted without oppression to the people in the matter of improper and illegitimate expense, and to prevent the inviting and nursing of contests simply for the sake of the fees which they may bring to those interested. This committee had before it a bill for $7,000 or $8,000 in one case where there was, as I think, in the judgment of the country as well as the House, the merest "pretense of a contest," to adopt the language of my friend from Maine. What did we do? That case was operated upon by this statute, as is this case and every other. We believed that as much as $2,000 had been legitimately expended, and we reported in favor of allowing the amount to which we are limited by law—that is,

$2,000. And to-day we have no right, and gentlemen can not contend that we have the right, under the law, to report in favor of allowing more than $2,000 in any case; nor can this House make such an allowance by an amendment to this bill without violation of the rules so long as that statute stands unrepealed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. A single word in reply to what has been said on the other side.

I want my friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and my friend from Missouri [Mr. HEARD], as well as the Chair, to understand precisely the point I make. I fear I have not made myself understood. First, the Constitution, in section 5 of Article I, provides that—

> Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

That we all agree about. Now, that is the highest authority for taking action here to determine the right of any claimant to a seat on this floor. In pursuance of that provision of the Constitution a contest is provided for, either by one claiming the seat as against a party holding the certificate or on a petition of citizens. Then it is provided by statute that witnesses may be called; the power of the judiciary may be invoked to compel witnesses to testify, to punish them for contumacy or for refusing to testify, or to do that which is necessary to enable the House to be put in possession of the facts which will enable it wisely and justly to determine the question.

Mr. HEARD. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In one moment I will yield.

That right with reference to contested elections devolves upon each House. In other words, it is the right of the House which forms a part of the Congress in which the contestant and contestee claim a seat as contradistinguished from any other House or Congress. Now, the Fiftieth Congress may not determine for the Fifty-first Congress what shall be expended in the matter of reaching this result.

Mr. HEARD. Is not the House bound by the law as it finds it on the statute-book?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am coming to that.

If this Congress may not bind the Fifty-first Congress in the matter of expenditure, why not? Because it is not constitutional to make such a restriction. Hence a law undertaking to make that restriction, undertaking to deprive the Fifty-first Congress of the power to utilize the ordinary agencies to reach a wise and just determination, is unconstitutional, and such a law, if unconstitutional, can certainly have no binding force.

Now, the rule which my honorable friend cites can hardly be considered as expressive of or responsive to a provision of law which is unconstitutional. My friend says, shall we not observe the law on the statute-book? The point I make is that the law is a nullity, because it undertakes to restrict the power of the House to exercise its highest constitutional prerogative.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. Does not the gentleman's theory authorize either branch of Congress to travel entirely outside of the regulations fixed by the act of Congress for the government of these election cases?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no; when the regulations are reasonable.

Mr. HEARD. One further question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That would reduce the amount of expenditure to a mere nominal sum. My friend may as well wipe it out altogether. He takes my life who takes away the means whereby I live.

Mr. HEARD. Does it not place the matter in this position, that it is a matter entirely in the discretion of either House of Congress, according to its construction of its rights, to determine as to these election contests? Under the same Constitution both Houses of Congress have passed a law providing a limit to the allowance to be made in these contested-election cases for expenses.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Unquestionably; and as it has done so, I appeal to the House to vote this appropriation.

Mr. HEARD. According to your construction any law which interferes with the discretion of the House is to be disregarded.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. HEARD. That is your argument.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Not at all; very far from it. A law to carry into effect a provision of the Constitution is one thing, and a law to restrict and prohibit is quite another.

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman from Ohio claim because the House has a right to decide therefore the House may appropriate any amount for expenses?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly not.

Mr. BLAND. Because you have the power under the Constitution to decide a contested-election case for a seat in this House, does that also compel it to provide for the payment of expenses, and does the gentleman contend it gives us the power to pay any amount, although the law has declared in terms that an allowance shall not exceed $2,000? [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. SAYERS. I think, Mr. Chairman, that a sufficient time has been taken up in debate on the point of order. I now ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt whatever in respect to this question, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue to William Gray, late a private in Company D, First Regiment of New York (Lincoln) Cavalry, a warrant for the sum of $174.43, in full for his claim heretofore allowed by the Treasury Department, and for which claim the said Department issued to said William Gray Treasury pay warrant numbered 3960, dated September 20, 1865, which warrant was paid on a forged indorsement of the name of said claimant, without his authority or knowledge, and for which he has never received any benefit whatever, and to pay said reissued warrant out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to state whether he has in his possession the facts to prove the allegations set forth in his amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have the letters of the Treasury Department, showing that his signature was forged and that the money was paid to the wrong man. I will ask that these letters be incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. Why did not the Treasury Department call on the indorser?

Mr. SPRINGER. It was twenty years before the fact was discovered, and the parties who drew the money are unknown to the Treasury Department. I ask the papers be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SAYERS. Let the papers be printed in the RECORD, and I ask the amendment be laid over for the present until we come to that portion of the bill where it will more properly belong.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not object to that.

The report made by Mr. SHAW, from the Committee on Claims, is as follows:

> This bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Claims for the Forty-ninth Congress. It provides for the issue to the said William Gray, late a private of Company D, First Regiment of New York (Lincoln) Cavalry, a warrant for the sum of $174.43 in full for claim heretofore allowed by the Treasury Department and for which claim the Department issued to the said William Gray Treasury pay warrant No. 3960, dated September 20, 1865, which warrant your committee are of the opinion was paid on a forged indorsement of the name of said claimant, without his authority and knowledge, and for which he never received any benefit whatever. The committee refer to the inclosed correspondence and report from the Treasury Department herewith submitted and made a part of this report. In view of the facts stated in said communication, the committee respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 24, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you herewith a report of Oscar J. Harvey, chief of the horse claims division of this office, relative to the case of William Gray.

Very respectfully, yours,

W. H. WELSH, Acting Auditor.

Hon. W. M. SPRINGER,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 22, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you herewith a report relative to the horse claim No. 7392, of William Gray, lately a private in Company D, First Regiment of New York (Lincoln) Cavalry.

This claim was allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury in September, 1865; and from the records of the Treasury Department it would appear that claimant was paid on November 8, 1866, $174.53, in full for said allowance.

A bill (No. 6411) has lately been introduced, and is now pending in the House of Representatives, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue to William Gray, lately a private in Company D, First Regiment New York (Lincoln) Cavalry, a warrant for the sum of $174.43, in full for his claim, heretofore allowed by the Treasury Depastment, and for which claim the said Department issued to said William Gray Treasury pay warrant numbered 3960; "which warrant was paid on forged indorsement of the name of said claimant without his authority or knowledge, and for which he has never received any benefit whatever."

Respectfully, yours,

OSCAR J. HARVEY,
Chief of the Horse Claims Division.

To Hon. W. H. WELSH,
Acting Third Auditor of the Treasury.

Horse claim 7392.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
Horse Claims Division.

In re William Grey, lately a private in Company D of the First Regiment of New York (Lincoln) Cavalry.

On the 27th day of May, 1865, William Grey executed at Camp Averill, Virginia, before William H. Beach, acting adjutant of the First New York Cavalry, an affidavit in which he set forth the loss of a private horse which he had been using in the United States service; said horse having been shot and killed in action by the enemy near New Market, Va., on the 13th day of May, 1864. Said Grey also alleged that at the same time he lost one set of horse equipments.

For the loss of the horse and equipments aforesaid, claimant demanded the sum of $176.50. In his affidavit Grey declared that his post-office address was box 3368, St. Louis, Mo.

Accompanying this affidavit was a statement, under oath, made by Robert Runyon and John Williams, that they were personally present at the time and place named in Grey's affidavit, and knew that he lost, in the manner described his private horse and equipments.

The affidavits aforesaid were filed in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury on the 9th of June, 1864, by a person who claimed to be William

Grey, the claimant. With these affidavits was filed a request, written at the time in the office of the Third Auditor, in the following words:

"JUNE 9, 1865.

"SIR: As I am not able to give a home address which will be at all definite, please send any communication relative to my claim for the value of a horse and equipments lost in the United States service to M. R. Pierce, 486 Eleventh street, Washington, D. C., who will forward it to my address.

"WM. A. GREY."

The following indorsement appears on these papers in the handwriting of Mr. W. S. Stetson, at that time a clerk, and now a chief of division in the Third Auditor's Office:

"Made special by Auditor, as claimant states that M. R. Pierce receives no compensation, but merely acts as a friend.

"W. S. STETSON."

The above-described papers were duly filed in this office, and the case was docketed and numbered 7392. It was subsequently examined by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and on September 13, 1865, an allowance of $174.43 was made in favor of the claimant. On the 23d of September, 1865, Treasury draft No. 2692 was issued on Treasury warrant 3960 for $174.43, payable to the order of "William Grey, private Company D, First New York (Lincoln) Cavalry."

This draft, as the records of the Treasury Department show, was sent to M. R. Pierce aforementioned. The draft was subsequently paid by the Treasurer of the United States, and is now on file in this Department. It bears the following indorsements:

1. "William Grey, late private Company D, First New York (Lincoln) Cavalry."
2. "William Wells."
3. "Pay order National Park Bank. O. N. Mineum."
4. "Cash check."
5. "For collection for account of National Park Bank of New York.

"Pay to the order of Messrs. Lewis Johnson & Co., Washington, D. C.

"F. W. MINER,
"Per J. L. WORK,
"Cashier."

6. "Lewis Johnson & Co."

Upon the face of the draft is stamped, "Paid by Treasurer U. S., 8th November, 1866."

On the 28th of August, 1866, there was filed in this office a power of attorney which purported to have been executed by William A. Grey, of St. Louis, Mo., who constituted and appointed Weston Flint, of St. Louis, Mo., his attorney to prosecute a claim for an amount due said Grey "for the loss of a horse while serving in Company D, First New York (Lincoln) Cavalry Volunteers, said horse being killed on or about the 15th May, 1864, at New Market, Va."

This power of attorney was duly executed and acknowledged on the 30th July, 1866, before W. B. Thompson, a notary public of St. Louis, Mo.

Before transmitting said power of attorney to this office Weston Flint, the grantee, made the following indorsement upon it:

"ST. LOUIS, MO., August 24, 1866.

"The within-named man informs me that he has written in regard to his claim, and that an application has already been made by him.

"WESTON FLINT."

The acknowledgment of the receipt of this power of attorney was made as follows:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., September 1, 1866.

"SIR: In reply to your letter of August 24, inclosing a power of attorney in your favor, relative to claim of William Gray, for value of horse lost, and numbered 7392, you are respectfully informed that on the 13th of September, 1865, an award for the amount of $174.43 was made in favor of William Gray; and that a draft for same amount was directed to be sent claimant in care of M. R. Pierce, his agent, 486 Eleventh street, Washington, D. C.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN WILSON, Auditor.

"WESTON FLINT, Esq.,
"St. Louis, Mo."

On the 26th of December, 1855, Hon. H. W. Slocum, of Brooklyn, N. Y., addressed a letter of inquiry to this office relative to the status of the horse claim of William Gray. He was informed by this office on the 11th of January, 1886, that said claim had been allowed and paid.

On March 9th instant William Gray made an affidavit before Amos A. Rhodes, circuit clerk of Christian County, Illinois, setting forth that he was a private in Company D of the First Regiment New York (Lincoln) Cavalry in the war of the rebellion; that on the 13th day of June, 1865, he filed with the Third Auditor of the Treasury a claim for $176.50, as compensation for the loss of a private horse and equipments at New Market, Va., on May 13, 1864; that after filing said claim he never heard whether it was allowed or not until the letter from the Third Auditor of the Treasury to Hon. H. W. Slocum was received. Said William Gray further swears that he never received anything on the draft mentioned; that he did not sign his name to it himself nor authorize any other person to sign the same, and that he never saw the draft nor heard that it had been allowed until he received the letter above mentioned.

On the 18th instant the above-mentioned affidavit was referred to this office by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, with the request that the same be examined in connection with the paper on file in horse claim 7392, of William Grey, and that a report be made from this office to the Committee on Claims relative to said case.

In pursuance of such request I have carefully examined all of the papers hereinbefore referred to, and have compared the various signatures of William Grey, or Gray. The signature of Wm. A. Gray attached to the letter of request, filed in this office with the original application for compensation, bears no resemblance to the signature attached to the application, and in my opinion the two signatures were not written by the same hand.

The signature attached to the power of attorney of Weston Flint bears no resemblance whatever to the signature attached to the original affidavit and application. The handwriting of the signature of "William Grey," indorsed on the back of the draft, resembles slightly the handwr.ting of the signature attached to the letter of request filed in the office on the 9th of June, 1865. The principal point of difference is that the indorsement on the draft is simply "William Grey," while in the other signature the initial "A" appears.

A comparison of the signature attached to the affidavit of William Gray of March 9, instant, with the signature attached to the original application for compensation filed in this office on the 9th of June, 1865, convinces me that the two signatures were written by one and the same hand. There is, it is true, a difference in the spelling of the surname. In the signature to the application the name is spelled "Grey," while in the signature of March 9, instant, it is written "Gray." I am satisfied, however, that both signatures were written by the same person.

My conclusion is that M. R. Pierce, whoever he was, procured the draft issued in settlement of the claim of William Grey, and obtained the money upon the same after indorsing, or causing to be indorsed upon it, the name of "William Grey."

OSCAR J. HARVEY,
Chief of the Horse Claims Division.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

Mr. CANNON. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the Clerk omit reading the judgments of the Court of Claims.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as that order has been made, I will ask on page 52, in line 6, to correct the spelling of the word "Rodgers" by striking out the letter "d."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE FIRST COMPTROLLER.

State Department:
Foreign intercourse: For salaries, consular service, $1,271.81.
For relief and protection of American seamen, $5.
Treasury Department:
For salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, $21.86.
For contingent expenses, independent treasury, $6.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in at the bottom of this page 56.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also the sum of $4,440, the balance due the Mississippi Central Railroad Company, upon the books of the Treasury Department, for which fifteen drafts were made and not paid upon presentation.

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does the gentleman desire this to come in?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Inasmuch as a deficiency bill is something like a dictionary, I suppose it does not make a great deal of difference where it comes in; I suggested, however, the bottom of this page.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question; are these audited claims?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think so.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the same case that was before the House a day or two ago.

Mr. SAYERS. Is it the amendment you withdrew?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I will simply ask that a vote of the committee be taken upon it. It is not germane to this part of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Is the point of order reserved?

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the point of order that it is not germane to this portion of the bill, but am willing that the committee shall pass upon it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I wish to put in, in view of what has been said in regard to this amendment, certain papers, and I think this is due all around after what occurred the other day. I ask the Clerk to read first a letter I addressed to the Auditor and also his response, and then I will send a statement of the account, without asking to have it read, to be printed in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES.
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1889.

The SIXTH AUDITOR:

Will you do me the favor to look at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Saturday and read the proceedings in the House as to the claim of the Mississippi Railroad Company, and then send me a statement concerning it? And if the drafts were returned, may I ask that I be permitted to exhibit them to the House, as we will resume the consideration of this bill at 11 this morning? I would be glad to hear from you as near to 11 as you can.

Very truly,

WM. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The committee will notice that that is a letter from me asking the Auditor to simply look at what occurred and give me the evidence in the case. I ask now that the Auditor's letter be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1889.

SIR: In compliance with your request of this date, I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of the following Post-Office Department drafts issued August 17, 1861, in favor of William Goodman, president of the Mississippi Central Railroad Company, and returned to this office unpaid and canceled: Nos. 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2407, 2408, 2409.

You are respectfully requested to have these copies returned to the files in this office.

Very respectfully,

H. A. HARALSON, Acting Auditor.

Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow a statement?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I would like to have this statement of account printed in this connection.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to allow me to make a statement first.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. The Chair will remember that one of the points of order I raised on this amendment before was that it was not germane to this portion of the bill. I desire to call the attention of the Chair and of the gentleman from Kentucky to the language of section 2 of the bill, and I have no doubt he will recognize the fact that this is not the proper place for the amendment to come in.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let me put this statement in, and then if the point of order is decided against me all of the facts in the case will have been before the committee. I would like that it be inserted in this connection, so that the context will not be broken up.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be put in as a separate proviso in another part of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am speaking now of the statement of the account, as I do not desire to break the continuity of the subject.

The statement referred to by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1889.

Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE, House of Representatives.

H. A. HARALSON, Acting Auditor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I hold in my hand a copy of the drafts named, showing that the originals are on the files of the office of the Sixth Auditor canceled and unpaid, thus showing that the record bears out the statement I made the other day, and that the drafts were in payment of a balance due, which has not been liquidated; that these drafts were returned unpaid and were canceled by the Department, and that the claim is one standing on the books of the Department, which state of facts is indubitably demonstrated by the papers I have presented. It is not, therefore, a question that has anything to do with the war or ante-bellum disputes, or anything originating in the Confederate government.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire a decision of the Chair on the question of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that he offered his amendment to come in at the bottom of page 56, but the Clerk had not yet reached that portion of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Let it be disposed of now, and it can be placed where it properly belongs if adopted.

Mr. SAYERS. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent that in the event of the adoption of the amendment it take its proper place in the bill. Does the gentleman make that request?

Mr. SAYERS. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a word in reference to the amendment. Some ten or twelve years ago an appropriation of nearly $400,000 was made to pay these ante-bellum mail claims. A large number of them were audited and duly certified to Congress for payment. I recollect very well that when they were being considered the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], then a member of the House, and formerly postmaster-general of the Confederacy, spoke to the proposition. The gentleman from Michigan, then a member of this body Mr. Willitts, as I recollect, moved to strike the item out of the bill.

The gentleman from Texas was then quite confident that these claims had never been paid by the Confederacy, although their payment had been authorized. And in proof of that fact he showed that our own auditing officer, after full investigation, had audited these claims just as these are audited and certified up to Congress. But I recollect the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] brought from the Confederate records after examination proof beyond all question that the bulk of these claims had been paid, as shown from the Confederate records; and so conclusive was his proposition that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], then a member of this House, withdrew any further opposition to the striking out of this clause, or a similar clause to this, covering a large number of claims. And I say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] now that the return of these drafts drawn by our own Department and given to this railroad company for services in 1861—the summer and fall of 1861, as I recollect it—being uncanceled is no proof of its not having been paid by the Confederacy.

In my opinion Congress never should appropriate one cent to pay any of these claims until the Confederate records, under the direction of Congress, have been fully examined touching this and all other claims; because I believe, from my recollection of the former discussion, that if we pay these claims we are liable to pay claims that have been paid under assumption by the Confederacy. Therefore I shall oppose the adoption of the amendment, with the further statement that if this amendment, which is to provide $4,000, should be made, then we ought to go on and appropriate for the four or five hundred thousand dollars of other claims which stand upon all fours with it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see, sir, why this claim should be brought forward by itself. It is but a representative of a class of claims running through the various Southern States that has been passed heretofore; and I think if we are to take up the subject at all that they should all be provided for. In the Forty-fifth Congress there was placed in the sundry civil appropriation bill a sum of $350,000, as I remember, to pay for contracts for carrying mail up to the period of the breaking out of the war. Immediately after the adjournment of Congress Mr. Sherman became Secretary of the Treasury and referred that legislation back to Congress with the suggestion that the Department was unable to say when the war commenced, whether at the secession of South Carolina, Alabama, or any one of the States, and submitted the matter to Congress for additional legislation. In the succeeding Congress the Committee on Claims reported a bill. It did not appear in the appropriation bill, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, but it came on a bill from the Committee on Claims providing for the payment of this class of claims.

It came up on a Friday. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], as has already been stated, insisted that the Confederate government had never paid any of these claims. That Friday passed without anything being done. On the succeeding Friday the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], a member of the House at that time, read a report of Judge Reagan, postmaster-general of the Confederate States, recommending an appropriation and an act of Congress of the Confederate government appropriating money for the payment of these claims. It was a surprise to the gentleman from Texas and to all of us. There the matter dropped, and it has not been before any Congress from that day until this so far as I know. The claims were all audited, as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] says this was. They were audited and presented to the Forty-fourth Congress, and that is the last one, I think, so far as I know, when any of them were presented.

Now, so far as the validity of this claim is concerned, I have nothing to say, but as it represents a class of claims running through the Southern States, it seems to me that the whole subject had better be disposed of at one time, rather than allowing some particular claim and leaving the great mass of them untouched.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the Senate, in which it originated, the bill (S. 3646) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California, with his objections thereto, the Senate had proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same, and had resolved that the said bill be passed, two-thirds of the Senate agreeing to pass the same, and that they had referred the bill and the objections of the President thereto to the House of Representatives for action.

The message also announced that Mr. PLUMB and Mr. PADDOCK had been excused as conferees on the part of the Senate on the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only, and that Mr. DOLPH and Mr. TELLER had been appointed in their places.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was asked:

A bill (S. 3894) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Southern Ute Indians in California, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying the same into effect; and

A bill (S. 3737) for the relief of Sterling H. Tucker and others.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. As I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], his position is, that all these claims ought to go to a committee instead of being tacked on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think if one is tacked on that all ought to be put on; but it seems to me, in justice to every member of this House, that as there has been a question raised whether or not these claims have been once paid, we should all feel better to provide for their payment after an examination of the records and report to this House; for I submit that I do not believe there is any gentleman on this floor who, if he believed these claims had once been paid, would ask or consent to their payment again. I am very sure, sir, so far as I am concerned, that if any constituent of mine has been paid by the Confederate government for this service, I would not consent to a second payment, because it would have no merit whatever.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to be pressing for a vote upon the proposition at this time. I understand that his object is simply, in view of what occurred the other day, to make up a record so far as he has presented the papers.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know what the purpose of the gentleman from Kentucky was. I only took occasion to say what I have said because this matter is being continually pressed upon gentlemen from the Southern States, and I think it is well for everybody to understand the real situation.

Mr. RANDALL. Many Houses have passed upon this question adversely.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor now for the purpose of affording the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] an opportunity to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, all I desired to do, unless the papers which I presented should be satisfactory to the committee, was to make up the record. This is a question that is going to come up until it is settled. It is no excuse for a refusal to pay an honest claim to say that a dishonest claim has been paid. It is no excuse for refusing to pay an honest creditor that some one else has received payment who was not entitled to it. I simply desire to make up the record at this time, and I now withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, if the record is to be made up it ought to be made up correctly. This is a claim in favor of the Mississippi Central Railroad Company. There is no such company. The road has been sold out under a mortgage, and it is now known as the Chicago and New Orleans Railroad Company. There are two claimants for this money, and here is a request to have the amount paid over to one of the parties. The question ought to go to a committee to be adjudicated; to ascertain, first, whether the payment ought to be made at all, and second, to ascertain the right party to whom to make the payment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of commissioners, United States courts, $26.10.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I find in the RECORD that Senator GORMAN, referring to the convict-labor bill which passed the House, called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], in charge of that bill, had not reported it to the Senate, although the bill had been reported to the House nearly one year ago. The Senator from New Hampshire in his remarks said:

> Who has spent much time, perhaps, in talking with the Senator from Maryland in reference to this same matter as well as other Senators—I have thought that he might dispose of legislation which we sent to the House of Representatives early. For instance, we passed a bill here at the last session which had reference to the payment of the arrears that are due to Government employés and which they have been endeavoring to secure year after year, and that bill has been incontinently spurned and delayed by intent, as I think, and as those who are interested in the bill think.
> We sent them the education bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Senator certainly knew or should have known that the educational bill was not referred to the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives. This House has created a Committee on Labor as distinct from the Committee on Education. In the previous Congress the House educational bill was referred to the Committee on Labor, and was promptly reported back to the House. The bill providing for the adjustment of the accounts of laborers passed the Senate July 17 and was reported back from the House committee August 2, and was considered in the House October 10, December 5, and also during the month of January. We gave nearly all the time at the disposal of our committee to the consideration of that bill.

I am aware of the motive that prompts these criticisms. I am aware that the claim agents who have hounded our committee and worried and annoyed members of this House have not been content with the efforts we have made to secure recognition for that measure. Now, the Senator certainly knew in the first place that that bill had been considered fully in this House and that the failure to pass it was not due to any negligence on the part of the committee. He knew that the educational bill had not been referred to our committee. While I do not propose to criticise the Senatorial courtesy the absence of which permitted him to refer to the chairman of the House Committee on Labor, I will state that the Senator from New Hampshire can not escape the responsibility; that last year when the Government was compelled to purchase, under the law awarding contracts to the lowest bidder, from a Tennessee penitentiary twelve hundred wagons, which cut such an important figure in the last canvass, that was due singly and solely to the neglect of the Committee on Labor of the Senate and of that Senator, Mr. BLAIR, to bring that bill up for consideration. And every purchase hereafter made of articles from prisons during the present year is due to the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire has neglected his duty and has not given the Senate a chance to pass upon this bill.

I propose for one to rivet the responsibility upon him, and let him shoulder it, of the pocketing for nearly one year of the "convict-labor bill." I have personally appealed to the Senator to have it considered, and the representatives of organized labor have also appealed to him to call his committee together for the consideration of this bill. He has five days still remaining, and I earnestly hope that the Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. BLAIR, who has always been considered a friend of labor, and whom I have always been willing to believe was an honest, earnest friend of the cause, will call his committee together and take action upon this bill. If he fails to do so, then his partisanship is stronger than his friendship for the people.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator from New Hampshire having made a statement out of order, as the gentleman from Missouri claims, and the gentleman having replied in the House, I suppose that one may be set off against the other and the matter declared even.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is all right. I propose to withdraw the pro forma amendment. The Senator from New Hampshire has had his inning over there. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE SIXTH AUDITOR.

For deficiency in the postal revenue 1866 and prior years, except the claims of the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad, $14,151.46.

Mr. McRAE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to compromise, adjust, and settle all or any part of the bonded debt of the State of Arkansas due to the United States or held in trust, upon such terms and conditions as to him may seem best for the United States and just to the said State after having examined and taken into consideration all the claims of the said State against the United States.

Mr. SAYERS. I raise the point of order that this is new legislation and has no place on this bill.

Mr. McRAE. I hope my friend will not insist on that point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I do.

Mr. McRAE. This legislation has been suggested by the Treasurer of the United States, and it has been embodied in a bill reported from a committee of this House. It is desirable both on the part of the United States and the State of Arkansas that a proposition of this kind should be adopted. It involves no appropriation, but simply vests in the executive officers of the Government the right to enter into negotiations and settle this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DIBBLE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"To pay the heirs of M. C. Mordecai, mail contractor, as per order of the Postmaster-General, dated January 2, 1861, for allowance of one month's extra pay for discontinuance of service allowed by the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury in Executive Document No. 26 (item 138), of the Forty-seventh Congress, $3,333.33."

Mr. SAYERS. I make the point of order that this claim against the Government, if it has any validity whatever, should go to the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. What point of order does the gentleman raise?

Mr. SAYERS. It is not a deficiency and does not belong in a deficiency appropriation bill. On the contrary, it is new legislation.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I really do not understand what is the gentleman's point of order. This is an expenditure authorized by existing law under a contract made at the time.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the date?

Mr. DIBBLE. I will ask the Clerk to read the order of the Postmaster-General discontinuing the service.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the date?

Mr. DIBBLE. Eighteen hundred and sixty-one.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 2, 1861.

SIR: The Postmaster-General orders that the service on route from Charleston, S. C., via Savannah, Ga., to Key West, Fla., and back, twice a month, by steam-ship "Isabel or other steamers, if necessary," under contract with you of 3d October, 1860, at the sum of $40,000 per year, for and during the term commencing the 15th day of October, 1860, and ending the 30th day of June, 1864, be discontinued, and one month's extra pay allowed on the amount dispensed with.

This order to take effect immediately.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HORATIO KING,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

M. C. MORDECAI, Esq., Charleston, S. C.

Mr. DIBBLE. This is the extra month's pay there allowed. Now, Mr. Chairman, I cite section 817 of the Postal Laws and Regulations which authorizes the Postmaster-General to discontinue service, allowing, as full indemnity to the contractor, one month's extra pay on the amount of service dispensed with. That is the law of the contract. That law has been recognized and affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. First, in the case of Reeside against the United States, in 8 Wallace, in which it held "the Postmaster-General had the power to discontinue or curtail service on any route on allowing one month's extra pay." In that case an unfavorable decision of the Court of Claims was reversed and the case remanded with directions to allow one month's pay under the contracts.

The same doctrine, Mr. Chairman, appears in 93 United States, 3 Otto, in the case of Garfielde against The United States:

There was reserved to the Postmaster-General the power to annul the contract when his judgment advised that it should be done and the compensation to the contractor was specified. An indemnity agreed upon as the amount to be paid for canceling a contract must afford the measure of damages for illegally refusing to award it.

In that case they decided judgment should be rendered to the appellant for one month's extra pay under the proposal made by him and accepted by the Postmaster-General.

Further, Mr. Chairman, by the act of June 20, 1874, twentieth volume Statutes at Large, page 130, it was provided that the claim should be examined and allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations, the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund.

Now, there was an appropriation out of which this could have been paid; but the balance of that appropriation was carried to the surplus fund. Accordingly, in compliance with that law, which provided these amounts should be reported to Congress for its consideration, Secretary Folger, on the 14th day of January, 1882, reported the "schedule of claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department, under appropriations, the balance of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under a provision of section 4 of an act of June 20, 1874," which I have cited. In that report, as stated in the amendment I have offered, the amount was certified as follows by the Sixth Auditor, under section 4 of that act, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Claim.	Appropriation from which payable.	Amount.
M. C. Mordecai, mail contractor: For allowance of one month's extra pay, per order of Postmaster-General, dated January 2, 1861, for discontinuance of service. Contract pay, $10,000 per annum. Service discontinued January 4, 1861. Route from Charleston, S. C., via Savannah, to Key West, Fla.	Deficiency in postal revenues, 1879 and prior years.	$3,333.33

Mr. DIBBLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, that claim has been adjusted and allowed. Under direction of an act of Congress an appropriation was made which provided for its payment, but the appropriation has been covered back into the Treasury, and therefore that amendment is not obnoxious to the objection that it is not authorized by existing law. That is what I understand to be the point made by the gentleman as far as I can appreciate it from the manner in which it has been stated.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DIBBLE. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Was not this claim brought up by the gentleman at the last session of Congress and ruled out on the point of order?

Mr. DIBBLE. I am perfectly willing to answer the gentleman in full on that point. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] was occupying the chair as presiding officer in the Committee of the Whole. The claim was presented by my friend from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], and the point of order was raised against it. We were called upon at the moment to produce the law authorizing it. The Chairman said that because the law was not produced he would rule it out on the point of order. Now, at this time we have produced the law authorizing it. We have traced it as a contract authorized by law at that time, and a contract which the Supreme Court of the United States has twice said the Postmaster-General had the right to make. I have shown that it was a matter adjusted and allowed in the Department, standing on the books, and only failed of payment because of the lack of an appropriation to pay it, the appropriation having been covered into the Treasury. So that we have now met the only objection urged in the point of order that was made before or which can be made now. At that time, not expecting this point, we did not have the law at hand, and for that reason, as I have said, the Chairman ruled it out of order, the law not having been produced.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask a ruling upon the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. One moment. I understand there was an act passed in 1874 which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust certain ante-war mail contracts, and that an appropriation was made to pay such claims when adjusted. Further, that the Secretary proceeded to adjust them and found that a larger amount was due than had been appropriated, and hence declined to make any distribution of the amount under the appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. If my friend from Illinois will permit me, I think he is mistaken in that. The question was not as to the amount appropriated, but the appropriation act itself provided that they should be paid up to the commencement of the war where they had not been paid by the Confederate government, and the Secretary of the Treasury was doubtful as to the exact meaning of the term "commencement of the war;" that is to say, whether it related to the passage of the ordinance of secession by South Carolina, or the ordinance of Georgia, or some other State, and he communicated these facts to Congress with a view of getting a construction of the words "commencement of the war."

Mr. SPRINGER. There was payment, then, of the amount under that act.

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. And the appropriation lapsed?

Mr. BLOUNT. There was no payment under the act, and it appeared the next time in the shape of a claim, for this class of claims, as I have already stated, came up on Friday; and the second bill, that from the Committee on Claims, likewise provides where they had been paid by the Confederate government that they should not be paid.

Mr. CANNON. Just there a moment, permit me——

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us finish this matter first.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then came up the debate, as I have stated, between the gentleman from Texas, Mr. REAGAN, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Willitts, which I need not repeat, because gentlemen, many of them present, heard that discussion and know what took place.

Mr. CANNON. This amendment, as I understand it, has nothing to do with the so-called war claims for mail pay. In other words, this service was discontinued in January, 1861, and that then the month's pay was due some time before the secession ordinance was adopted by South Carolina.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is true.

Mr. SPRINGER. This was discontinued, I understand, on account of the occurrence of war; that is, this contract was discontinued, and the claims have been regarded as matters unadjusted and pending, which have not been audited claims reported upon by the accounting officers of the Government, but have been always regarded as unadjusted.

Mr. DIBBLE. That is a mistake as to this case.

Mr. SPRINGER. These claims have not been adjusted and can not come before Congress in the shape of adjusted claims passed upon by the accounting officers of the Department. They have not been so regarded.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, the best answer to that proposition is that they have been, under direction of Congress, adjusted and allowed by the Department, and reported by Secretary Folger; and furthermore, the decision of the Court of Claims has separated these claims from the one month's extra pay on a discontinuance of the contract from all other classes of claims of the mail service; and they have been decided by the Court of Claims as not coming under the provisions of the act to which the gentleman from Georgia has referred, and stand on a footing of their own, because by no kind of possibility could they have been assumed and paid by the Confederate States.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does my friend from South Carolina say that Congress passed legislation directing the Treasury Department to report upon this class of claims?

Mr. DIBBLE. Yes, sir. I read it just now.

Mr. BURROWS. What act was that?

Mr. DIBBLE. The act of 1878, section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear that read again.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The law under which they claim the right——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina state the date of the act?

Mr. DIBBLE. June 20, 1874. These claims were audited by the accounting officers under the act.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be the duty of the several accounting officers of the Treasury to continue to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of all claims under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of said section that may be brought before them within a period of five years. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report the amount due each claimant, at the commencement of each session, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall lay the same before Congress for consideration: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the re-examination and payment of any claim or account which has been once examined and rejected, unless reopened in accordance with existing law.

Mr. DIBBLE. I have only to add that, in accordance with that act, the claim was allowed by the Sixth Auditor, and being so allowed in accordance with that act, was reported by Secretary Folger in Executive Document 26, in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, as is stated in the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will simply refer to the language of the statute that my friend has read, it appears that it does not refer to this class of claims at all; but provides generally for the adjustment of claims where appropriations have been made. It is of a general character, and it does not relate to this. And to show that this amendment belongs not in here, but that it belongs to a distinct class of claims long before that act was passed, in the Forty-fourth Congress there was sent to this House the ante-bellum mail contracts, audited by the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, and by him alone; and that class of claims are not audited under the law by the Comptroller. They stand on a different footing from postal claims; and therefore this claim does not relate to that law.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. As I observed a little while ago, this very claim was presented to the Committee of the Whole at the last session of this Congress, and the very arguments made by the gentleman from South Carolina to-day were made by him then, and were also supported by the gentleman from Maryland. They claimed then the provisions of the law precisely as they do to-day. I do not remember that the statute was presented and read from the Clerk's desk; but they insisted that under this provision of the law the claim could be put upon an appropriation bill, and after full argument it was determined by the Chair that the claim was obnoxious to the objection.

Now, it seems to me that the position taken by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is correct, that this statute which has been read has no application to this class of claims. In legislating upon the subject set forth in the statute Congress did not have in contemplation this class of claims at all. This claim relates to something that occurred before the war. The statute referred to was to take charge of and relates to current claims since the war, and has no contemplation of claims that existed before the war or that grew out of the war. Now, it seems to me that any one who would stop to read that section of the statute would see that that is correct. Now, let us look at this claim itself. These gentlemen say it is a just claim. I contend that all of these claims should go to a committee of this House to consider them. We have had an experience here this morning in a claim presented by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that should warn this House from permitting any one of them ever being put upon an appropriation bill.

The gentleman from Kentucky, whose high position in this House will not be questioned, whose integrity and honor are above question, presented a claim which he said, as I remember, was a just claim; yet the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN], who had investigated it, stated what was new to the House, that there were two claimants to that claim, and that there were grave doubts as to whether it should be allowed to either of them.

I simply say this as an illustration to guard this Committee of the Whole and this House against permitting any of these claims to be tacked upon an appropriation bill. If it is a just claim, one that should be allowed, it should go to a committee of this House where it can be investigated and all the facts relating to it be reported to the House in a report of a proper committee. I contend, sir, when a claim of this kind is presented we should not only test the merits of the claim, but we should also look into the question of the loyalty of the claimant.

We are denied that here. I simply use this argument to show the Chair that upon all questions of this kind the doubt should be resolved against the claimant.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that there has been sufficient debate upon this point of order, and I now ask for the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before that ruling is made I desire to make a statement. I find that I was in error in reference to this claim. It was allowed by the Treasury Department in pursuance of the act of June 14, 1878, as stated by the gentleman from South Carolina, as is found on page 78 of the Executive Document No. 20, first session Forty-seventh Congress. But while I see that it is allowed as one of the claims coming under that section of the act, I fail to see the connection between the act itself and the report of the Secretary.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not without doubt upon this question, but in view of the hasty examination he has been permitted to make, and in the light of the discussion, he sustains the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

To enable the Public Printer to pay for extra hours performed in mailing CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during the first and second sessions of the Fiftieth Congress, $530.18.

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment until I hear an explanation of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment is open to the point of order. It seems that about four of the employés of the Government Printing Office have been occupied, unavoidably, for some time in working extra hours in mailing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, both during the first session and during the present session of this Congress. I have here the names, with the amount due to each: One of them worked 416 hours at 50 cents an hour, making $208; another worked 412 hours, another 429 hours, another 190 hours. The last three worked at 31¼ cents an hour, as that was the rate of pay due to them as employés. Now, I submit that this amendment is not open to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Why have they not been paid if the money was due them?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Government Printer had no appropriation to pay for this work. He had an appropriation for the regular eight-hour service, but not for these extra hours. The matter was not of sufficient importance for him to employ additional hands, so he engaged these regular employés to work extra hours.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman speaks of the money being due. Now, on his present statement, it is not due. It may be that Congress will give these parties the money, but it is not due them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, they have earned it. It may not be "due" in the sense in which the gentleman uses the word, but they have earned the money and it has not been paid.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will submit the question to the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to the Committee of the Whole that the Committee on Appropriations have no information whatever as to the propriety or legality of this claim.

Mr. BIGGS. You have the information here.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] I want to say that I have here the certificate of the superintendent of the RECORD, showing that these employés have done the work, and I think it is manifestly fair and proper that this small amount of $530.18 should be appropriated to pay them. They have done the work, and they ought to be paid for it.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] can find no reason to object to the insertion of this amendment, for if the work has not been done the money certainly can not be paid. Now it happens that I have had acquaintance with one of the gentlemen to whom a portion of this money will be paid, the superintendent, and I have no doubt whatever that the representations he has made to me are entirely correct. On general principles I would not favor the adoption of an amendment giving money for work performed beyond the regular eight hours a day, because it is understood that the employés of the Government shall not be compelled to work more than eight hours; but we know that during the first session of this Congress there was a great deal of extra work, and it may be that the Public Printer was compelled to call upon these employés to do this work at night; at all events they worked extra hours, and inasmuch as the work was performed it seems only right and fair that an appropriation should be made to enable him to pay the amount that is justly due for such service.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will submit the question to the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, under all the circumstances, the gentlemen who favor the payment of this claim having failed to show any law authorizing the indebtedness to be incurred by the Public Printer——

Mr. BIGGS. But they have shown the justice of the claim. I therefore ask the ruling of the Chair upon the point that there is no law upon which this claim is based.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, in response to the gentleman from Texas, that while it is true that this amendment is subject to the point of order, there appear in this very bill provisions reported by the committee which are subject to the same point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. In justice to the Committee on Appropriations I will say that the provision now in the bill, to which the Chair has alluded, is a general provision. The committee have not undertaken to allow particular claims to special individuals. We have reported a general provision authorizing the Public Printer to allow certain additional percentage to parties who work during the night.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not insist on the point of order, the sum is so small and there is such manfest justice in this allowance to these poor people.

Mr. CANNON. I will for a moment insist on the point of order, in order that I may make an inquiry. Does this amendment include persons who work over hours?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It includes those who were engaged in mailing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I do not know any other persons who work over hours. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that if there are others who have worked over hours they have been paid; but there was no appropriation to pay these persons for extra work in mailing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which has frequently been very large, and has therefore been required to be mailed at a late hour. In this way the force engaged in this employment has been required to work extra hours.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Public Printer has violated the law by making an expenditure for which there was no appropriation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not prepared to say anything of that kind, and do not say it; but I say that sometimes it has been absolutely necessary, in mailing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to run this force a little over the time allowed, and in that way work for extra hours has been performed, for which we now simply desire that Congress authorize compensation.

Mr. LONG. Are not these employés paid higher wages because they work at night?

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is not for night work expressly; some of the work may have been done during the day.

Mr. LONG. Are they not, in fact, receiving a higher rate of pay than others?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that these employés have performed this duty.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They have.

Mr. SPRINGER. And there is no appropriation to pay them for this extra duty. But the Public Printer has been required to have this service performed—to have the RECORD mailed; and this force has gone on and done the work. Now, it simply rests with the discretion of Congress to determine whether we will pay for it or not. The Public Printer has not violated the law in any respect; he has complied with the law.

Mr. CANNON. Then I make the point of order——

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is too late now.

Mr. CANNON. If the Public Printer has not violated the law the money is there to pay for this work.

Mr. SPRINGER. You insist that he shall violate the law; our officers do not do that.

Mr. BIGGS. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] does not insist that these people shall do work and then not receive pay for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Too late!

The CHAIRMAN. It is not too late. The point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 35 of the bill for the purpose of correcting a name. I ask that in line 21, on that page, the name "Berans" be corrected so as to read "Bevans."

There being no objection, the amendment was made.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the Committee of the Whole return to page 11, in order to reconsider the vote upon the amendment allowing the present private secretary of the President $6,000. That gentleman on the 23d of this month addressed a letter to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] in reference to this amendment. I will read an extract from the letter:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, February 23, 1889.

MY DEAR MR. SCOTT: It has just come to my notice that on your motion the House, in Committee of the Whole, has adopted an amendment to the deficiency bill, making an appropriation of $6,000 to pay me the difference between my salary as private secretary to the President and the increased amount fixed as the salary of my successor. While I deeply appreciate your personal interest and kindness, and the consideration of the committee, having accepted the office with full knowledge of its pay and served four years without promise or expectation of more, I prefer not to be the beneficiary of a retroactive appropriation of this character, and have to request that the vote referred to be reconsidered and the proposed amendment stricken from the bill. * * *

Very respectfully yours,

DANIEL S. LAMONT.

Hon. WILLIAM L. SCOTT,
House of Representatives.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment inserting $6,000 be reconsidered.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] two questions: first, whether the President of the United States has paid out of his own private pocket enough to make up that salary.

Mr. SAYERS. I know nothing at all about that.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will next ask the question, whether or not it was arranged that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] should insist upon this appropriation in order to give the chance for the writing of the letter which has just been read.

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir; I do not know that.

Mr. CANNON. Then I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to the amendment which has been indicated, for the purpose of reconsidering it and striking it out?

Mr. BRUMM. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. We can reach the result by having a vote on the amendment in the House, and voting it down.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to reconsider is not in order at any time in the Committee of the Whole; but the Chair thought for the moment that by unanimous consent this amendment might be eliminated from the bill. The Chair, however, upon reflection is of opinion that the request to reconsider can not be entertained in Committee of the Whole, even by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have already suggested to my friend from Texas that the object can be reached by having a separate vote on this amendment in the House, and voting it down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to suggest that course to the gentleman from Texas.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The committee informally rose; and

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 325) for the relief of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan;

A bill (H. R. 3721) authorizing the President to appoint William English an officer in the regular Army of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 5032) to extend the limits of the collection district of Memphis;

A bill (H. R. 7028) to admit to registry the steamer George H. Parker;

A bill (H. R. 7066) providing for the establishment of a light-house at or near the mouth of the Siuslaw River, in the State of Oregon, and not to exceed in cost the sum of $80,000;

A bill (H. R. 7186) to authorize the Leavenworth and Rio Grande Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 11216) to authorize the Union Gas Company to lay conduit pipes across the Ohio River;

A bill (H. R. 11342) providing for the re-establishment of the light-house at Point Isabel, Texas;

A bill (H. R. 11643) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station and life-saving crew at mouth of Coquille River, Oregon;

A bill (H. R. 11901) to authorize the city of Lake View, Ill., to erect a crib in Lake Michigan for water-works purposes;

A bill (H. R. 12113) for the establishment of a light-house and steam fog-signal on the outer breakwater at the harbor of Chicago, Ill.;

A bill (H. R. 12310) providing for the establishment of certain lights on the coast of Mississippi;

A bill (H. R. 12414) to amend section 2579 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 12431) providing for the construction of a steam-tender for service on the Great Lakes.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

A bill (S. 1319) granting a pension to Anna Slater;

A bill (S. 1311) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Murphy, of Marengo, Iowa;

A bill (S. 2008) granting a pension to Cyrus Tuttle;

A bill (S. 2310) granting a pension to Rozalia Junk;

A bill (S. 2334) granting a pension to Mary J. Byrd;

A bill (S. 2344) granting a pension to Minnie A. Bailey;

A bill (S. 2690) granting a pension to John Gallagher;

A bill (S. 2758) granting a pension to Susan P. Murdock;

A bill (S. 2759) granting a pension to James M. Frost;

A bill (S. 2816) to authorize the construction of a bridge for railway purposes across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, to be located north of and in the vicinity of the city of Alma, Wis.;

A bill (S. 3091) granting a pension to John Corr;

A bill (S. 3198) granting a pension to Mary Murphy;

A bill (S. 3269) granting a pension to Theresia Fichter;

A bill (S. 3309) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth E. Groff;

A bill (S. 3387) granting a pension to Charles S. Hamilton;

A bill (S. 3421) granting a pension to Mary B. McVean;

A bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Irene Rucker Sheridan, widow of General P. H. Sheridan;

A bill (S. 3588) granting a pension to Ellen B. Farr; and

A bill (S. 3762) granting a pension to Nancy Polock.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing were received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

It was also announced that the President had approved and signed, on the dates indicated, House bills of the following titles:

On February 25, 1889:

An act (H. R. 10216) granting a pension to William Fowler;

An act (H. R. 10337) granting a pension to John Ebert;

An act (H. R. 10474) granting a pension to Dorcus Alford;

An act (H. R. 11993) granting a pension to Mary A. Long;

An act (H. R. 917) for the relief of Julianna Muller;

An act (H. R. 3766) for the relief of William Pfaender;

An act (H. R. 3112) for the relief of Phineas T. Richardson;

An act (H. R. 11871) for the relief of Hardin County, Kentucky;

An act (H. R. 4789) for the relief of the heirs of George W. Sampson and Benjamin Henricks, of Austin, Tex.;

An act (H. R. 11604) to amend an act approved March 3, 1885, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers, in Tennessee;

An act (H. R. 12443) granting to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company the right of way through the White Earth Indian reservation, in the State of Minnesota;

An act (H. R. 424) granting a pension to Elizabeth Myers;

An act (H. R. 3888) granting a pension to Mary H. Stacy;

An act (H. R. 5790) granting a pension to Mary Whitney:

An act (H. R. 6535) granting a pension to Mary Gray;

An act (H. R. 6598) granting a pension to Maria Brasted;

An act (H. R. 7566) granting a pension to George W. Lloyd;

An act (H. R. 10639) granting a pension to John Y. Hopper;

An act (H. R. 10975) granting a pension to John H. Starr;

An act (H. R. 11311) granting a pension to James Metcalf;

An act (H. R. 12303) granting a pension to Ester Gaven;

An act (H. R. 7123) for the relief of Catharine Mutz;

An act (H. R. 10780) for the relief of Benjamine E. Snyder;

An act (H. R. 9408) granting an increase of pension to Stephen L. Kearney;

An act (H. R. 12006) granting an increase of pension to Leonard Schaefer;

An act (H. R. 12506) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Geraghty; and

An act (H. R. 8406) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Cara Curtis on the pension-roll.

On February 26, 1889:

An act (H. R. 10301) for the relief of Emily Cross;

An act (H. R. 11430) to increase the pension of Harlan E. King; and

An act (H. R. 11741) granting a pension to Alexander M. Boatright.

The message also announced that bills of the following titles, having been presented to the President on the 13th instant, and not having been returned by him to the House in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, had become laws without his signature:

An act (H. R. 8549) granting a pension to Louisa Rogers;

An act (H. R. 11177) granting a pension to Christian Sanders; and

An act (H. R. 10025) for the relief of James T. Teeple.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SAYERS. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, after line 19, insert:
"For compensation of the Secretary of Agriculture, $3,066.66.
"For compensation of Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $1,187.50."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS offered the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 18, page 44, insert: "To compensate Robert F. Arnold for legal services in the prosecution of parties charged with robbing the United States mails, as shown by estimate transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, January 12, 1888, $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS offered the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, after line 14, insert: "To enable the Postmaster-General to pay the employés and late employés in the office of the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service additional compensation for extra hours of labor from April 11 to November 18, 1885, inclusive, $258.75."

Mr. SAYERS. In explanation I ask a statement be printed in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

Statement of extra hours of service performed by clerks in the office of the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service from April 11 to November 18, 1885, inclusive, and amount of compensation at 60 cents per hour.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Texas has gotten through with his amendments, those which have been reserved will be taken up in their order, and the first in order is that of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. CANNON. I wish to be just to everybody. What has become of the amendment to which I raised the point of order?

A MEMBER. It is out.

Mr. CANNON. I ask my colleague to see, if I understand it, whether there is any money to pay for that service, any authority to the Public Printer to pay out any money to employés not authorized by law?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Government Printer was authorized by the rules of the House and by the law to forward to each member of Congress a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. Did he do so?

Mr. SPRINGER. He did so, and in doing that the appropriation was not sufficient to complete the work which we required to be done.

Mr. CANNON. Why did he not stop?

Mr. SPRINGER. He was required to do the work, and no appropriation was made to pay it.

Mr. CANNON. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made against the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, which the Clerk will now report.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I withdraw that amendment, Mr. Chairman, and offer the following, to which I understand there is no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. I stated to the gentleman that I would not raise the point of order against this amendment, as it provides no legislation, but is simply a resolution asking for information.

The amendment proposed by Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, was read, as follows:

On page 15, at the end of line 24, insert: "That the Attorney-General be authorized and requested to report to the Fifty-first Congress the legal status of what is known as the '2 per cent. claim of the State of Illinois,' under the act of April 18, 1818, the act of March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857; and also in connection therewith what legal claims or offsets, if any, the United States has against said State."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYNUM. I desire to include in that an inquiry as to the claim of the State of Indiana, and move to insert as an amendment what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting the word "Indiana" after the word "Illinois," and the word "acts" instead of the word "act," and the words "April 19, 1816," immediately following the words "April 18, 1818."

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CAREY. I now desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a pending amendment which I call up.

The CHAIRMAN. The next amendment is that offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 14, on page 43, insert:

"That the sum of $2,345.44 be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated, being the unexpended balance of the amount appropriated by the act of March 3, 1885, for pay of the disbursing agent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year 1886; and that the same be paid to William B. Morgan, late disbursing agent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, for allowance of pay from July 24, 1885, to June 30, 1886, inclusive."

Mr. SAYERS. The point of order has been raised against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] was presiding when the point of order was raised, and the Chair will request him to resume the chair temporarily until this matter is disposed of.

Mr. ROGERS here took the chair.

Mr. BAYNE. It will be borne in mind, Mr. Chairman, that when this amendment was submitted by me the point of order was raised by the gentleman from Texas that there was no law authorizing this reappropriation. The allegation was made by myself that this officer had been suspended. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] stated that the officer had been dismissed.

Mr. SAYERS. I said that was my information.

Mr. BAYNE. I so understood, that that was the gentleman's information. It turns out upon an investigation of the facts that the gentleman from Texas was right and that I also am right. This action illustrates the peculiar "transmogrification" to which our civil system seems to be susceptible. This officer was summarily dismissed from his position, and for two years defended himself against accusations that were shown to be entirely groundless and which were allowed to be the cause of his dismissal. At the end of two years, or perhaps a little longer time, the letter of dismissal was withdrawn and he was reinstated, with one month's pay, and thereupon allowed to tender his resignation.

Now, this letter of dismissal having been delivered to him early in the year 1885, and that matter of dismissal having continued for two years or two and a half years, and then, by the same competent authority which issued the letter of dismissal, it having been withdrawn, he having been restored, one month's pay and allowance allowed, doubtless, out of this very identical appropriation which we now propose to reappropriate, I ask the Chair whether or not that restoration and the withdrawal of that letter of dismissal do not restore him to his former status, and if under the circumstances this proposition be not admissible under the rules of the House? That is the whole of it in response to the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I will simply ask a ruling of the Chair upon the point of order suggested by myself when the bill was last under discussion and when this amendment was presented. This proposition was presented a few days since when the bill was up for consideration, and the point of order, as the Chair will remember, was then made upon it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROGERS). The temporary occupant of the chair is not advised of any precedent upon this subject, and being in doubt as to the ruling, is inclined to submit the question as to the amendment being in order for the committee to determine.

Mr. BAYNE. Before that proposition is submitted it would be but fair to discuss the merits of the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not, but he will submit the point of order to the committee.

Mr. BAYNE. The committee would be scarcely able to determine the question unless it understood the merits.

The question was put, and the proposition was decided to be out of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now call up an amendment on page 21, after line 11.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue to William Gray, late a private in Company D, First Regiment of New York (Lincoln) Cavalry, a warrant for the sum of $174.43, in full for his claim heretofore allowed by the Treasury Department, and for which claim the said Department issued to said William Gray Treasury pay warrant No 3960, dated September 20, 1865, which warrant was paid on a forged indorsement of the name of said claimant, without his authority or knowledge, and for which he has never received any benefit whatever, and to pay said reissued warrant out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAREY. I desire to offer an amendment to come in between lines 18 and 19, on page 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the next Legislative Assembly of Wyoming Territory may provide by law that the subsequent Legislature shall convene on a day in the month of January of each year following the year in which is held a general election for a Delegate in Congress, members of the Legislature, and other officers.

Mr. SAYERS. I want to reserve the point of order until I shall have heard the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. CAREY. I can state it in one sentence. It is to avoid having annual elections in my Territory, to avoid electing the Legislature fifteen months before it is needed. And, as you are aware, in a new country the population is floating about more or less. We have to hold special elections in that Territory to fill vacancies in the Legislature before the time for it to meet. If we had organized a year before or a year afterward this trouble would not have arisen. The law of Congress provides that the Delegate shall be elected at the same time as representatives or members of the Legislature and the county officers. The Delegate can only be elected once in each two years, and if the Legislature was elected at the same time that the Delegate is elected, the Legislature can meet on the following January.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I only want a word, Mr. Chairman, on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] to pay the amount of $500 to employés of the Government Printing Office. So far as I am concerned, I will withdraw the point of order that I made. I do not think that these men, who were required without appropriation to work over hours, ought to be held responsible for a violation of the law upon the part of the Public Printer, or for the insistence upon the part of my colleague that he did not violate the law.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will be again submitted to the committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS rose.

Mr. SAYERS. I have been trying to get recognition for the past five minutes in order to move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has offered an amendment, which amendment must first be disposed of.

Mr. PERKINS. I yielded two or three minutes before my amendment was read.

Mr. SAYERS. I will reserve the point of order on the amendment, and permit the gentleman from Kansas to offer his amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 49, after line 11, insert the following:

"That from and after the approval of this act each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, who is not the chairman of a committee which is allowed a clerk, shall, during the sessions of Congress only, be entitled to a clerk to be appointed and paid as follows, to wit: Such Senator may, at any time after the beginning of each session, nominate to the Secretary of the Senate such person as he desires to be his clerk, and thereupon said Secretary shall enroll the name of such nominee in a record-book, to be kept for that purpose, showing the full name of such person and the State or place from which appointed, with the date of the same. Such Representative or Delegate may, at any time after the beginning of each session of Congress, nominate to the Clerk of the House of Representatives such person as he desires to be his clerk, and thereupon the Clerk of the said House shall enroll the name of such nominee in a record-book, to be kept for that purpose, showing the full name of such person and State or place from whence appointed, with date of same.

"SEC. 2. That the aforesaid clerks shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the respective Houses as other employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, but only for the time they are actually present and in the service of the Senator or Representative by whom they are respectively nominated, each at the rate of $100 per month; and such clerks shall be removable at the pleasure of the Senator or Represenative at whose instance the appointment is made."

Mr. SAYERS. I make the point of order that this legislation has no place on this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order against this amendment, but will let the committee decide whether it is proper legislation or not. I desire to say to the gentleman from Texas that the Committee on Accounts has reported in favor of this proposition, and I hope the point of order will not be insisted upon; or if the Chair has any doubts upon the point of order, that the amendment be submitted to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the Clerk of the House be authorized to pay to the officers and employés of the House borne on the rolls on the 1st day of December, 1887, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. My point is that there is no authority for the payment of that money—no law and no rule of the House for it.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, a similar amendment to this was offered and ruled upon on last Saturday, applying to the employés of this House at the present time, and the House sustained the ruling of the Chair that the amendment was in order. An amendment like this has also been accepted by the House on previous occasions. The object of this amendment is to do justice to the employés of the Forty-ninth Congress who came here at the beginning of the Fiftieth Congress under the old Doorkeeper. When he went out they went out, and I know that many of them had to borrow money to pay their way home; and this amendment is intended to do tardy justice to those employés of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I am decidedly in favor of this amendment. I think it ought to be adopted, and I trust the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BIGGS. These employés came here and rendered faithful service, and many of them had not the means to get home, and it is ungenerous and illiberal to require those poor boys to come here and do the work and then allow them no compensation. I hope the gentleman from Texas, in justice, equality, humanity, and for the love of his country and the offspring of his country, will not insist on the point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the question of order upon which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] passed a few days since was a proposition relating to the compensation of the present employés of the House. This is a proposition which relates to the compensation of the employés of a former Congress, and the Chair thinks that is obnoxious to the rule, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. PEEL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PEEL. If the committee should decline to rise, will it not be in order to lay this bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation, and then to proceed with other appropriation bills?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. PEEL. I am extremely anxious to get on with the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12571) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that upon all the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole, except the one relating to the salary of the private secretary of the President, a vote be taken in gross.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendments, with the exception of the one indicated above, were then agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, after line 16, insert:

"To pay the private secretary to the President of the United States the difference between the salary received by him and $5,000 per annum, $6,000."

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment, and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BIGGS. I ask for a division.

Mr. SAYERS. Do not do that. He does not want it.

Mr. BIGGS. I do not care what he wants. He has done the work, and he ought to have the pay. [Laughter.]

The amendment was rejected—ayes 16, noes 67.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PERKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it now in order to move to recommit the bill with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read as previously offered by Mr. PERKINS and printed above.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is not competent for the House to instruct the committee to insert in the bill as an amendment a matter which is subject to a point of order in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has frequently decided that the House can not do indirectly in the way of amendment what it can not do directly; and it is out of order to move to recommit a bill with instructions to report back an amendment which would not be in order in the House under the rules. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. OATES. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Many MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 5 members voting in favor thereof.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. SAYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORAN. I rise to present a privileged report, the report of a committee of conference, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 to the bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert:

"And provided further, That a check or checks drawn by a pension agent in payment of pension due, and mailed by him to the address of the pensioner, shall constitute payment within the meaning of section 4765, Revised Statutes, in the event of the death of a pensioner subsequent to the mailing and before the receipt of said check; and the amount which may have accrued on the pension of any pensioner subsequent to the last quarterly payment on account thereof, and prior to the death of such pensioner, shall in the case of a husband be paid to his widow, or if there be no widow to his surviving minor children or the guardian thereof, and in the case of a widow to her minor children: Provided further, That hereafter whenever a pension certificate shall have been issued and the pensioner mentioned therein dies before payment shall have been made, leaving no widow and no surviving minor children, the accrued pension due on said certificate to the date of the death of such pensioner may in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior be paid to the legal representatives of said pensioner."

And the Senate agree to the same.

M. A. FORAN,
EDWARD J. GAY,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement, submitted in accordance with the rule, was read:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 to the bill H. R. 11658, making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended by the conference committee in the accompanying report:

In lieu of the provision contained in the said amendment, it is recommended by the conferees that the following be substituted, and that the two Houses agree to the same, namely:

"And provided further, That a check or checks drawn by a pension agent in payment of pension due, and mailed by him to the address of the pensioner, shall constitute payment within the meaning of section 4765, Revised Statutes, in the event of the death of a pensioner subsequent to the mailing and before the receipt of said check; and the amount which may have accrued on the pension of any pensioner subsequent to the last quarterly payment on account thereof and prior to the death of such pensioner shall, in the case of a husband, be paid to his widow, or if there be no widow to his surviving minor children or the guardian thereof, and in the case of a widow to her minor children: Provided further, That hereafter, whenever a pension certificate shall have been issued and the pensioner mentioned therein dies before payment shall have been made, leaving no widow and no surviving minor children, the accrued pension due on said certificate to the date of the death of such pensioner may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be paid to the legal representatives of said pensioner."

M. A. FORAN,
EDWARD J. GAY,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FORAN. I call the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. FORAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

INVESTIGATION OF AQUEDUCT TUNNEL, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] to yield to me for a moment that I may submit a privileged report. I do not ask its consideration at the present time.

Mr. PEEL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CLEMENTS presented the report of the joint select committee on the increase of water supply of the District of Columbia, and to investigate the works, contracts, and other matters relating to the Washton Aqueduct tunnel.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is a privileged report, because the resolution under which the committee was appointed directed the committee to report on or before a certain time, which time was afterward extended by order of the House; so that it was made incumbent upon the committee by the resolution itself to report. If there be no objection, the report will be laid on the table for the present and will be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEEL. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12578) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEEL. I ask by unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not myself desire to make any remarks upon this bill, but some time ago some gentlemen on this side of the House came to me and said they would like a little time for discussion when this bill was brought up for consideration, and I promised that I would ask thirty minutes for that purpose. I am not particular whether they have that time now, before the first reading of the bill, or afterward.

Mr. PEEL. I hope my colleague on the committee, Mr. PERKINS, of Kansas, will not insist on that, but that he will allow the debate to take place under the usual five-minute rule upon amendments.

Mr. PERKINS. I only ask that the debate shall go on for thirty minutes, and I have, in reply to several requests made to me, agreed to yield to some gentlemen on this side of the House.

Several MEMBERS. Print your remarks.

Mr. PEEL. Time is so essential to us at this moment I must insist upon limiting the debate to the narrowest limits

Mr. PERKINS. Gentlemen have spoken to me on the subject and I have said time would be allowed.

Mr. PEEL. What time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. PERKINS. Not to exceed thirty minutes.

Mr. PEEL. Very well, then.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, all general debate on the pending bill will be limited to thirty minutes, to be under the control of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not desire to speak at the present time, but will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY.* Mr. Chairman, on the 12th day of July last I delivered in this House a speech on Southern elections and election frauds in the South, and during the course of my remarks I had occasion to refer to the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Georgia, and other portions of the South. I was notified almost immediately afterward that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] would answer those remarks, and I was also informed that Mr. CRISP would make a reply.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, rose.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I affirm the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] of having served him with the notice to which he has referred, but as the brunt of his attack was aimed at my colleague [Mr. CRISP], who had just returned about that time, I left the matter with him.

Mr. KENNEDY. The gentleman from Georgia will understand I am making no reflection upon him. From that time to this, Mr. Chairman, with the exception of the remarks made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] the other day, no attempt has been made to answer that speech.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] the other day informed this House that during his absence a gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] had made a speech on elections in the South, and in answer to that speech he impeached the statement I made there in which I said the Speaker of this House had appointed the Committee of Elections, and that one of the grossest infamies ever perpetrated upon this House or the nation was in the selection of a man to the chairmanship of that committee who had been elected by 1,704 votes, the fewest number of votes that had ever presented a man to this floor. The gentleman does not deny the assertion. The records of this House show that he was chosen to the chairmanship of that committee, and the records of the election show that he was chosen by 1,704 votes as a representative on this floor.

What I objected to, Mr. Chairman, was the selection of the gentleman from Georgia as chairman of that committee, whether selected by the Speaker of the House or by the House itself.

I ask now why was it necessary to defend the Speaker of this House? If the selection of the gentleman from Georgia was what I denounced as an insult to this House and the intelligence of the great people of this country, was it not as much an outrage to have selected him by a Democratic caucus as to have him selected through the Chair of this assembly?

But I might content myself by referring to the Journal of this House, where on page 246 I find the Speaker of this House announces his committees, but I am not ready, nor am I willing or content to let it abide there. I find by the record of the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, was appointed the chairman of this committee, a gentleman elected by the same sorts of fraud and the same sorts of infamy which returned the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] to this floor. If it were an infamy to this assembly to appoint the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] I ask gentlemen on this floor whether it was not an infamy to appoint Mr. TURNER in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses?

I want to give what I believe to be a portion of the unwritten history. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] desired no longer to continue at the head of that committee, and, as I am informed, asked the Speaker to relieve him from the chairmanship. I do not believe that the Speaker was willing to offer an insult to the gentleman from Georgia, but at his own request transferred him to the Committee on Ways and Means; and Mr. CRISP, of Georgia, who was the second member of the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, Mr. Throckmorton having gone out, by the unwritten law of this House became chairman of that committee and should have been appointed. But instead of that, Mr. CRISP was chosen chairman of the Committee on Elections, and the Democratic caucus ratified and sanctioned it, and he became its head. And thus not only was he made chairman of it, but in the cold blood of a Democratic caucus the people of the United States were insulted and outraged by the selection of a man whose own election was challenged by every sense of decency and honor.

Now, sir, I desire to say further that this committee was appointed for a purpose. I find by the records of this House on the 13th day of December, by a resolution presented by Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, this committee was chosen, and on the 5th day of January it was formally announced by the Speaker. I find further that there was a contest in this House, and that the seat of JOHN G. CARLISLE, of Kentucky, was contested. I find, too, that this committee, headed by Mr. CRISP, and selected for a purpose, with undue haste, on the 20th day of January, reported that case back to the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. KENNEDY. I have no time to yield.

Mr. TAULBEE, I simply desire to state [cries of "Regular order!" on the Republican side] that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] is not present. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KENNEDY. I decline to yield. I say that on the 20th of January——

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. TAULBEE. I beg pardon of the Chair; but I simply desired to state that Mr. CARLISLE was not present.

Mr. KENNEDY. On the 20th of January the committee reported back to the House the case of JOHN G. CARLISLE——

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. When thirty minutes were allowed for debate it was understood that there should be debate on this bill, and not on a political question; and I call the gentleman to order. [Cries of "Regular order!" on the Republican side.] The regular order is a question of order. I claim that the gentleman is not in order; he is proceeding by the consent of this committee—— [Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KENNEDY. I hope this does not come out of my time. I propose to take my own method of debating this bill.

Mr. BLAND. I claim the gentleman has no right to be personal when the gentleman from Georgia has no time to reply, and by a trick this committee—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] I am in order. This is a trick to secure time on that side without a chance to reply on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has stated his point of order, and the Chair will determine the question.

Mr. KENNEDY. So far as I am concerned, the gentleman from Georgia can take all the time he desires.

Mr. CRISP. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I am satisfied the House will allow me the courtesy of replying.

*Mr. Kennedy's remarks in a more extended form will be found in the Appendix.

A MEMBER (on the Republican side). Let him take the first morning hour in the morning.

Mr. BLAND. I ask that he be allowed thirty minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. Can the gentleman from Ohio be interrupted for such a purpose?

The CHAIRMAN. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I object to it now. I shall not at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the request of the gentleman from Missouri that the gentleman from Georgia be allowed thirty minutes to reply.

Mr. REED. A member can not be interrupted in this manner?

The CHAIRMAN. He can not except by his own consent.

Mr. REED. The House will undoubtedly give consent if there is occasion for the gentleman to reply. I do not see any necessity for interrupting a gentleman in the middle of his speech to ask such consent.

Mr. BLAND. There are a great many things that gentlemen on that side can not see the necessity for.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the rule to be read which directs the conduct of debate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rule XIV, clause 1: When any member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

Rule XXIII, clause 8: The rules of proceeding in the House shall be observed in Committees of the Whole House so far as they may be applicable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to the opinion, although not quite positive, that the gentleman should confine himself to the subject under consideration.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has it not been the rule, and always, that in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union anything concerning the state of the Union is in order during debate, and certainly an election case is a matter of that character?

The CHAIRMAN. The practice of the committee has alwaye permitted a great deal of latitude in discussion.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a point of order that this latitude is allowed when in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union generally, but not where the House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a specific measure.

Mr. BLAND. It is very evident—— [Cries of "Regular order!" on Republican side.] Oh, you will not get me down by that—— [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]—that when the House gave its consent to this committee for thirty minutes' debate it was understood that it should be upon the bill and not on a political question, with no time reserved for response on this side; and if gentlemen suppose that that sort of trick and unfairness can prevail—— [Loud cries of "Regular order!"] they will find their mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed in order.

Mr. KENNEDY. I trust this five minutes will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now, sir, I desire to say that on the 23d day of January that case was brought into the House of Representatives——

Mr. BLAND. I insist upon the point of order. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Ohio is proceeding now in opposition to the decision made by the Chairman.

Mr. KENNEDY. I desire now, Mr. Chairman, to say that the gentleman from Georgia who was at the head of that committee did not treat this case in the same manner and with the same kindliness that he did that of Robert Smalls. For I find that on the 7th day of December——

Mr. ROGERS. I raise the point of order that the gentleman is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair indulges the hope that the gentleman will confine himself to a discussion of the bill under consideration.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will come to the consideration of the bill at the proper time; but I desire to take my own way of getting to it.

Mr. CANNON. A single word. The order of the Chair is that the gentleman shall proceed in order; but it never has been held in either House or committee when a man was speaking in his own time that the Chair could substitute his judgment for that of the member who was speaking as to what he should say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that a very wide latitude has hitherto been allowed in debate in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The practice of the committee has permitted a wide range of discussion.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now, I repeat, on the 7th day of December, eleven months afterwards, the case of Robert Smalls was brought into this House——

Mr. BLAND. I repeat my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to secure order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I submit it is out of order for any member constantly to interrupt another member who has been recognized in his own right.

Mr. BLAND. I call for order if he is going on in the same manner.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman from Missouri will keep order——

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman had better keep his own order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will endeavor to do so, and take a hand in keeping the gentleman from Missouri in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state in relation to the point of order made by the gentleman that the universal practice of the committee has hitherto allowed a very wide latitude in debate. The Chair hopes, however, that the gentleman will confine himself to the subject under discussion.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. The parliamentary inquiry I desire to make is whether the custom of the House has not been settled all through this Congress, when a member addressed the House or committee in his own time, whether he speaks upon the subject-matter before the committee or not, he is entitled to the time uninterruptedly? I know that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] took occasion when another bill was before us to make a speech upon the tariff, and no point of order was made then. The question I desire to ask is simply whether the Chair will now assume what the gentleman from Ohio in his own time shall or shall not say? A gentleman must make his speech in his own way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state——

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to reply to the parliamentary inquiry made by the gentleman from Michigan. The Chair understands that no point of order was made upon the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. No man on this floor would have done such a thing. Nobody thought it was wrong.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to know of the Chairman of this committee, now as the Chair has ruled upon the question of order that a member must address himself to the question, will the Chair undertake to say, judicially, whether the gentleman is addressing himself to it or not? If that is so—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] If that is to be established, then I think the Chair has got a big contract on his hands.

Mr. SOWDEN. Regular order.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to let the gentleman from Ohio proceed. I think that my colleague would be allowed to reply——

Mr. BLAND. That is what I asked for, and I will insist upon the point of order until that shall be given.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that he is wielding a two-edged sword that will cut two ways.

Mr. BLAND. I will cut your way first. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. "He laughs best who laughs last."

Mr. KENNEDY. I repeat, that I simply call attention to the fact that on the 7th day of December this same committee reported, eleven months afterwards, the case of Robert Smalls to this House, and in thirteen months afterwards permitted this vote upon that case.

Mr. BLAND. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. KENNEDY. I call attention to this to show that the Democratic side of this House has never done and never can do justice to the black man upon this floor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLAND. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that the gentleman is violating the usual practice that has obtained in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAND. Is it in order to debate a contested-election case in this way?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that has been done heretofore in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAND. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the affirmative vote was announced as 113.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, if I can be indulged for a moment——

Mr. BLAND. Regular order. [Laughter.]

The count was completed; and there were—ayes 113, noes 10.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. BLAND. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. REED. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have the floor, Mr. Chairman. I do not yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to proceed?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. REED. There is no occasion for unanimous consent. He has the right now.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed, and that I be given as much time to reply as he occupies.

Mr. PERKINS. There will be no difficulty in giving the gentleman on the other side a like amount of time.

Mr. BLAND. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CRISP. I wish to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] be allowed to proceed, and that I may have as much time as he uses.

Mr. PERKINS. There will be no difficulty about that.

Mr. REED and others. Regular order.

The committee rose informally to receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate agreed to the conference asked by the House on the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1488) granting an increase of pension to Louisa N. de Kilpatrick, widow of Maj. Gen. Judson Kilpatrick, United States Volunteers.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my motion that the committee do now rise.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] is on his feet and is entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is on his feet simply for a point of order which has been overruled by the Chair. The decision of the Chair has been sustained by the committee, and the point of no quorum has been withdrawn by the gentleman from Missouri himself. That leaves the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] on the floor, and he does not yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is in error in this: the point of no quorum has not been withdrawn by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How could the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] get the floor to make the motion that the committee rise if the point was not withdrawn?

Mr. BLAND. When the Committee of the Whole is without a quorum that motion is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is in order.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal——

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. Do not appeal.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, I hold that when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] moved in his place that the committee rise, he thereby withdrew the point of no quorum.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND that the committee rise; and there were—ayes 28, noes 101.

Mr. BLAND. I insist that there is no quorum and I demand tellers.

Mr. REED. It is too late for that.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum is required on this motion. The point of no quorum is pending and the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. REED. How can the point of no quorum be pending when another motion is being acted upon by the committee? It can not be possible that we can do business in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the motion that the committee rise was in order, but no quorum is required.

Mr. REED. Then the point of no quorum would drop?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. There is one point of order already pending.

Mr. TAULBEE. My point is that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. BLAND. I raise the point that two points of order can not be entertained at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is correct.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether it is in order for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to make the point of no quorum on a motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri does not make the point of no quorum on the motion that the committee rise; he could not do so, because that motion does not require a quorum.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I misunderstood the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of no quorum on the question of sustaining the decision of the Chair.

Mr. TAULBEE. I beg the pardon of the Chair. I misunderstood the gentleman from Missouri. [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask the Chair how the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] lost the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. By a point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Has that point of order been sustained?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been overruled; but the gentleman from Missouri appealed from the decision of the Chair. On that question no quorum voted; and the regular order is a vote by tellers upon the appeal of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I did not so understand.

The CHAIRMAN. As many as are in favor of sustaining the decision of the Chair will first pass between the tellers.

Mr. KENNEDY. I desire to ask now that, so soon as I shall have finished, or at any time thereafter [cries of "Regular order!"], if gentlemen on the other side desire ten minutes, it be granted. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Those who are in favor of sustaining the decision of the Chair will now pass between the tellers, after which the negative vote will be counted.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 125, noes 20.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum has voted, and I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ROGERS in the chair). Under the rules, no quorum appearing, the roll will be called.

The roll was called, and the following-named members failed to answer to their names:

Allen, Mass.	Collins,	Jackson,	Smith,
Allen, Miss.	Compton,	Jones,	Snyder,
Anderson, Miss.	Cooper,	Kelley,	Spinola,
Arnold,	Cox,	Laird,	Spooner,
Bacon,	Davenport,	Lee,	Stahlnecker,
Barry,	Dingley,	Lyman,	Steele,
Bayne,	Dougherty,	Maffett,	Stewart, Vt.
Blanchard,	Ermentrout,	Mason,	Stockdale,
Boothman,	Finley,	McComas,	Struble,
Bound,	Fitch,	McCreary,	Symes,
Breckinridge, Ky.	Ford,	McShane,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	French,	Morrow,	Thomas, Wis.
Brown, Ohio	Glover,	Morse,	Thompson, Cal.
Bunnell,	Goff,	Neal,	White, Ind.
Burnett,	Granger,	Newton,	White, N. Y.
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Hayes,	Nutting,	Whiting, Mass.
Campbell, Ohio	Heard,	O'Neill, Mo.	Whitthorne,
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Henderson, Iowa	Owen,	Wilkins,
Carlton,	Hermann,	Phelan,	Wilkinson,
Catchings,	Hogg,	Phelps,	Williams,
Clardy,	Houk,	Pidcock,	Yoder.
Clements,	Hudd,	Robertson,
Cockran,	Hunter,	Scott,

The committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair Mr. ROGERS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having under consideration the deficiency appropriation bill, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule the roll was called, and he was directed to report the names of the absentees to the House to be spread upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and thirty-three members have answered to their names, which is more than a quorum, and under the rules of the House the committee will resume its session.

Mr. BLAND. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. BURROWS. That is not in order.

The SPEAKER. In the Forty-seventh Congress it was held that a motion to adjourn was in order.

The question was put, and the Chair said the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 80.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The committee, under the rule, resumed its session, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say that he has made some investigation of the question under consideration, and finds that the universal practice of the House has hitherto allowed the largest opportunity for debate in the Committee of the Whole; but in order that the committee may determine for itself whether the gentleman from Ohio shall be allowed to proceed with his remarks, the Chair withdraws his decision, having full faith, however, in its correctness. The Chair will submit the question to the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submits the question to the committee, whether or not the gentleman from Ohio shall proceed in the line of remarks hitherto submitted?

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has it not been submitted to the committee already?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair withdraws his decision, as he has the right to, and submits the question to the decision of the committee.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 131, noes 20.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know if it is not in order for the Chair to resubmit the question to the committee whether or not the gentleman from Ohio may be allowed to proceed in the line of the remarks his speech indicated?

Mr. RANDALL. I supposed that was the question we had just voted on.

Mr. BLAND. That question has been submitted and no quorum voted. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLOUNT. If that was the question I hope the Chair will again submit it, as I think there was a misunderstanding, and it will probably save time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit it, if there be no objection.

The question is, whether the gentleman from Ohio shall be permitted to proceed in the line of the remarks he was pursuing?

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. There was a question pending and no quorum voted.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair has proposed to take the question anew unless there was objection, and none was made.

Mr. BLAND. I did not hear the Chair make the request.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists that he did not hear the Chair, of course his statement will be taken.

Mr. BLAND. I stated that I could not hear what the Chair said, but as soon as I understood the question the Chair proposed to submit I insisted upon my right.

Mr. BLOUNT. The point I wish to submit to the Chair is this, that it is competent for the Chair to withdraw the question and resubmit it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair has so indicated.

Mr. RANDALL. Moreover, we did not quite understand the question submitted, and we certainly have a right to do so before being required to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the question. Shall the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to continue his remarks in the line he has hitherto pursued?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 174, noes 5.

Mr. RANDALL. I now rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAND. And I demand the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. This is the regular order. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask that the committee now rise for the purpose of extending the debate thirty minutes by unanimous consent. The House restricted the general debate to thirty minutes and gave it entirely to that side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that action was taken in committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, there has always been doubt as to whether it could be done in that way.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. The regular order is to move that the committee rise for the purpose of extending the debate.

Mr. KENNEDY. I do not yield for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield for that motion and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I say now that I myself will be very glad to ask that the time be extended to the gentleman from Georgia to reply for such length of time as he may choose.

Now, I was speaking of the contested-election case——

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order, that that is not in order on this bill.

Mr. KERR. I desire to make this statement. The gentleman from Missouri—— [Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I was speaking of the election case.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will state it.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman is not proceeding in the line authorized by the rules of the committee or of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, and for the reason that the House has just passed upon that question.

Mr. BLAND. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that question has just been decided, no appeal was taken, and it is too late now. The appeal should have been taken at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois, and the gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. BLAND. I understand the gentleman from Ohio is proceeding with his speech. Now, I raise the question of order on what he is saying, and pending that, until it is settled, he can not proceed.

Mr. KENNEDY. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri raises the point of order, and will state it.

Mr. BLAND. That the gentleman from Ohio was not proceeding in the line authorized by the vote of the House or the rules of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair overruled that point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Exactly; and I appealed from the decision of the Chair, and insist upon my right.

Mr. TAULBEE. I make the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that it sustained the counter point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BLAND. What has been decided?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] made the counter point of order that the House has just passed upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri, and had given the gentleman from Ohio consent to proceed in the line he was pursuing.

Mr. BLAND. But I am presenting another point of order. We are proceeding to debate this bill in Committee of the Whole under the rules of the House.

Mr. REED. We are trying to.

Mr. BLAND. We are proceeding to debate it under the rules of the Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman is not debating the subject-matter contained in the bill.

Mr. BRUMM. That point has been already ruled upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri has just been passed upon by the committee, and a decision was made in response to the counter point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BLAND. Very well; I will wait and see how this thing proceeds.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to refer to that committee in its treatment of the case known as the Carlisle case in this House. JOHN G. CARLISLE occupied a seat upon this floor as reported from the committee——

Mr. BLAND. I raise the point of order.

Mr. KENNEDY. But that committee——

Mr. BLAND. I raise the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding with the consideration of the bill before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will request the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw the point temporarily, as the Chair did not hear the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. KENNEDY. I was referring to the contested-election case of JOHN G. CARLISLE, of Kentucky, that was referred to that committee. Mr. Thoebe, of Kentucky, was the contestant.

Mr. BLAND. Now I raise the point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order in view of the fact that the House has twice decided that it is in order.

Mr. BLAND. The House has not passed upon that language. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KERR rose. [Laughter and cries of "Sit down!" on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. No business will be transacted until there is order.

Mr. BLAND. I state that I appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. REED. I make the point of order that he has no right to appeal, because it has already been decided by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit this appeal to the House.

Mr. REED. It must be perfectly evident to the Chair that this is frivolous and not made in good faith.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Maine is frivolous and is trying to prevent a decision upon the appeal. I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was put; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. Division.

The committee divided.

The CHAIRMAN (pending the announcement). The committee will rise informally to receive a message from the Senate.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that body had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 1874) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes.

It also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 12383) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which concurrence was requested.

It also announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 10652) to encourage the enlistment of boys as apprentices in the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 10481) for the relief of Rev. William Gregston;

A bill (H. R. 10082) to amend an act entitled "An act for for the relief of the widow and orphan children of Col. William R. McKee, late of Lexington, Ky.;"

A bill (H. R. 9464) for the relief of Hudson G. Lamkin;

A bill (H. R. 8272) to provide for the payment of F. H. Bates as military instructor at Washington High School, District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 8053) to extend the time for the redemption of school farms in Beaufort County, South Carolina;

A bill (H. R. 7924) for the relief of A. J. McCreary, administrator of the estate of J. M. Hiatt, deceased, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7864) to reappropriate to pay for alley in square numbered 493;

A bill (H. R. 7801) for the relief of William F. C. Nindemann, formerly a seaman in the Navy;

A bill (H. R. 6591) for the relief of T. Dillinger & Sons;

A bill (H. R. 6394) for the relief of Hayem & Taylor;

A bill (H. R. 5888) for the relief of W. H. Boyd;

A bill (H. R. 5690) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell block of land 108 in the city of Houston, Tex.;

A bill (H. R. 5336) for the relief of George B. Hansell;

A bill (H. R. 4581) for the relief of Thomas Mathews and others;

A bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of the heirs of John H. Newman, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 2688) for the relief of Alfred Breuer; and

A bill (H. R. 341) for the relief of John Farley.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. On the appeal of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], the ayes are 181, the noes none; so the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. BLAND. I demand tellers on this vote.

Tellers were refused, only 2 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. KENNEDY. I was speaking of the Carlisle case. [Laughter.] Now, I desire, Mr. Chairman, to refer to an occurrence which took place on this floor in 1879. On the 20th day of March, 1879, a memorial of 23 citizens of Cincinnati impeached the seats of BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH and General Thomas L. Young. No contest had been made, and yet these gentlemen, instead of remaining silent, arose in their places in this Chamber and demanded an investigation at the hands of this House.

Mr. BLAND. Now I make the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has twice held that the point of order is not well taken, as the committee has by its own action permitted the gentleman from Ohio to proceed.

Mr. BLAND. I appeal from the decision.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Missouri has nothing to appeal from.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now, when forty-five hundred Kentuckians stood at the door of this House on a contested-election case what did the Speaker of this House, who was the contestee, do? He remained as silent as the Sphinx, and the committee of this House, headed by CHARLES F. CRISP, of Georgia, reported back and denied the contestant the right to a hearing on this floor.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. KENNEDY. Never but once before in the history of this Government was such a proceeding witnessed——

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order, and that is, that the House has not passed upon any portion of what the gentleman is now saying.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] that it is not in order to make such a reference to a member by name. The gentleman is familiar with the usual practice in that respect and will proceed in order.

Mr. KENNEDY. Then I will not refer to the gentleman by name. I withdraw that. I did not intend it in any offensive sense.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws it.

Mr. BLAND. Withdraws what?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order of the gentleman from Missouri, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] withdrew the reference to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I say that only once before in the history of our Government has there been such a case as that. I will not mention any names, but I will say that the press of my State, Ohio, secular and religious, Independent, Democratic, and Republican, demanded that that case should be heard. Not only Republicans, but Democrats, State officials and others, demanded that that case should be heard——

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. KENNEDY (continuing). But that hearing was denied.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the House has twice, by an overwhelming vote, decided to allow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] to proceed in the line of the remarks heretofore made by him. The Chair thinks, therefore, that there is nothing whatever for the Chair to pass upon.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, may I say a word? As one of those whom the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] has assailed, I appeal to my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to allow the gentleman from Ohio to proceed and finish his remarks.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, we do not want him to allow it. [Laughter.] I insist that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] shall be permitted to proceed under the rules of the House.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], who has been assailed, appeals to me——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. REED. "Regular order," Mr. Chairman. We do not want to hear any more of this than is necessary. Let us go on with the business.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. KENNEDY. I trust the Chair will keep the time. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to do so.

Mr. KENNEDY. I refer again, Mr. Chairman, to the case which I have just mentioned. That gentleman will go into private life condemned by his political associates and despised by his political enemies, without society save that only which his ill-gotten wealth can purchase, too low for pity and beneath contempt. [Hisses on the Democratic side.] I refer now to a case in this House, and I ask, is it any wonder that the contestee in that case, which was reported upon this floor on the 20th of January last, should, after that report was made, be covered with humiliation and shame? Was it any wonder that it required the exhilarating and stimulating influences of Washington and the balmier breezes of Old Point Comfort to restore him to his mental and moral equilibrium?

Mr. Chairman, I leave the question to him, to the country, and to the people of Kentucky. [Hisses on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] asks whether I have ever been in Georgia. I desire to say to him that in 1863 and 1864, if he had not been moving so swiftly to the South, he might have made my acquaintance in Georgia. [Hisses and jeers on the Democratic side.] I presume, sir, that my standing in Georgia will not be as high as that of the gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. MCMILLIN. Or anywhere else.

Mr. KENNEDY (continuing). Because he wore the Confederate gray and I wore the Union blue in that great contest. I have no desire to compare records with the gentleman from Georgia, but I believe that in the estimation of every loyal man in this land my record is as high above his in that great contest as the angels of light are above the angels of darkness. [Derisive laughter and jeers on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's distinction at home comes from this. His distinction abroad comes from the fact that in this House he is elected by a smaller number of votes than any other man was ever elected by to a seat on this floor, and I trust, sir, that the national distinction which he has thus achieved will never again be achieved by any man within the limits of this great Government of ours. The gentleman tells us that the elections are fair and honest in Georgia. I desire to call his attention to the fact that in 1884 42,286 Republicans voted, while in 1886 no Republicans voted in his district. I say that he is impeached by the record of the election in 1886 which comes to us from the State of Georgia.

The gentleman from Georgia does not attempt to answer the statements of facts and figures in my speech of July 12 last, and I challenge him or any gentleman upon that side of the Chamber to controvert or deny them. I have in my hand a list of twenty-five districts which voted in 1886 to return members of this House. That list includes the first and second districts in Alabama, the first and fifth in Arkansas, the ten districts of Georgia, the fourth of Louisiana, the fourth, fifth, and sixth of Mississippi, the first, second, fourth, fifth, and sixth, of South Carolina. In those twenty-five districts, casting ninety-three thousand and odd ballots, the entire Republican vote was 720, an average of twenty-nine votes to a district. And yet gentlemen over there tell us that their elections are free and honest and fair. And in this list I find the district of the gentleman from South Carolina, and the district of the gentleman from Georgia. What shall we say to gentlemen who, with the assurance of the thimble-rigger, continue to say that these elections are free and fair?

The other day, at the New York banquet, Governor Lee, of Virginia, made this expression:

> It remained with the North to decide whether the national improvement and prosperity can best be promoted by a union of American white-governed States or white American through African sections in the great whole. The whole thing depended upon the South being recognized as a white-governed portion and that there shall exist no African sovereignty. "We do not care to take the tomahawk from the red man and give it to the negro. We have provided for the negro, built homes and schools for him, and given him all his condition requires, but when it becomes a question whether those States are to be governed by blacks or whites, I say," the governor exclaimed, "we want a white government."

I refer this matter to the gentleman from Georgia; and I say to him that the governor of Louisiana, the governor of Virginia, and the governor of South Carolina have made the record on this question; and all of them refute his statement.

Governor Lee wants "a white man's government;" I want an honest man's government. I say to-day that I would rather have an honest black man's government in this country than a dishonest white man's government. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am not here to speak for the colored man; at another time I shall be glad to do so. But I say now that while the begloved and bejeweled fingers of a Southern aristocracy were trying to tear down this Government, were attempting to pull down its flag and clutching like bloodhounds at the throat of the nation, not a single instance can be cited where the colored people of this country, when opportunity offered, were not loyal to the Constitution and devoted to the flag. Gentlemen on the other side may sneer at it as they will, but history will forever record the fact that a black man ran the boats past the batteries at Moultrie; that black hands uplifted and black arms sustained the flag of the Union on the top of Fort Pillow. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KENNEDY. Now I desire to call another witness.

Hon. W. H. Skaggs, a Democrat, of Talladega, Ala., prints in the Montgomery Daily Advertiser the following:

> We can not go on forever stealing the negro's ballot. There must be a wiser and more honorable solution of the question. We have gone too far in our election frauds, and soon we shall learn that success founded on fraud can not be permanent. In the Black belt, where the negroes are in the greater majority, the tactics by which the negro has been deprived of his vote have also served the purpose of depriving the white men of fair representation. The negro vote has been used to count the South Alabama Democrat in and the North Alabama Democrat out.

I commend this to the gentleman from Georgia, and I commend to gentlemen of the other side the fact that in Arkansas only last week four members of the State Legislature resigned their places because they were there by fraud and intimidation and violence; and I call attention to the fact that the same election which returned them to the Legislature returned a member to this House who has not yet tendered his resignation so far as I know.

The gentleman from South Carolina the other day referred to Massachusetts. I am not here to defend Massachusetts. Her honored Representatives on this floor and her sons everywhere are abundantly competent for her defense. But I want to say here for old Massachusetts that while she stood at the cradle of liberty and rocked it until it grew into a vigorous manhood, from that hour until the present it can not be said, and history does not record the fact, that a single one of her sons, true as they are to old Massachusetts, has ever lifted his hand against the Constitution or attempted to tear down the flag. They were found on every battle-field from Lexington to Yorktown, and in that later struggle they were found on every field where blood was shed, from Baltimore to Bull Run and from Bull Run to Appomattox. The history of the past will be written, and the history of old Massachusetts will be a part of this nation's great record.

And I want to say to gentlemen on the other side that the Meccas of the future will not be in the Southern clime or under a Southern sun, but will be the sacred resting places of the illustrious and patriotic dead, where Lincoln sleeps, where the silent warrior of the century is resting, and that place on the hillside at Arlington where gallant Phil Sheridan is sleeping. I say to you that in the future there will be lifted above old Bunker Hill and Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge and Round Top the record of a nation's glory, and with it the history of old Massachusetts.

The other day over in the city of Baltimore General Rosser made a speech; and he said:

> That it was his purpose to show that the reason the South was able to maintain an unequal combat against the North for years and why the South was victorious in every battle in Virginia from first to last, and finally yielded only to starvation, was the fact, and is still the fact, that a Southern gentleman can whip a puritanical Yankee every time.

Mr. Chairman, at the point of the bayonet and the end of the saber on three hundred battle-fields of this Union we punched that idea out of them. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I want to tell who this General Rosser is, who was never whipped, according to his own statement. He is the man whom Torbert with his Union cavalry drove 26 miles up the Shenandoah, and in that case, with rebels ahead and Union soldiers behind, Thomas L. Rosser, like a good general, led his Confederate cavalry up the valley!

I want to call attention to another thing that General Rosser said; and I wish to say that three United States Senators and a member of this House from Mississippi were present on that occasion. This is what he said:

> I feel that I am, and I believe that every brave Confederate soldier living to-day is more loyal to the constitutional Government of the new United States than are the rank and file of the Grand Army of the Republic (so called), and I believe that we are more loyal to the flag of the new Union than they.
> This banner [waving a Confederate battle-flag], under which we so gloriously fought, is now the badge of our loyalty to ourselves. This is the cross which we bore with a courage, patience, and fortitude which entitles every brave, true, and tried Confederate soldier to wear a patriot's immortal crown.

Mr. Chairman, England, in her great contest with the rebels in India, blew them from her guns. Germany, after her war with France was over, compelled the French nation, as an indemnity, to pay the entire expenses of the contest. But after six thousand millions had been expended, after blood and treasure beyond measure had been poured out, this Government extended amnesty without price and without any conditions to the Southern people.

I want to say I believe in that, and if Lee, and Davis, and Beauregard, and Rosser, men educated at the public expense, had been hung to the gibbet, as they ought to have been after that contest was over, they would not now be teaching disloyalty and treason and rebellion to the young men of the South.

General Johnson said up to a short time ago in Baltimore that this Government was controlled by the Confederates.

Several MEMBERS. You mean General Bradley Johnson.

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes; General Bradley Johnson.

But thank God, Mr. Chairman, the hour is passing away when they can control this Government. They will be compelled to take back seats. There is a brighter day coming for the South, freed from the hands of Confederate despotism, rebellion, and disloyalty.

I not only congratulate the country, but I congratulate that side of the Chamber, that they will be freed from the dictation to which they have been subjected for the last two years, a dictation humiliating, not only to this House, but to the entire country. I trust, sir, it will catch the inspiration of freedom.

I desire to point further to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that it comes with bad grace from gentlemen half shot away on rebel battle-fields to come here and attempt to teach us loyalty, and to tell us what our duties are under the Constitution and under the old flag.

The South has been throwing away her opportunities. Let them quit sneering at New England. Let them cease snarling at her heels. Let them be inspired with some of New England's energy and enterprise. With a warmer sun, beneath whose rays the earth gives forth her richest fruits, with a softer clime that New England can not know, with a wealth of mines waiting for the pick and drill, with streams and rivers flowing unvexed to the sea, waiting for the spindle and loom, the South has been casting away her opportunities as a reckless spendthrift would throw priceless jewels into the sea. [Applause.]

Let her catch some of New England's pluck and courage. Let her quit whining at New England's wealth and power. Let her quit regretting the lost cause. Let her cease crying forever over her pride, poverty, and despair. Let her imitate Massachusetts enterprise and grit and there will be a Lowell on every river, a Lawrence on every stream. [Applause.] Let her open the doorway and bid wealth and labor come and share with her her richest blessings. Let her accord to all an equal chance in this race of life. Let her cease flaunting her disloyalty in the faces of the people, and learn once for all that the rebellion is ended and that but one flag is recognized as the emblem of our unity and power.

Let her come to know that slavery is dead and forever buried by the irrevocable enactments of the Constitution. Let her do equal and exact justice to all her people, black and white, rich and poor. Let her assure all within her borders that the laws shall be supreme, that all shall be protected in their rights, that person and property shall be secure, that the privilege of the citizen shall be accorded him in its fullest sense.

Then, Mr. Chairman, this new South will have solved the problem of her future. Then this new South, new not only in name, but in spirit, in fortune, in promise, in progress, in wealth and power, will start on the highway to the greatest and grandest march of all the centuries. And thus—

Full roused, each giant limb awake,
Each sinew strung, the great heart pulsing fast,
She shall start up and stand on her own earth.
Then shall her long triumphant march begin;
Thence shall her being date—thus wholly roused,
What she achieves shall be set down to her.

[Great applause.]

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the course this debate has assumed I ask unanimous consent that thirty minutes be allowed on this side for further general debate.

Mr. OWEN. I object. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the Republican side, and derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SOWDEN. Withdraw that objection.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to make a statement. [Cries of "Regular order!" on the Democratic side.] Just one moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object to any statement.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then withdraw your objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order has been demanded, and the gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. OWEN. I desire to make a statement in withdrawing the point of order. [Loud cries of "Regular order!" and "Withdraw it!"]

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw the objection without the statement.

Mr. RANDALL. And I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I simply want to say this—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana as objecting, and the gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I am not going to object, but I want to say that while the gentleman objected to me the other day, I will not object to him. [Cries of "That is right!"]

Mr. PEEL. I yield the time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Chair to be kind enough to notify me when I have consumed twenty minutes of the time, as my colleague [Mr. TURNER] desires to occupy ten minutes.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I rise to a question of order; I hope the Chair will direct members to take their seats so that we may hear the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The point of order is well taken.

The gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, on the 13th day of February present I called the attention of the House to several deliberate and willful inaccuracies in a statement previously made by the gentleman from Ohio. Some day or two ago I received a message from that gentleman by a page presenting his compliments and saying that at the first opportunity he would reply to the statements made by me on that occasion. You have just heard his reply. Before I shall characterize that reply as I think it deserves, I will proceed again to expose to this House and to the country the deliberate and willful inaccuracy of the gentleman from Ohio.

The charge made against the gentleman was that he had, through ignorance or design, misrepresented the Speaker of this House, the people of Georgia, and myself. The gentleman can not evade this charge by a parade of his loyalty before the House and the country; no assault has been made upon that; no intimation has been made that he was not a good, loyal, and true soldier, and therefore it is entirely out of place for the gentleman from Ohio to personally stress his service so much when charged by me with having made inaccurate statements. It is no reply to say that during the war he was a soldier in the armies of the Union and that I was a soldier in the armies of the Confederacy, and yet that is about all the gentleman has said in denial or attempted denial of the statement I made. As I understand him, he now reiterates the statement which I have alleged to be—inaccurate.

I will read that statement. This is what the gentleman from Ohio said:

One thousand seven hundred and four votes elect Mr. CRISP, Democrat, to this floor from Georgia, while 43,890 votes elect Mr. BYNUM, Democrat, from Indiana; in other words, it would seem as if one Democrat in Georgia is as powerful at the ballot-box as twenty-five Democrats in Indiana.

And, as if to emphasize the infamy of this glaring and almost unspeakable outrage upon the ballot-boxes of the land, Mr. CRISP, of Georgia, who comes here after having suppressed almost the entire voting population of his own district, is, by the Democratic Speaker of the House, placed at the head of the Committee on Elections, to sit upon the election and qualification of every other member of this House. Could the irony of infamy and outrage go further than this.

That, Mr. Chairman, is from a speech made by the gentleman from Ohio last summer when the House was considering the tariff bill. My attention was called to it when I came back from home—I think perhaps by my colleague, Captain TURNER—and I then thought of rising in some way to reply to it; but it occurred to me that before the Congress adjourned an opportunity would present itself to do so, and I deferred reply until that moment came.

The other day when the Smalls and Elliott contest was up I called the attention of the House to the statement complained of, and the gentleman from Ohio reiterated that statement then, and, as I understand him, reiterates it now.

The accuracy or inaccuracy of much of the statement of the gentleman from Ohio is a question of fact, which can be determined by the records of this House. On the 12th day of December, 1887, shortly after the House first met, the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. CARLISLE (the Speaker). Mr. Speaker, it is well known that there is a contest pending which makes it improper for me, as presiding officer of the House, to appoint, in the usual manner, the Committee on Elections. I have left the chair, therefore, for the purpose of asking the House to excuse me from the performance of that duty, and to take such proceedings in reference to the matter as its judgment may dictate.

I have no suggestion whatever to make except to say that the formation of the other committees of the House will be facilitated by having this subject disposed of at the earliest date that will suit the convenience of the members.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I submit for immediate consideration by the House the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That at 1 o'clock p. m. to-morrow the House will proceed to elect, by resolution or otherwise, fifteen members, who shall constitute the Committee on Elections for the present Congress."

Other proceedings took place at that time which I will not further read. My colleague from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] suggested, I think, a substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana that there be a special committee raised by election to take charge of the case of Mr. CARLISLE, and that the Speaker should appoint the standing committee as usual, but that such standing committee should have no jurisdiction over the case in which the esat of the Speaker was contested.

The result of the matter was, however, that Judge HOLMAN'S resolution was agreed to. The Republican caucus selected such gentlemen as they chose to put upon the Committee on Elections, the Democratic caucus selected such gentlemen as they chose to put upon the Committee on Elections; and the next day, in the House of Representatives, the following proceedings took place:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will please take the chair.

Mr. MILLS having taken the chair,

Mr. CANNON said: I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That the following-named members shall constitute the Committee on Elections for the present Congress, namely: Charles F. Crisp, of Georgia, chairman; Charles T. O'Ferrall, of Virginia; Joseph H. Outhwaite, of Ohio; F. G. Barry, of Mississippi; Levi Maish, of Pennsylvania; John T. Heard, of Missouri; Thomas D. Johnston, of North Carolina; John H. O'Neall, of Indiana; L. W. Moore, of Texas; Jonathan H. Rowell, of Illinois; L. C. Houk, of Tennessee; William C. Cooper, of Ohio; Joseph Lyman, of Iowa; James T. Johnston, of Indiana, and Henry C. Lodge, of Massachusetts."

Mr. CANNON. Before moving the adoption of this resolution, I will state that the first nine of the members named have been agreed upon by the majority or Democratic side of the House, and the last six were selected by the minority or Republican side. Thus the proportion, politically, is nine to six, which has been the proportion in the committee as organized heretofore. I now ask a vote on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SOWDEN. Unanimously.

Mr. CRISP. The Journal of the House sustains that statement, but the gentleman from Ohio to-day in his remarks said, or intimated, that he might have relied for the statement he made to this House upon the Journal. That gentleman knew, or ought to have known, as every other member upon this floor knows, that the proceedings I have just read took place; that these proceedings are in the Journal as they did take place, and the only thing in the Journal that is inconsistent with that statement is this: The Journal says, "The Speaker announced the following standing committees." Then follows first the Committee on Elections. But long prior to that, in the Journal, you will find the proceedings I have just read in the RECORD. So that the including the Committee on Elections with those announced by the Speaker was simply an error of the Journal Clerk. He ought not to have placed the Committee on Elections with the other committees announced by the Speaker, because that committee had already been elected. The so placing it was a mere error, as is well known to all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the charge I made against the gentleman from Ohio the other day was the charge of gross ignorance; and I leave it to you if he honestly believed true the statement he made whether I have not submitted proof enough to convict him before any jury on God's earth.

A MEMBER. Beyond a reasonable doubt. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CRISP. Now, the gentleman from Ohio, in his remarks to-day, seems to be willing to fly from the position of ignorance and assume that of malicious defamation; I say that in the full meaning of the words. "Malicious defamation;" defamation of the Speaker of this House; a gentleman who has had no controversy with him, and a gentleman who stands before this House and the country as an honorable, high-toned man. The gentleman from Ohio has been able to get his own consent to make a statement in direct contradiction of the records of the House, with no other purpose that I can see save to maliciously defame a man who occupies a high and distinguished position in the Democratic party.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no time to go over the long reply of the gentleman from Ohio. I have no desire to go through it. The gentleman has sought to change the character of the controversy between him and me. I made no charge, except that of his being ignorant. I said if he was thus ignorant of what took place before his eyes, it was but reasonable to believe that he was ignorant of what took place in Georgia, where, perhaps, he had never been. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has referred to the case of Thoebe vs. Carlisle. In justice to the Committee on Elections, in justice to Mr. CARLISLE, and in justice to my associates on the floor, I want to say a word about that.

The Committee on Elections made a docket of the order in which they would try the cases pending before them. This docket or order was made with the approval of every Republican member of the Committee on Elections. By the terms of that order the first case was that of Thoebe against Carlisle; Thoebe, the contestant, was a Republican. The next was Lowry against White, in which the contestant was a Democrat. The next was McDuffie against Davidson, of Alabama, where the Republican was the contestant. The next was Worthington against Post, where the Democrat was the contestant; and so on through the list, alternating between Democrats and Republicans who were contestants. Under that order of business the case of the Speaker of the House was tried.

Thoebe filed a notice of contest and took testimony in the State of Kentucky. The case came up here and the Republican members of the Committee on Elections themselves determined that on that case as then made there was absolutely nothing that could be said in favor of Thoebe's election.

After that time his counsel applied for permission to submit certain affidavits from the State of Kentucky, and the Committee on Elections unanimously, I think—certainly by a majority vote—gave him time to file those affidavits before the committee. They were brought in and placed on file—a great mass of papers. The case was argued by contestant's counsel, and not a single suggestion was made that more time was wanted.

Mr. BRUMM (interposing). I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CRISP. When the case came up in the House, then for the first time the contestant, when he made his speech here, said that he had a paper signed by forty-five hundred men asking that his case be reopened. That paper was never before the Committee on Elections. I hold in my hand a fac simile of that paper, and instead of forty-five hundred names appended to it there are about fifteen hundred; but I suppose that is a small inaccuracy from the point of view of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BRUMM. Not at all. I had another paper with about three thousand names.

Mr. CRISP. This paper shows, and any gentleman who will look at it can see, that a large number of the names appear to be in the same handwriting, and it is susceptible of proof I am informed—though of this I am not certain—that a large number of the signers lived in the city of Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, and not in the district in Kentucky where the election was had. So much for that.

Mr. Chairman, as to elections in the State of Georgia, I said the other day about all that I desire to say. They are as fair, as free, and as honest as they are anywhere else in the United States. There is no particular evidence now presented here, or that can be presented here, which controverts that proposition. The gentleman says that he impeaches us upon the record because we receive but few votes. Did it ever occur to the gentleman that where there is no opposition it is not strange that there should be a small vote? I told the House the other day that in Georgia the governor and the members of the Legislature are elected in October, the members of Congress in November, and the county officers in January, so that at the time when the election of members of Congress takes place there is no other officer to be elected. Therefore when there is no opposition, as there was none in the case referred to by the gentleman from Ohio, it is not singular that the vote should be small.

My attention has been called to the vote of the distinguished gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] at the same election. According to the statement in the Congressional Directory, generally presumed to be furnished by the member himself—though about that I know nothing—it appears that that gentleman was elected to the Fiftieth Congress as a Republican, and that he received "3,517 votes against 2,372 votes for Lapham, Democrat, and 746 votes for Howard, Prohibitionist." There is a case where there was a contest before the people, yet the aggregate vote polled is only about 6,000. Now, gentlemen, even in the South where you say the voters are intimidated and are not allowed to express their will at elections, in the last election when I had opposition, which was brought out only three days before the election, the vote polled in my district was more than 12,000, as against 6,000 in this district in Rhode Island. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why is it that it does not occur to some of you gentlemen to intimate that there is suppression of the vote in Rhode Island? I do not intimate it. I do not make any such charge. You ought not to make any such charge; and when you undertake to trump up such charges as you do against the South I think you do it to create a public sentiment in the North that will justify you in some outrageous legislation which you hope to secure in the future. That is my opinion of the object for which such statements are made.

Now, I shall not follow the gentleman from Ohio into any discussion of his war record, or into any criticism of mine. I do not feel at all hurt at any statement he may make about mine. There is nothing in mine of which I am ashamed. There is nothing in mine for which I have any regret to express. So far as his war record is concerned I have nothing to say about it, nothing. The gentleman from Ohio poses here as a strictly honest man. Honesty is what he demands in elections, non-partisanship, truth, justice, fairness! Mr. Chairman, when you hear a man make claims of that sort and arraign other people for their failure to exercise those high qualities, you are naturally disposed to inquire what there is in the character of such person, what there is in his past life, that will induce the public to accept his own estimate of himself and his statements about others.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that he has occupied twenty minutes of his time. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CRISP. I do not wish to use the time which belongs to my colleague from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], but I want to add just one remark.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia be allowed to proceed for five minutes more, and that then the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] have five minutes additional.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRISP. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy and I shall not trespass further upon the time of the committee. I say that when a gentleman assumes to possess an extraordinarily high degree of honesty you are naturally prompted to inquire what there is in his past record, or character, or life, that justifies the claim. Now, I will tell you what I have heard about the gentleman from Ohio in this regard. I am informed that the State senate of Ohio consists of thirty-six members. Is that right?

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

Mr. CRISP. I have but five minutes——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I only wish to say that the numbers constituting the Ohio senate vary; sometimes there are thirty-eight members, sometimes thirty-five——

Mr. CRISP. At the time to which I refer there were, I believe, thirty-six members. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] was the lieutenant-governor of the State of Ohio and the presiding officer of that senate. In May, 1886, there was a contest before that senate as to the seats of four senators. The Democratic members of the senate withdrew in a body from the senate, and when they had so withdrawn they left seventeen senators only present in the senate.

The gentleman from Ohio, being then the presiding officer of the senate, entertained a motion made by one of the seventeen members present to adopt the report of the committee on elections, which was in favor of unseating the four Democrats who were in and seating four Republicans who were out. The gentleman from Ohio held that it was competent for that minority, those seventeen men, to turn out four Democrats who held seats in that senate and to seat four Republicans; and further, when the Democratic senators afterwards offered a protest against the injustice and the iniquity of such a ruling as that he refused to allow them to put the protest on the journals of the senate.

Now, this is a circumstance by which gentlemen will be enabled to determine as to what value shall be placed upon the opinion of the gentleman from Ohio on a question of politics or honesty.

Mr. KENNEDY. I presume the gentleman would not intentionally make a mistatement.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes, sir.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wish to say that there were thirty-seven members of that senate, and that the Democrats who retired to Kentucky and Tennessee never returned to put themselves on record. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CRISP. I will ask the gentleman while he is up, whether at the time when he put the vote on that resolution there were not present less than half of the members who had been elected to that senate.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will simply say that the case to which the gentleman refers was carried——

Mr. CRISP. Yes or no.

Mr. KENNEDY. That case was carried to the supreme court of the State of Ohio, and the action which the gentleman now criticises was unanimously sustained.

Mr. CRISP. Ah! the gentleman's mathematics, when it comes to a question of politics, honest as he is, enable him to hold that 17 is a majority of 37. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, that is the character of gentleman who puts himself on a high pinnacle of honesty, says that he is the friend of the South, and that he wants to see honesty and fair dealing down there. Mr. Chairman, the South has suffered many ills since the war; she has struggled heroically through poverty and hard times and oppression at home; all sorts of evils have befallen us; but I thank God that we have not yet fallen so low as to seek, desire, or look for the aid, support, or indorsement of such "friends" as the gentleman from Ohio. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] is now recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] alluded to four members of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas who resigned their positions because of fraud in an election. He alluded also to some member on this floor holding a seat by virtue of the same election, and who has not resigned his commission. If the gentleman did not mean myself, knowing that some contest has arisen in regard to my title, he can so state. [A pause.] His silence gives consent. Now, in order that the House may judge how thoroughly the gentleman prepares himself before he makes charges—in order that the House may judge how recklessly charges are made against Southern constituencies—I will say to the gentleman in the first place that the election by which those gentlemen were sent to the Legislature was held on the 1st day of September and the Congressional election was on the 6th day of November. [Applause on the Democratic side.] As a further evidence of his thoroughness and impartiality I will say to him that not one of them lives in the district which I have the honor to represent. [Renewed applause.]

Sir, it would be neither fit nor proper for me to discuss the question of my own election or to take up an inquiry that must be judicially determined by the proper tribunal established by law. But I can say to the gentleman that when he looks for questions of that character he will find that in the annals of my district there has never yet been even a rumor of a fraud in a legislative election. [Great applause.]

I do not wish to go farther than the gentleman went in his statement. I yield the floor back to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, during the debate on the tariff bill during the past summer my attention was called by one of the pages of this House to a speech which was printed in the RECORD by the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] which contained statements in regard to Southern elections so manifestly unfair and unjust as to shock the sensibilities even of the boy who gave me the information. [Laughter and applause.] I sent a notification to the gentleman from Ohio I would endeavor, if the opportunity were afforded me, to reply to some of his strictures on Southern elections; but before I could do so my co league from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], who has just addressed the committee, returned to his seat, and as he was the victim of the chief denunciations in that speech I transferred the fight to him.

I was willing to fly and skulk from this redoubtable gentleman from Ohio [laughter and applause] and hide myself underneath the arm of my able colleague from Georgia. And I supposed I had nothing more to do with an issue which to me is only the subject of scorn and contempt, but to-day the gentleman has again dragged me into the controversy without excuse and without provocation, and it is a duty to myself and my constituents to offer a brief reply.

In the career which has been afforded me in this Congress, which is somewhat longer than usually afforded to those who have seats on this floor, I have never intentionally said one word which was calculated to stir or inflame sectional resentment. If that statement is untrue I ask any gentleman to stand up here and confute it now. And, sir, I believe the very worst enemies of the public peace, of the welfare and of the prosperity of this country, the very worst foe to all its highest interests, is a man who avails himself of every slight pretext to reopen old wounds which have long since healed, and fight over battles which honorable gentlemen have met and adjusted on the field long ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Talk about Grant—peace to his ashes—and of Sheridan and others and KENNEDY in the same breath. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, I would go on any field; I would take my chance on any arena, and submit any public question involving the interests of my section to any fair tribunal consisting of old soldiers who confronted me in the late war [great applause]; but a man who invokes these bitter memories in order to shield himself from the imputation of unfairness and injustice is not a man entitled to my respect. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, that gentleman here to-day, has on this floor a colleague who is a living monument to the fairness of the Democratic House of Representatives, and who if he had stood in his seat while he was delivering the slanders on myself could have placed his hand on the head of that colleague—I refer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROMEIS]; I ask that gentleman, if he will, to stand up here now in the presence of his colleague, Governor KENNEDY, and say whether or not my administration of the affairs of the Committee on Elections was infamous.

Mr. ROMEIS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. ROMEIS. I did not know what my colleague was going to say, but I am a living witness to the fairness of the gentleman from Georgia, and am prepared to say so. [Great applause.]

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I am glad here and now to recognize the fact that in the old State of Ohio there still survives the spirit of fairness and justice which will rebuke detraction even in its own ranks. [Long continued applause.]

If the slander which the gentleman has brought against me and my associates on this floor should chance to circulate in districts where perhaps I am unknown or where my reputation is far more limited than his own, I wish to call attention to a few other circumstances in the statement which that gentleman has made which ought to go along with this day's proceedings.

He has not only arraigned me and arraigned my successor as chairman of the Committee on Elections, but I know and here state that he has recklessly and mercilessly traduced and assailed two of the most honorable gentlemen who sit on the other side of the House, among them one of his own colleagues, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. COOPER]. [Applause.] He talks about the "reckless haste" with which the Committee on Elections of the House determined the election contest between Thoebe and Carlisle, and yet that gentleman from Ohio, his colleague, and that other gentleman on the committee, [Mr. ROWELL], with whom I have had so many honorable contests in cases of this kind [applause], reported to the House that Thoebe had no case, and asked that Mr. Carlisle be awarded his seat. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They signed the majority report and agreed to the conclusions of the committee.

Will the gentleman from Ohio say that these gentlemen who sit on his own side of the House are also infamous? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time allotted to the debate by order of the House is exhausted.

Several MEMBERS. Do you want more time?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I have been asked by gentlemen around me to proceed, and while I do not wish to trespass upon the patience of the House I would be glad to have a few moments longer.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move that the gentleman have five minutes longer.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I will move to strike out—— [Cries of "No objection!" "Go on!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I thank the committee.

I have no desire, sir, on this sudden emergency to do injustice to any one, much less my assailant from the State of Ohio. I have endeavored on two or three occasions heretofore to show that he has a reckless disregard of the facts which ought to cause gentlemen to suspect his statements and not attach to them all the weight to which they would seem to be entitled. I wish now to call attention to another variance with recorded history which the gentleman has perpetrated, if the Congressional Directory can be called a matter of history, and it is about all of the history to which some of us may aspire. [Laughter.]

Now, the gentleman from Ohio the other day, in grouping and scheduling and cataloguing the brigadiers of a certain section who had incurred his wrath and resentment, included in the list, of which I was the humblest, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER] as a rebel brigadier. [Laughter.] I understand, Mr. Chairman, that that gentleman was a lieutenant-colonel on the other side. [Laughter and applause.] Will the gentleman in order to make the case against my section do injustice to the truth, and also to his own friends who live in that region?

But, Mr. Chairman, I have proceeded with this matter farther than was necessary, and farther perhaps than was consistent with propriety. I thank the committee. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill by sections for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill until line 11, page 3, was reached.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12578, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of the heirs of John H. Newman; and

A bill (H. R. 6612) to grant right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the great importance of closing out this appropriation bill—for it is important it should be completed as early as possible and sent to the Senate—I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. MILLS. To continue the consideration of this bill, with the understanding that no other business is to be transacted.

Mr. PEEL. I will make that motion, to continue the consideration of the bill and for no other business whatever.

Mr. McCREARY. And to terminate not later than 10.30.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent, pending that motion, that the Senate amendments to the Army appropriation bill be non-concurred in, and that a committee of conference be appointed on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on said bill.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. TOWNSHEND, Mr. MAISH, and Mr. STEELE as managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas moves that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock for the purpose of further considering the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. MILLS. And no other business whatever to be transacted.

Mr. PEEL. That is the motion.

Mr. BLAND. Why can we not take this up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask the gentleman to limit the session to not later than half past 10 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, 10 o'clock is late enough.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. McMILLIN as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 26, 1889.

I hereby designate Hon. BENTON McMILLIN to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Clerk.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12578) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill at line 10 on page 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of one superintendent of Indian schools, $4,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at line 23, page 6.

The Clerk read as follows:
